TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your last issue you hav a very spirited and pleasant article from the pen of Samuel P. Putnam, giving to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER some account of the Colloquium. As this will be, probably, the first impression which most of them will hav received of that institution, I am anxious that it should, in all senses, be correct. I thank Mr. Putnam very heartily for the kind words he has to say of me. I can only express also my gratification and surprise at the deep insight he manifests into, and the high appreciation he has for, the philosophy of integralism and reconciliation which I am laboring to promulgate. On the theoretical side, he has left nothing to desire in respect to the accuracy of his statement. I am indeed struck with admiration at the felicity of his leading expressions. But when he comes to the concrete facts and applications of the theory, in referring to the purposes of the Colloquium and its personal constituency, he shows that he is not yet quite an expert in handling the implements of this new armory of truth.

Mr. Putnam says the object of the Colloquium is "to persuade the advanced clergy to adopt the scientific interpretation of the world, and to bring the church into accord with it." This statement involves two errors. It is not directly or mainly the object of the Colloquium to persuade anybody, but to convince and to induce by the force of an inexorable logic, or by the discovery and demonstration of new truth, so far as that may appear; and to confer and cultivate a spirit of mutual respect, co-operation, and sympathy among men greatly differing in their views. In the next place, therefore, and as a result of this view of the purposes of this unique assembly, the effort of the Colloquium is no more addressed to the purpose of either persuading or convincing the clerical members of that body than it is to that of persuading and convincing Agnostics, Positivists, Spiritualists, and all others—Mr. Putnam and Mr. Wakeman themselvs, for example. All stand upon a perfectly equal footing, as peers, in the Colloquium. It is, in no sense, a missionary institution from one portion of the intellectual and moral world to another portion, with a view to converting the one to the other. It is simply what its name signifies, a talk together—a conference to come to an understanding as to where we all stand; as to the amount and kind of truth upon which we all agree, or may agree; and as to the beneficent practical work in which we can co-operate, irrespectiv of our differences. The purpose was happily and tersely expressed by one of the members as the "attempt to adjust matters by treaty instead of by conquest."

Mr. Putnam proceeds, and after charging intellectual backwardness and other shortcomings on the clergy, he concludes a paragraph heavily charged with somewhat depreciativ implications with the statement that science must be king; and he begins the next paragraph with the further statement that this, being the view of Mr. Wakeman, "agrees," he thinks, "essentially with the view of Mr. Andrews—that is, it seeks a reconciliation of differences by a profounder insight into the nature of things," etc. Herein Mr. Putnam has radically failed of the right application of the universological reconciliativ idea. He has indeed furnished a striking illustration of that very one-sidedness of judgment which it is intended to rectify. In the Colloquium Document No. 2, which may be said, so far as we hav any, to be the constitutional basis of the Colloquium, written by me, by request of that body, to formulate our principles and purposes, I hav indeed said, virtually, that Science is King; but I hav just as carefully elaborated and stated the contervailing proposition that Religion is Queen; and that they together constitute the supreme peerage of Humanity. It is, therefore, a startling instance of the bent—shall I say the cant? (mark the literal and primitiv meaning of the word)—of these representativ Positivists, when they take up one-half of the compound idea, and state it as if it were the whole; and gravely propose that reconciliation shall come through this canted, or one-way-leaning, application of the new doctrin of reconciliativ equilibration. Such a slip in application shows that these gentlemen are Positivists or partialists still, in their habit of thought, affirming valiantly a side of truth; and that they hav only begun to be integralists, and to attempt, not always successfully, to hold steadily and with anxious care the vibrating balance of opposit and conflicting truths. If anybody, therefore, needs to be converted, it may be that it is they. They will recall the fact that this is no new statement with me; but that I hav, perhaps offensivly, but repeatedly, affirmed, in the Liberal Club, that there is a one-sidedness and a bigotry among professed reformers often quite equal to any that is found in the churches; that Radicalism is something quite different from true Liberalism; and that, in a great sense, reformers needed, most of all men, to be reformed.

The right understanding of this complexity of view, of this bilateral symmetry in the universal constitution of things, is so important, and the subject so new, that you will indulge me in a somewhat extended extract from the document just referred to:

"Religion embodied in an institution is the Church; and science so embodied is the Sciento-state, called for abbreviation the State (denoted thereby the dominion of Law in all the meanings of that term). Sentiment, Affection, Love, Religion, and Church are therefore coincident or repetitory terms, with only shades of difference, and may for high philosophical purposes be substituted for each other; and Intelligence, Wisdom, Science, the State, and Law, Logic, and Logos are also coincident or repetitory terms, with only shades of difference, and may, for like reasons, be substituted for each other. And so it appears that in the culminating aspects of philosophy, precisely as by the common instincts and usages of mankind, the Church and State are contrasted with each other, as in the headship of human affairs.

"Remember, however, to observe that they are, sharply and effectivly, contrasted. They are, indeed, in essence and in fact, exactly the opposits of each other. The conflict between Religion and Science, though more activ, and in the crisis of their contention just now, is no accident of the hour. It is inherent and inexpugnably existent in the nature of things, never to be expelled from either, but destined to be ulteriorly reconciled by the discovery that their very oppositness, like that of the woman and the man, renders them counterparts, and the necessary complements of each other. Religion and Church should be and are personified as she; but Science and State should never be personified as she, but always as he. Remember again to observe that Love, Religion, and Church mean Unity, that they are nothing but the essential idea of unity embodied; and that Wisdom, Law, Logic, Logos, and State (or law-dom) mean Difference or Distribution (analysis and arrangement); and that they are nothing but the essential idea of difference, or differentiation embodied.

"In a word, then, Love is Unity, and Wisdom is Diversity—the two contrasted, while yet so united with each other in every instance of being, that nothing exists or can exist throughout the entire universe, except by their mutual adjustment and harmony. The centring and efficient fountain-head of this concurrence of primordial principles is, in theological language, called God, and personified as such. But apart from personification, and as pure abstract principle, What is God? The writer of the first epistle of John, answering this question out of the fervor of religious sentiment, declares that 'God is Love,' and by the Greek philosophers he was called to hen—The One—love and unity being, as we hav seen, identical in principle. But John the Evangelist, the profound Platonizing mystic of the New Testament (whether the same person as the other John or not), reconsidering the subject from the analytical point of view of the pure intellect, counterstates this first statement, and starts out with absolutely reversing the prior verdict of mere sentiment. 'In the beginning,' he says, i. e., in the logical beginning, the beginning from abstract principles, 'was the Word' (Logos, Law, Science, Order—as a principle, a fundamental principle, a primordial principle), and 'the Word was with God,' which was all that he seemed at first to dare utter; but rising instantly to a higher inspiration, and urged on to the utter audacity of the pure reason, he adds, as if by amendment, 'and the Word was God.'

"Translated into modern phraseology, this is the bald, naked, startling statement, pure and simple, that Science is as sacred, as divine, as radically grounded in God, as Religion—the University-state as holy an institution as the Church. And in the Revelation it is this principle which figures as the Lord, while the church is relegated to her true position as the bride of the Lord. Religion is the spirit of love; science is the spirit of truth. In other words, the Religious Method is the appeal to Love, while the Scientific Method is the appeal to Abstract Truth; and it may be added that the Practical and Artistic Method is the appeal to considerations of Use and Beauty—Integralism being that which combines them all in a tri-unismal or higher form of unity. Jesus foreshadowed, merely and dimly, the future advent of the Scientific Method. 'Howbeit,' he said, 'when he, the Spirit of Truth is come, he (not she)—he will guide you into all truth.'

"It is a startling proposition that Science—pre-eminently Universal Science, the primordial principles of truth, the logos or wisdom-principle—is the very God, the essential and absolute Lord of the Universe; and that the church, the New Jerusalem, the love-principle embodied in humanity, is his destined bride; whose nuptials may, peradventure, be celebrated in this Colloquium. The New Jerusalem itself was measured and exactified by the new influence anticipated from science, in the sense in which 'coming events cast their shadows before.' Its dimensions are cubic; and straight-linism—the straight, the square, and the cube—is the especial type and symbol of science and exactitude. Startling or not, such seems to be the only intelligible rendering to be given to those occult portions of the Christian scriptures; and the ideas so rendered precisely accord with the revelation to the intellect recently made by universological and analogical science. They were, by whatsoever method, previsedby the sharpened intuition of those earlier sages.

"Whenever the church shall discover that her true function is to become the handmaid of science, the bride of the intellectual Lordship of the world; when she shall consent to be completely impregnated by the spirit of the scientific method; when love shall be intelligentiaized by investigativ thought; when the religious sentiment and devotion of mankind shall be engaged in converging the pulsations of the heart upon the execution of the behests of the head; the problem will be solved of the reconciliation of religion and science, and the world will enter upon its new and millennial career in the happy marriage of the state and the church of the future.

"Technically, and first as to the church itself: The total Religionismus (or entire sphere of religious affairs) undergoes its evolution in this order: 1. The direct effort toward unity, with partial and imperfect success, by the voice of authority; the suppression of dissent; the punishment of heresy and the like—the old 'Catholic' order, which ends in confessed inability to prevent sectarian divergency; and toleration, per force, by the mother church. 2. Open and declared sectarian divergency; 'Protestantism,' the numerous so-called 'religions' of Christendom, announcements of 'the right of private judgment,' badly adhered to, feared, and openly recoiled from and set aside when others go further; the constant conflict of the old persecuting spirit on the one hand, and of the growing tendency to Infidelity on the other hand; increased dissolution into minor sects, with loss of the spiritual element but with gain of individual selfhood, and so of a basis of character fitting society for the higher and complex unity. 3. The full, free, intelligent, and devout acceptance, on all sides, of Unity and Diversity as alike justifiable, necessary, and desirable; as, in fine, the two fundamental and indispensable elements, factors, or constituents of all Order and Harmony in the universe; their mutual adjustment, balanced vibration, and complete reconciliation in a Higher and Complex Unity, the type of orchestrated perfection in organization; the New Catholic church; the Church of the Grand Reconciliation; or, in a word, the Church of the Future. The Christianismus is here taken as type and illustration, merely, of what has been happening, with perhaps less emphasis and distinctness, in all the religions bodies of the world; and the new harmonious order will embrace all. Nor is this normal drift of evolution confined to religious affairs. It is the universal type of evolution, religion furnishing one, merely, of the instances."

In conclusion, allow me to express a few of my personal convictions and beliefs:

First, then, I believe that the leading men in the church, just at this epoch, here in America especially, but abroad as well, are progressing more rapidly than the professed reformers. The professed reformers are more especially engaged in strengthening the positions they hav already, and often a good while ago, arrived at; while the real thinkers among churchmen are rapidly advancing; and mere Positivists, Agnostics, and Spiritualists must look to their laurels to see that they are not distanced in the race. The normal method of progression in these matters, as in ordinary locomotion, is by putting one leg before the other; and it is the church leg just now, in my judgment, which is being swung forward. I look to the churches, rather than to the non-ecclesiastical reformers, for large and rapid movements in the direction of constructiv reform. They hav the position from which to operate, and they are suddenly awakening to the necessity for breaking up the old camp and moving forward. The professed reformers are too well satisfied with themselvs—too dogmatic, too overbearing, too unready for mutual concession, too contemptuous, and will perhaps need the lesson of finding themselvs left in the rear, for a time at least, to learn more fully what Liberalism should mean.

Secondly. I believe that even now the reformers hav as much need of elements which the church has, and which they hav in a great measure lost, as the church has of their bold and hardy intellectualism. Among these elements are devotion and sociability. With the rarest exceptions, so-called Liberals sadly lack the element of devotion. They will make few sacrifices for their ideas. The church even has not the devotion, at all, that it had in past ages; but there is far more readiness to giv and work, still, in that quarter than with us. So on the side of sociability and sympathy, which are the really supporting influences in the churches, and which hav taken but slight root, as yet, among radicals and reformers.

The Corrector Corrected.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your selected article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 7th, "From the Valley of the Shadow of Death; An English Secularist's Lament for His Child," by W. Stewart Ross, I read, "Then what know I of eschatological design? I say with Carlyle:

"'What went before and what will follow me I regard as two black curtains which hang down at the two extremities of human life, and which no living man has yet drawn aside. Many hundreds of generations hav already stood before them with their torches, guessing anxiously what lies behind. On the curtains of futurity many see their own shadows, the forms of their passions enlarged and put in motion. They shrink in terror at this image of themselvs. Poets, philosophers, and founders of states hav painted this curtain with their dreams, more smiling or more dark as the sky above them was cheerful or gloomy; and their pictures deceive the eye when viewed from a distance. Many jugglers, too, make profit of this our universal curiosity; by their strange mummeries they hav set the outstretched fancy in amazement. A deep silence reigns behind this curtain; no one once within will answer those he has left without; all you can hear is a hollow echo of your question, as if you shouted into a chasm.'"

The above passage is not to be found in any of the writings of Thomas Carlyle. From reading the life of that great man by James Anthony Froude, I am led to think that he did not believe in the immortality of the soul, but I am not aware that he has clearly said so anywhere on record. Those well acquainted with the works of Carlyle will see at once that it is far from being like his style.

The passage is taken from "The Logic of Death," by George Jacob Holyoake, the founder of English Secularism, London. I hav not seen that pamphlet for the last twenty-eight years, but am too well acquainted with its contents to be mistaken. It was written in the year 1848. At that time the cholera was very bad in England; "Death-bed Confessions" of Infidels filled the streets of every town, hawked and sold by boys and given away to pedestrians by the "godly." Mrs. Emma Martin, Henry Hethering-tón, George Jacob Holyoake, and others, thought it well to write their views on death, so that if suddenly taken by the terrible disease, they could in their last moments point to their work and say to their friends whether they still held when dying the opinions they cherished when in health. It was then Holyoake wrote his "Logic of Death." Render to Carlyle all that is his, to Holyoake all that is Holyoake's, and to God all that is God's—if there be a God, which I do not believe. DAVID GARDINER.

Sunderland, Canada.

The passage above referred to occurs in "The Logic of Death," pages 8–9, and is there put in quotation marks by Mr. Holyoake and credited in a footnote to Thomas Carlyle. Perhaps a note to Mr. Holyoake, who has returned to London, would elicit the information as to whereabout in Carlyle's writings it may be found.—ED. T. S.

Notes.

THERE will be a meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberals at Flint, in connection with the local society, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, April 27th, 28th, and 29th. J. H. Burnham, C. Fannie Allyn, and others are engaged to speak.

AT the Methodist Conference last week one of the ministers spoke approvingly of legislation to forbid the Passion Play, remarking that it was "a profanation of the holiest mystery of the Christian religion." The use of the word mystery admirably sets forth what Christianity really is, and reveals a candor not usually found in a Methodist.

A MAN whose son had enjoyed the benefits of the Cooper Institute remarked at the death of its founder: "Good-bye, Uncle Peter. You were qeeer in some things, but you were good and kind and patient, made many happy, and never grew weary in well-doing; and you will be likely to meet friends wherever you hav gone." A religious paper, which quotes this, very sagely observes that its theology is "a little indefinit."

OUR friend P. B. Reasoner, of Adrian, Mich., writes that the Salvation Army hav invaded that hitherto peaceful town, and nightly make the streets hideous with their noise. They parade with banners flying to the music of the fife and drum, and further their imitation of war by such announcements in the local papers as "To-night at 8 a Real Fight With the Devil." The men are braggartly fanatical, and the women shameless in their insane careers.

THE proceedings of the New York East Methodist Conference in this city were not marked by that harmony which might be expected to characterize a gathering of saints. None of the brethren came to blows, but there were several lively tilts between opposing clergymen in which the lack of honesty of speech was been clearly intimated. What will happen in other conferences is veiled by the future; but it is earnestly hoped their discussions will not equal in animation those of the Second Synod of Ephesus, in which, according to Tindal, "Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, cuffed and kicked Flavianus, patriarch of Constantinople, with that fury that within three days after he died."

IT has often been claimed that lying, when indulged in for the glory of God, is not considered culpable by Christian writers and speakers. The London Saturday Review publishes an article in which the truth of this statement is settled beyond question by quotations from the utterances of numerous dignitaries of the church. Cardinal Newman calls the telling of untruths the "noble art of casuistry." "I can fancy myself," he says, "thinking it allowable in extreme cases for me to lie." The Greek fathers were in favor of the lawfulness of telling direct untruth as distinct from equivocation, out of "zeal for God's honor." English writers follow and go somewhat beyond them. Jeremy Taylor says: "To tell a lie for charity . . . hath been commended by great and wise and good men." Milton asks, "What man in his senses would deny that there are those whom we hav the best ground for considering that we ought to deceive—as . . . enemies, men in error?" Paley observes that "there are falsehoods which are not lies—that is, which are not criminal." Dr. Johnson, "The general rule is that truth should never be violated; there must, however, be exceptions." It is our mournful duty to add that religious people of the present day see the example of these old-timers, and exceed them to an extent far beyond the possibility of excuse.

THE clergy of England, both Catholic and Protestant, are making extraordinary efforts to prevent the passage of the Affirmation bill designed to admit Mr. Bradlaugh to Parliament. The "Church Defense Institution" has sent a form for signature against the bill, stamped and directed for return, to every clergyman of the church of England. In Hackney the rector, the Rev. A. Brook, has actually left similar stamped and directed forms at every house in the parish. In many churches the petition against the bill has been announced from the pulpit, and signatures hav actually been collected within the church precincts. The Catholic priests of England, with the sanction of the pope, hav done about the same. The reason for their course, as given by the priests, is that as all government is from God, an Atheist can hav no part in it, as he does not consider himself God's agent, as the pious pretend they do. In one town the English rector and the Roman Catholic priest hav made common cause against Mr. Bradlaugh, who says of them: "Three hundred years ago these gentlemen would hav burnt each other. Sixty years ago the first would hav denied the second all political right. To-day they link hands in loving sympathy against the wicked heretic. The Roman Catholic priest said I 'ought to be silenced.' When I was in Paris nearly three years ago, I made a public protest against the attempt to use the law to 'silence' Roman Catholic priests. My Radical friends told me that they were but meting to the priests the measure used by the Romish church."

THE Newark Liberal League took a fresh start on Sunday, April 15th, their new hall being completely and elegantly furnished, and Mr. Wakeman delivering what might be called the dedication address, the Easter address of Liberalism, showing the new integration and the coming glory of the human race. His living words built up, as it were, a spiritual and intellectual temple of the universe, so that the beautiful outward adornments of the League Hall seemed like symbols of that invisible reality. Mr. Wakeman portrayed the wonderful meaning of science, what a revealer it is of the world and of man, and astonishing in the power that it givs. Science is not yet understood, and there is even a conspiracy abroad to muzzle and use it simply as the slave of theology. The three things for Liberalism to do are to make free, to educate, and to consecrate. With masterly skill Mr. Wakeman outlined the several unfoldings of humanity, its integrations whereby in the process of ages it has passed from lower to higher forms of life, to a larger synthesis with finer differentiations. The Egyptian, the Greek, the Roman, and the Christian unfoldings and expansion of the race are but the lower steps to the complete and crowning synthesis whereby the idea of man as the supreme being becomes the source of all moral obligations, and thus the brotherhood of the race becomes more vivid, while at the same time the individual perfection is infinitly more emphasized. Mr. Wakeman's address showed the hight and the depth of the great movement in which we are engaged, wherein all that man has ever had of beauty and strength and delight is still retained, while a sublimer outlook is given and mightier emotions are brought into play. Man, like a musical instrument, vibrates to all the surrounding forces of the universe, and in this new integration with new knowledge and new motivs, the greatest possible harmony will be evolved. Samuel P. Putnam followed with a few words congratulating the League on its noble progress. It was now in a position to be a builder and building, world-building in that for which Liberalism exists. Addresses were also made by the president of the League, Mr. Avery, by Mr. Frankel, its former president, by Mr. Marshall, Dr. Lyons, Prof. Wright, and others. The Newark Liberal League has certainly accomplished a remarkable work. In spite of many difficulties it has obtained an assured place. It will no doubt be a growing educational force in the city of Newark, a city larger than ancient Rome.

THE Methodist newspaper organ of this city, speaking of Peter Cooper, says:

"Religiously, he was, in later years, a devout [?] Unitarian. The Methodists lay no claim to him, for his doctrinal views had diverged so widely from theirs that no common ground could be found."

It is well for this admission to go on record, because it is expected that before many years hav passed the church will claim Mr. Cooper as a Christian, which he was not by any means. His views were much like those of Thomas Paine, and were expressed as nearly like them as possible without quoting Paine's words. Paine wrote: "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life." Peter Cooper wrote: "There is one God, the universal father;" and one who had known him for many years adds: "He believed in the immortal life." Said Paine: "I do not mean . . . . to condemn those who believe otherwise; they hav the same right to their belief as I hav to mine." Curator Zachos, of Cooper Institute, said: "His [Peter Cooper's] ecclesiasticism ends with simple respect for all churches." Paine's views as to the divinity of Jesus Christ were as follows: "The Christian system of faith . . . . professes to believe in a man rather than in God. It introduces between man and his maker an opaque body it calls a redeemer." Peter Cooper referred to Christians as "those idolaters who worship Jesus in the place of or in connection with God." On the subject of revelation the ideas of these two men were equally harmonious. Paine held that "the word of God is in the creation we behold," and Mr. Cooper often declared his belief that "the word of God is not bound." Taking these expressions into account, it is much nearer the truth than all Methodists are in the habit of approaching to say that for Christians and Peter Cooper "no common ground could be found." Less honest than its Methodist contemporary is the Mew York Independent, which claims that the theories and practice of Peter Cooper were the very "essence of Christianity." This view is very feebly supported in an editorial in that paper of the 12th. The essence of Christianity is a belief in the divinity of Christ, the trinity of the godhead, the inspiration of the Bible, and the everlasting punishment of the wicked. Peter Cooper took no stock in these superstitions, and neglected all "the means of grace." If he was a Christian, so was Thomas Paine. The fact is that there is no depth of dishonesty to which some religious editors will not descend to deceive the people into a belief that every man whom they dare not deny was an honor to the world lived and died in the Christian faith. Error in this instance has been given a good start by the Independent, but truth has its boots on and will make the race a short one.

The Lecture Field.

W. F. JAMIESON will again lecture in Braidwood, Ill., on "The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic," and "Science Against Modern Spiritualism." Those wishing his services for grove meetings should address him forthwith at Lake City, Minn.

MRS. H. S. LAKE, who is filling an engagement at Salem, Ohio, wishes to say to the Liberal friends in that vicinity that if they will arrange for week evening lectures during the month of April she will be glad to speak. She would also like to hear from Liberal friends in northern New York in reference to lectures in June. Address her at Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio.

To Delinquents.

There are a considerable number of our subscribers whose date upon their wrapper indicates that they hav not sent us any remittance for their TRUTH SEEKER since January, 1882—some fifteen months—and a larger number whose time expired sometime during that year. To these, and especially the former, we would say that we need the money to pay the running expenses of the paper, and we ask them to remit without delay. We dislike exceedingly to be constantly dunning subscribers, but the necessity for it is not of our creation. The individual sums are not large, and will not inconvenience any one to send, but in the aggregate they foot up hundreds of dollars and are just what we depend upon to pay bills. Those in arrears will oblige us greatly by paying attention to this at once.

Gambetta an Atheist.

Theodore Stanton, writing in the Independent, bears this testimony. It settles the question regarding which so many priests and ministers hav seen fit, for the glory of God, to lie outrageously:

"Gambetta's religious or perhaps, it would be more correct to say non-religious principles, hav, also, been much misrepresented, especially since his death. That superb orator, Pere Hyacinthe, in a magnificent discourse on the defunct statesman, delivered in the Theater des Nations, a few Sundays ago, lamented the absence of the religious element in Gambetta's character and pronounced this to be one of the gravest defects of the man. On this same occasion he read a private letter from the deist-historian, Henri Martin, in which the latter expressed similar regret at Gambetta's Atheism. It is true that he placed himself outside of all churches and all forms of religion. His private life, as well as his public utterances, prove it. He came of a family which held very liberal views on all religious subjects. His mother, father, and aunt were none of them bigots, and Cahors itself presented a striking exception to the generality of towns of the South in being in no respects clerical; but, rather, resembling Paris and the northern cities in contempt of the priesthood. Pere Hyacinthe and Henri Martin were, therefore, right when they pronounced Gambetta an Atheist, as Charles Sumner had done before them, after an interview which he had with him, in 1872, as I stated in the Independent of September 9, 1880. It is amusing, therefore, to see Rome claim Gambetta as one of its own, as has been done on several occasions since his demise. For instance, the London Times, in some 'Recollections of M. Gambetta,' translated for the most part, although without acknowledgment, from that not over-reliable paper, the Paris Figaro, represents him as going into the church of Notre Dame des Victoires to burn a taper on the anniversary of his mother's death. A day or two afterward a Catholic priest, formerly vicar of this church, addressed a letter to the Times, in which he says: 'I remember well how M. Gambetta lit those two tapers. He then knelt before the altar of Our Lady, the most Holy Virgin, possibly believing himself to be alone. However, I was there and I was a witness of his devotion. On leaving he took the holy water and made the sign of the cross.'

"The bottom falls out of this episode when it is remembered that Cambetta's mother preceded him by only a few months to the tomb, so that the son never lived to see the 'anniversary' of her death, which, in fact, is still many months off. When I showed this narrativ to one of Gambetta's old friends, a man who knew him and his whole family very well, he could not believe that a journal of the reputation of the London Times could giv place in its columns to such evident falsehoods. All of which proves that the 'leading journal' has, indeed, fallen since the days of the Walters and the Delanes, and that veracity is still an unknown virtue among Jesuits."

Professor Tyndall's Iron House.

The Philosophical Inquirer, a Freethought journal published in Madras, India, prints the following letter to its editor:

HOTEL DE LA GARE, B. S. MER, FRANCE, January 26, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I sent Professor Tyndall your note from the New York TRUTH SEEKER that "Professor Tyndall, has built himself an iron house at Hind Head, on the Hampshire Dorous, within a walk of Aldworth, Mr. Tennyson's residence." This reply may interest you, and print it if you please.

PROF. TYNDALL TO MR. H. G. ATKINSON.

"Were it not for you I should know but little of the gossip of the outer world. You must be an omnivorous reader to make yourself acquainted with so many things. Oddly enough your letter reached me in the very iron house, but regarding which intelligence reached you from Madras. It consists of a single room 24 feet by 18, with a good practical fire-place, oven, and small boiler at one end. Here we boil our potatoes, cook our chops, and liv altogether a Bohemian kind of life, which I trust will eventually make my health strong and keep it so. When a man puts is pen to paper he knows not whither his words may go. The article in Longman I should certainly hav thought too stiff to make its way among the Theosophists.

"The sleep in general is far better than it was, but at times a bad night reminds me that I am not yet clear of the malady of sleeplessness. Christ said 'not that which goeth in the mouth defileth a man.' Had he ever suffered from dyspepsia, he might hav been of a different opinion. With all my care as regards food, and it is great, the rascally ailment sometimes assails me.

"The sun is now shining and the weather is shaking in the brisk morning air. I must be off for a scamper, and therefore for the present wish you good-bye.

"Yours very faithfully, JOHN TYNDALL."

I reckon Tyndall on the whole to be our wisest and best thinker, a thorough literary artist, teacher, and philosopher; and withal brave, honest, and out-spoken without reserve; holds his own in perfect freedom; honored and beloved by all both at home and abroad. H. G. ATKINSON.

Paul and Barnabas in Cyprus.

While the five prophets and teachers at Antioch were fasting and praying,

"The Holy Spirit said to them: Separate to me Saul and Barnabas for the work to which I hav called them. And after they had fasted and prayed, they laid their hand on them and sent them away" (xiii, 2, 3).

This appears to hav been the only ordination Paul ever received, and there was no apostolic hand in the ceremony. But what need had he of any human commission? His apostleship was derived neither from man nor Holy Ghost; for he writes to the Galatians:

"Paul a legate, not of men, nor by man, but by Jesus, the Messiah, and God his father, who raised him from the dead."

But the narrativ of Acts proceeds:

"And they being sent forth by the Holy Spirit went down to Seleucia, and from there they went by sea as far as Cyprus. And when they entered the city of Salamis, they announced the word of the Lord in the synagogs of the Jews. And John [Mark] ministered to them. And when they had traveled over the whole island as far as Paphos, they found a certain man, a sorcerer, a Jew, who was a false prophet, whose name was Bar-Suma" (xiii, 4–6).

Bar-Suma (the son of Suma) is changed in the Greek codex to Bar-iesous—English, Bar-Jesus.

"He adhered to a wise man, who was proconsul, and was called Sergius Paulus. And the proconsul sent for Saul and Barnabas and requested to hear from them the word of God" (7).

History tells of no proconsul Sergius Paulus. There was an L. Emil. Paulus, who was consul 50 B.C.; another of the same name A.D. 1; and a Vett. Paulus A.D. 168. There was also a Sergius Paulus, consul of the second grade, A.D. 21; but there is no evidence that he was proconsul of Cyprus or any other province twenty-four years later, or at any time. The elder Pliny, writing about A.D. 66, refers to a Sergius Paulus as a person interested in intelligent researches; and Canon Farrar thinks it is not improbable that this was the Cyprian proconsul. And recently a marble pedestal has been found in the island with a mutilated Greek inscription, the last words of which are epi Paulou [anth]upatou—"of Paulus [pro]consul" (Cyprus, p. 425). Gen. Cesnola tells us that this was found not at Paphos where Saul met Paulus, but at Soli on the opposit side of the island.

But what if there were a proconsul Sergius Paulus in Cyprus about A.D. 45? Felix and Festus were successiv governors of Judea from A.D. 51 to 62, but no evidence has been found that either of them knew Paul. The evangelist Whitefield preached in America in the middle of the last century; suppose that in the only biography of him that survives, future generations should read that under his preaching Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was converted and Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts, almost pursuaded to be a Mormon! When it is proved that a single one of the noted public men who lived in the middle of the first century had anything to do with apostle Paul, "Antichrist" will take holy orders.

The next verse in Acts differs in the Greek from the Syriac version thus:

Syriac.	Greelc.
"And this sorcerer, Bar-Suma (whose name is interpreted Elymas), withstood them, because he wished to divert the proconsul from the faith."	"But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith."

Elymas is neither a Hebrew, Aramaic, nor Greek word; but elim is an Arabic word, meaning wise; and the plural is oulema (Renan's St. Paul, p. 15).

"And Saul, who is called Paul, was filled with the Holy Spirit, and he looked upon him and said:"—

This abrupt announcement that Saul was called Paul is very suspicious, coming as it does just after the introduction of the proconsul Paulus. Says Rabbi Wise:

"Up to this event Luke calls our man Saul, but here he inserts 'who also is called Paul.' [The Syriac has not 'also.'] The reason is very simple. The journey across the island of Cyprus was taken from the notes of the 'We' writer; Luke only added stories and miracles to suit his purpose. The 'We' writer knew no Saul, as little as the epistles do; they knew of Paul only. Luke being ignorant of his Hebrew name, made Saul of Paul, changing P to S. It appears that Paul was known only and exclusivly as the apostle to the gentiles, so that the biographical notes concerning him began with his work in Cyprus. Therefore all which the author of 'The Acts' states about him previous to this event is unhistorical" (Orig. of Chris., p. 462).

It is of little importance whether or no Paul's original name was Saul. His first missionary journey by sea we suspect was not made before the age of 50, and probably all his epistles were written after that.

But now let the critical reader believe if he can that the author of the Pauline epistles cursed Bar-Suma, alias Bar-Jesus, alias Elymas, in this style, and made him blind:

"O thou full of all subtleties and all mischiefs! thou child of the calumniator, and enemy of all righteousness! wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? And now the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind and shalt not see the sun for a time. And immediately there fell upon him a mist and darkness; and he went about inquiring who would take him by the hand. And when the proconsul saw what occurred he was astonished; and he believed the doctrin of the Lord" (10–12).

"Antichrist" has too high an opinion of Paul to believe that he made such a speech. Indeed the whole story of his visit to Cyprus is suspicious. The island had a large Jewish population and many synagogs; but Paul makes no allusion to any visit there, and never mentions the Cypriotes in his epistles.

PAUL AND BARNABAS IN PISIDIA.

The only result of the mission to Cyprus appears to hav been the conversion of the proconsul and the blinding of his magician. The missionaries then sailed to Perga, in Pamphilia. Here their servant, John Mark, left them and returned to Jerusalem, while Paul and Barnabas proceeded northward about a hundred miles to an upland town in Pisidia, called Antioch. This was its original name, but early in the imperial period, when the Romans took possession of the town, its name was changed to Cesarea (Smith's Dic. of Gr. and Rom. Ant.). Therefore the fact of its being called Antioch and not Cesarea by the writer of Acts is suggestiv of an earlier date for Paul's visit than A.D. 45, which was 75 years after the establishment of the empire.

At Pisidia Paul and Barnabas entered the synagog on the Sabbath, and according to custom were invited to speak. A pretty full report is given of what Paul said, but it is evidently made up out of the imagination of the writer, and is of the same shallow character as all of the rest of the speeches in Acts, whether purporting to come from Simon Kepha, Gamaliel, Stephen, James, or Paul. Commenting on this one of Paul, Rabbi Wise says:

"Luke invents one of his childish speeches and tells us Paul delivered it to the Jews at Antioch, in Pisidia, as though Paul could speak such empty phrases" (p. 463).

The effect of the speech was such that a repetition was requested. King James's version says the request was made by the gentiles after the Jews had gone out of the synagog; but the revised version, following the oldest codices, omits both the Jews and the gentiles and leaves the text in a grammatical muddle, thus:

"And as they went out they besought that these words might be spoken to them the next Sabbath day" (xiii, 42).

The sense is no clearer in the Syriac or Vulgate; both omit the Jews and the gentiles. It is a later scribe who has sought to make the text intelligible by amendment. The purpose of the writer of Acts was to show how the door of salvation was opened to the gentiles. It was not an easy task and he did it clumsily. When Ananias of Damascus was told in a vision to seek for Saul, the Lord said: "For he is to me a chosen vessel to carry my name to the gentiles" (ix, 15). When Simon Kepha was at the house of Cornelius, the Jewish brethren "were amazed and astonished that the gift of the holy spirit was poured out upon the gentiles" (x, 45). And when the new revelation was made known by Simon to the brethren at Jerusalem, "they glorified God and said, Now to the gentiles also doth God giv repentance unto life" (xi, 18). And yet thus far in the narrativ of Acts Cornelius and his household or kindred are the only gentile converts. But now at Antioch in Pisidia Paul and Barnabas begin to proclaim salvation to the gentiles:

"And the next Sabbath the whole city assembled to hear the word of God. And when the Jews saw the great assembly they were filled with envy, and set themselvs against the words which Paul spoke, and blasphemed. And Paul and Barnabas said openly: To you first ought the word of God to be spoken; but because ye repel it from you and decide against yourselvs, that ye are not worthy of life eternal, lo, we turn ourselvs to the gentiles. For so hath our Lord commanded us, as it is written: I hav set thee a light to the gentiles, that thou shouldst be for life unto the ends of the earth. And when the gentiles heard this, they rejoiced and glorified God. And those believed who were appointed to life eternal" (xiii, 46–48).

If Paul tells the truth about his relations to the elder apostles and to the church in Judea, he certainly was the first preacher of salvation to the Gentiles. For until his second visit to Jerusalem, after preaching seventeen years, neither James, Kepha, nor John had even entertained the notion of salvation to the uncircumcised (Gal. ii). But the writer of Acts makes Simon Kepha in fact the first apostle to the gentiles. The new revelation to Simon at Cesarea and its acceptance by the apostolic church at Jerusalem occur several years before Paul's first offer of salvation to the gentiles at Antioch in Pisidia.

ANTICHRIST.

The New Era.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Freethinkers generally of late hav come to the conclusion that they will no longer use the "Christian Era." Now the question is which of the methods proposed shall be adopted. One of the systems proposed is to begin with the founding of the United States.

Now, I hardly think that this method will do; because it will be a national affair and will only be adopted by Americans.

There is just as much sense in an English Liberal saying, "We will begin with the Conquest." It would be a national affair. "But," some Liberals say, "this is a secular country." This I deny, for the following reasons, viz:

1. It givs money out of its public treasury to support churches and church institutions.
2. Churches and church property are free from taxation.
3. Its holidays are recognized and enforced by law.
4. The preachers in legislatures and Congress are paid to make stump speeches in the shape of prayers.
5. Men are sent to prison for denying the Bible.
6. Men are not allowed to witness in court if they do not believe in a personal God.

And this is a secular government! This is the government Liberals wish to honor! No, gentlemen, let us not hav this system. Let us hav a system that will not call up national prejudice; let us be united now as far as we can. Let us hav a new system by all means, but not a national one. WM. F. BARRE.

New York City.

Infidel Philosophy.

Monday morning, seven o'clock. There is hurrying to and fro, men and women going to the workshops and factories to commence the week's work.

Few of them own the houses in which they liv, and some of them subsist on the coarsest fare. They hav an anxious and careworn appearance, although just starting out to commence the week's work. Many pass them, as they do the horses in harness, without a sign of recognition, and yet they are the real wealth-producers of the country.

There are four ministers in the village, each one of whom receives many times as much as one of these faithful toilers. I do not see them hurrying to their business, nor do they seem to hav any special business on hand, although they are better fed, better clothed and paid, than any of these honest workers.

Ten o'clock. One of the ministers is taking his morning ride. He looks like one to whom special privilege has been granted. He seems to enjoy the morning air and the beautiful scenery, and appears to be in the full enjoyment of life's blessings, with exemption from all its burdens. He livs in decidedly the finest house in the village, draws from the people over a hundred dollars per month, and all make their lowest bow when he passes.

If God should stretch forth his hand and touch him with his great whangdoodle magnet and draw him to himself no wheels of industry would be clogged, no interests would be jeopardized, not a cog would be broken in all the wheels of wealth-producing industry. Yet seventy thousand of these useless pets are supported by the toiling millions of the country.

In the county in which I liv lands hav been sold for a pound of flour per acre, which are now worth one hundred dollars per acre for farming purposes. What has wrought this great change in prices? The answer is echoed back, "Work, work, persistent toil!" The forests hav been felled, school-houses hav been built, mills and factories erected, canals dug, the face of the country checkered with lines of railroads, and the click of the telegraph is heard in every village and hamlet.

In what way hav the priests and ministers assisted to bring about this great change? Hav they laid the keels, spread the sails, built the factories, or projected the railroads? Hav they felled the forests and produced the waving fields of grain? Nay; they are never seen with the frontiersman. The prudent minister always waits until the houses are built on the four corners and a comfortable home provided. The appearance of the minister and distillery was simultaneous in the new settlement. He took his pay in grain, which was made into whisky at the distillery, and thus the mental spawn of God's anointed was coined into money to the great glory of his elect.

The ministers hav added nothing to the wealth or prosperity of the country. They hav toiled not, neither hav they spun. Though untold millions hav been paid to them, I ask my countrymen to consider what they hav left in return. Point to any monument of labor or industry in the country which is the work of their hands if you can. The country has no more need of them as a class than it has for conjurors and necromancers.

Go into any village or city and inquire how much has been paid to the priesthood in the last twenty years. Then ask them to point anything in that village or city which has been done or accomplished by their labor commensurate with the outlay. Apply this test to any section of the country, the result is the same—much paid, nothing received. The Christian shouts, "Nearer, my God, to thee." Why don't he kick out these middle-men and walk boldly up to his God and do his business in his own way. A minister may be a necessary appendage to an aristocracy, but he is only a barnacle on our free institutions. Again I ask my countrymen to consider what they leave to the country in exchange for the vast sums which are paid to them. They attend the funerals and weddings, the picnics and festivals. They partake of the rich viands, sleep on downy beds, and do the agreeable on all occasions. All this is in keeping with the world's history. The fat of the land has ever been enjoyed by those who do not work, while the workers and wealth-producers hav lived on the crumbs which fell from the master's table.

These self-constituted agents of the great heavenly autocrat, although so sleek and courteous and affable, are the most selfish and designing hypocrits under the sun. They hav been the enslavers of mankind. They hav chained the ages down in ignorance, and ever held in utter contempt the equality of the sexes. They are a privileged class, and hav always adroitly turned their privileges to exalt themselvs and blind the masses so that their hocus-pocus would not be questioned.

"Oh, for Pope's satiric darts, I'd rip their rotten, hollow hearts."

They attend all the great moral shows (providing the clergy are admitted free), ride at half rates, slink out of their fair proportion of taxes, and always deadhead their way through the world.

Now, I am in favor of a new deal and a fair game. Let the ministers earn their own living or starve. Let the blessings and burdens be more equally divided. Let the patient toilers pay the minister less and hav more of comfort and enjoyment for themselvs. Instead of lavishing half they earn upon the priesthood, let the money be spent for useful books and pictures, for clothes and good, healthy food, for excursions and picnics, and to make home joyous and happy.

Instead of going to church every Sunday to hear the minister tell you how to be happy in the world to come, strive to be happy here. Make Sunday yield to you rational enjoyment, strew life's pathway with flowers, light up every countenance with smiles, and make the very best of this world, and I will vouch for your happiness in the hereafter. If I had all the money which is paid to the priesthood I could fill the world with intelligence and plenty, with music and laughter and joy.

It was said of old, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," but the new version makes it read, "To be duped by the tricks of the priesthood is the hight of folly."

The pious Christian will tell you that if it were not for the labors of the clergy, fire-balls and meteors would shoot athwart the moral sky, earthquakes would rumble beneath our feet, the earth would jump the track, planets and satellites be off on a drunken spree, and pandemonium would reign.

They make long trips to Europe, or hie away to the mountains during the heat of summer, or booze at some watering-place, as oblivious to all of these consequences as so many eels in the mud. "Their kingdom is not of this world," yet they take to high salaries, big donations, free passes, and summer resorts as naturally as ducks do to water.

I don't know but these remarks may seem harsh and severe to some, but I hav little more respect for a class of men who make a trade of religion and liv by deceiving the people than I hav for freebooters and highwaymen. If ministers want to be respected, let them cease to impose upon the people, lay aside their sacerdotal robes, and go to work and earn an honest living. In no other way can they so effectually serve their time and kind, or confer a more lasting benefit upon the world.

Those who liv upon the unpaid toil of others, without an equivalent, what are they? Those who shut out the light of reason, smother investigation, and keep the people in the darkness of ignorance, and then take advantage of their ignorance, what are they? Those who make promises to the people which they know can never be fulfilled, what are they? Those who frighten the people by the "scare-crow" of hell, and then extort vast sums of money from them, who and what are they? If they are not deceivers, if they are not extortioners, if they are not swindlers, I should like to know their real characters and by what names they might be called. JOHN PECK.

Food for Thought.

Professed Christians pretend to believe that a large portion of the human race will suffer eternal torment, and yet, though they say they are poor, miserable, sinful "critters," they go on breeding as though they expected a premium for peopling heaven. O consistency! Fewer children and better. One woman has had fourteen children, and only six are living; another has had fourteen, and only three are living; and a third, only 33 years of age, has had ten, and only two are living. All these liv in a little circle of a sparsely-settled village within three minutes' walk of each other, and I know not but there are as many more cases like them within the same circle. Fewer children and better, should be the motto.

Sport.—Savages shoot birds from necessity for food; civilized people who profess to be Christians shoot them for sport, though they profess to believe their Lord and master sees every mangled, bleeding, and dying bird that falls to the ground.

Notwithstanding the "good book" says, "Beware of dogs," the believers in the book in this township keep enough of these filthy, disease-spreading brutes to eat more good food every day than would be necessary to feed all the widows, orphans, and aged and infirm people in the town.

The ears of pretended Christians cannot bear the whistle of a train or steamer on the Sabbath, but a hundred church bells in a city all ringing "hell! hell! hell!" is sweet music to them. Why is it so? Simply because the train and steamboat carry customers from the church, while the bells draw customers in.

Five Methodist ministers hav lived here near me two years each, and a sixth one three years, and, though I hav met them daily at store, post-office, and station, not one of the six ever offered me his hand, nor took pen or pencil to say a word to me, though they all knew I was too deaf to hear thunder. And why this neglect in men who profess to be sent by a God into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature? Not because I did not treat them civilly, but because they heard I did not believe as they on the subject of religion and had no money for them. If they were what they profess to be, and had considered me in error, they would hav come to me without money or price, and labored to convince me of my errors and save my soul from their terrible hell. Their own works prove them to be dumb dogs, barking only for their bread, rather than what they conceive to be the "good of souls." J. HACKER.

Berlin, N. J.

Henry Ward Beecher.

With the sphere, I may say, filled by Mr. Beecher the writer has been familiar from the time that he commenced his career as a Christian minister. And, as I estimate him, he has from the first been more or less in advance of his orthodox creed. Nor is it now difficult for Liberals to appreciate the good he has done for humanity in consequence of his connection with the Christian church. On the whole, his influence upon the public mind throughout these United States has been liberalizing, especially among that class of people with which he has been identified. And from the influence exerted by Henry Ward Beecher there is more freedom and independent thinking among the people, that places him in the front rank certainly of preachers that we may call liberal and progressiv.

The author, fifty years ago, was himself a Christian priest in Boston, and now and then heard the sermons preached by Lyman Beecher, D.D., the father of Henry Ward. I once attended one of his "inquiring meetings," when the old man asked me if I had "passed from death unto life," as I might know, he said, "if I loved the brethring" (1 John iii, 14). My reply was that I had the best half of that evidence, as I loved the "sistering." Exhorting sinners to repentance, he said they "had better do wrong than to be inactiv and do nothing." When Mr. Beecher, not long ago, gave his views on evolution, I noticed his discourse was republished in one or more of the Liberal papers, and referred to as if Mr. Beecher had entirely emerged from the old theological fog. But his explanation as to the conversion of "Saul of Tarsus" into a saint and an apostle of Jesus the Christ, given to his church April 6, 1883, shows plainly enough how much evolution and progression in psychology will hav to do for Henry Ward Beecher before he will hav outgrown the Christian ideas taught him by his father. Of St. Paul he said: "He belonged to that class of men of whom are made poets, orators, seers, and prophets. He was the man who was caught up into the seventh heaven, and saw what it was not possible for any other man to see. He was the man who heard the voice from Macedonia saying 'Come over and help us.' He was the man who perpetually saw visions and heard things."

A Christian minister, using this language of an apostle being "caught up," not to the seventh, but to the third heaven, indorses the comment of Dr. Adam Clarke on St. Paul's "trance," when he affirms that it evinces "the highest degree of inspiration." Now, as to what a state of trance is I hav already shown in these columns. It is a state always of more or less hallucination, a sluggish state of the mind; and Paul himself (2 Cor. xii, 1–4) declares that when he was entranced and imagined he was "caught up to the third heaven," he did not know whether he was dead or alive. And if he was caught up to Paradise, as Mr. Beecher affirms, I call on him to tell us what power it was that gave to Paul such a hoist as that. I hav seen ministers and hundreds of Christians entranced by the ideas described in my public scientific lectures when these Christians, similarly as Paul did, fancied themselvs in heaven, where they "saw Jesus, God, and the Holy Ghost." That Mr. Beecher's mind is still in the fog is manifest from what he says of the light under which, it is said, Paul fell to the earth:

"And as he journeyed he came near Damascus, and suddenly there shone round about him a light from heaven, and he fell to the earth and heard a voice saying unto him, 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?' And he said, 'Who art thou, Lord?' He heard a voice. Some who are afraid of miracles say it was thunder. I do not see any evidence of that. There does not appear to hav been any thunder-storm. I suppose it to hav been a divine appearance on purpose; an overtowering light, and an appearance in his glory of the Lord Jesus Christ to the apostle's mind, and to his eyes, for that matter. He speaks of it himself as of having seen the Lord. There is no evidence that he ever did see the Lord alive, and when he refers to that, he must, I judge, mean that he saw Christ at this time. There can be no doubt that he heard a voice, not of thunder, but a voice that was articulate and which heard him—of surprising radiance and dignity and grandeur, so that he said, 'Who art thou, Lord?' If it is not to be supposed that he supposed he saw Christ, how is it that he addressed it so, 'Who art thou?'"

Mr. Beecher ought to explain to us what he means by a "divine appearance." Does he believe that Paul saw with his external eyes the person of Jesus Christ? I can feel no surprise at these statements of Mr. Beecher, in connection with his published views of evolution. If this doctrin be true, as I am sufficiently sure that it is, there are no ideas except those evolved by the human brain. Hence, by human ideas, the world of mind is controled. Nor can there be any limits to their evolution. Hence, we form ideas of many imaginary things that our eyes cannot see, and which our minds hav no faculty for knowing. And the mind, once victimized by error, is often slow in its process of recovery. I could giv the names of Liberals, now well known, who were ten years or more outgrowing theology. And their growth was so slow that they could not tell as to when for the last time they shut their eyes and talked to the ridge-pole. LA ROY SUNDERLAND.

Quincy, Mass., April 10, 107.

Near to Nature.

We find men in all departments of human society, adapted by nature to pursue some one or more of the diversified pursuits of life. The same also is true in Liberal and scientific work. Some are admirably adapted to tear down, others to clear away the rubbish; some to put in foundations, others to finish materials for the structure, and now and then one capable of superintending the whole, giving instructions, and taking the responsibility of the accomplishment of the enterprise in a workmanlike manner. The work in which Liberals are engaged is a great and glorious enterprise—the emancipation of the human mind. Priestcraft and all other religious craft rest upon foundations composed of gods, and it requires the labor of seventy or eighty thousand ministers one-seventh part of the time, and more, to keep the foundation together and save their worthless idol-temple from destruction. I hav had many a season of rejoicing in view of the fact that a goodly number engaged in the Liberal cause are not only capable of imparting instruction in the art of working fine materials, but hav bone, muscle, sinew, and will-power to deal logical blows upon the head and base of the theological moral monster. Our idol-smashers, and the rubbish-removers and material-finishers are quite numerous, but none too many. Let us all work together, boys, keeping our eye on our noble, illustrious leaders. Work by their plans, use their materials, cultivate their spirit, keep their object in view—the overthrow of religious mental bondage, and the establishment of reason. Lay down the tools of unpleasant criticism, fault-finding, brow-beating; study self more, and your co-workers less; be at peace with yourself and a peacemaker with all, and, thus doing, much of the responsibility felt and borne by our leaders and superintendents will be assuaged. We already hear from many of the most honest intellectual champions of religious superstitions regrets, renunciations, and retractions. The day of our deliverance is at hand; the iron yoke is broken; reason enthroned.

I wish to evince my appreciation of our fallen and lamented, worthy, illustrious D. M. Bennett, by using a little of his material in the construction of a goddess, as I hav had nothing to worship since I parted with the old Jewish monster. Bennett, by the way, possessed greater ability to get near Mother Nature and the soul of humanity than any man I ever read. Herein lies the secret of his success. He said:

"I recognize the fact that all human beings come into existence by the same natural process that all forms of life are propagated and continued. I see that individual life arises from organization, and I believe it must discontinue when the organization terminates. I believe there can be no future state of individual intellect and life. When we pass from this form of existence our individuality ceases; the particles of matter of which we are composed return to the condition from which they were evolved, and we go back to the state of unconsciousness we occupied previous to our individual existence. I see nothing terrible in this. We do not mourn because we had no individual existence before our birth, and why should we mourn because we hav none after our death? It must be admitted that this view is infinitly better than the Christian belief in an eternity of suffering and unhappiness for the vast majority of mankind, without object or benefit."

"I believe in the eternity and infinity of the universe; that it contains all existences and forces; that there could hav been nothing before her, nothing above her, nothing outside of her."

From this reasoning, and a continuation of it—which may be found in his autobiographical sketch—I build up for myself one of the most mysterious, wonderfully-beautiful, universally glorious goddesses of any conceived of by finite man. She is neither the object of sense nor subject to passion. In her body she is like the light; her soul resembles truth, love, and reason. She possesses a universal life-force, which pervades and is diffused over all nature. All organic and inorganic matter receives its light and life from her. She fills immensity, the only principle. She is the light and life of reason, the motiv of all matter, the producer of all things. Without her there was not anything produced that was produced. Mrs. Ella E. Gibson and others will find in this the god sex forever settled by mutual consent.

The Acquittal of Heywood.

Heywood is acquitted. His trial lasted three days, beginning on the 10th, before Judge Nelson. The counts in the indictment were: 1. Mailing "Cupid's Yokes;" 2. Mailing extracts from Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," and 3. Mailing a paper containing the advertisment of a syringe. Mr. Heywood conducted his own case, the government being represented by Assistant District Attorney Charles Almy, Jr. After the jury had been selected, Anthony Comstock, the detested and detestable instigator of the prosecution, took the stand and testified to having received by mail packages containing the articles complained of, in response to two decoy letters written to the defendant by him, over the fictitious signature of J. A. Mattocks. The syringe was put in as evidence in the case, but when the slip containing Whitman's poems was offered by the government, the defendant objected on the ground that it was not set forth in the indictment, which stated that the document was of such a nature that it would be improper to put it on the record of the court. Judge Nelson read Whitman's poems carefully through, and then said that he could see no reason for their omission from the indictment. "I do not rule upon the question," said the court, "whether this document is obscene within the meaning of the statute, but I do say that I cannot find anything in it which would contaminate the record." "Why, such a ruling," said Mr. Almy, "will involve an acquittal on this indictment." "I cannot help that," answered the court. After considerable discussion, in which the defendant read a letter from Ralph Waldo Emerson and extracts from the writings of eminent clergymen, eulogizing Whitman's works, Judge Nelson announced that he should order a verdict of "not guilty" so far as the poems of Whitman were concerned.

"Cupid's Yokes," which was also omitted from the indictment for the same reason, was next offered in evidence, and the defendant again raised objection. Although the government wished to put the whole book in, the court compelled it to specify the passages relied on. After Mr. Almy had read these, the court ruled as in the previous instance, saying that the court was sufficiently robust to stand anything that had been read, and that there was no excuse for the drawing of an indictment in so loose and imperfect a manner.

These decisions narrowing the issue down to the syringe charge alone, the trial proceeded on that basis, and Mr. Comstock was subjected to a long cross-examination concerning his past life and his methods of detecting crime. The only other witness for the government was David H. Gregory, the postmaster at Princeton, Mr. Heywood's home, who testified to the defendant's signature to a receipt for the registered letters written by Comstock, and, on cross-examination, to the defendant's good character.

These early and unexpected rulings in his favor embarrassed Mr. Heywood, as he writes a friend, making the strongest points in his speech unnecessary. At each new decision in his favor there was applause in the court-room. Another ruling was that it was incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the accused mailed the documents and articles himself, or that he authorized his agent to do so. Also that it must be shown that he knew of the existence of the advertisment in his paper. This is directly opposit to the ruling of Judge Benedict in this city in the cases of Mr. Bennett and Dr. Foote. Indeed Judge Nelson's fairness in this case is the greatest possible contrast to the bigoted and extra judicial conduct of Benedict. It was evident from Judge Nelson's manner, says Liberty, that he did not consider the book or extract in any degree obnoxious to the statute, and when the district attorney ventured the proposition that to oppose legal marriage is necessarily obscene, he could not repress a smile.

Mr. Heywood sumned up his case in a speech occupying four and one-half hours. He made a fine impression upon the jury, we are told. In his speech he stated plainly just why he had done these things; that it was necessary to test the right of citizens to their own opinions and for the enjoyment of free speech and free press—rights which had been foully invaded and trampled upon by Comstock's semi-ecclesiastical society.

Judge Nelson in his charge to the jury spoke at considerable length, and it was remarked that the charge was very favorable to Mr. Heywood. The court said that the government must prove that he deposited the paper in the mail himself, or that it was done by his direction, and that if he simply delivered the letter, in reply to which the paper was sent, to the Co-operativ Publishing Company, and they caused the paper to be mailed, he was to be acquitted. They were instructed also that the government must show that Mr. Heywood knew that the alleged advertisment was included in the paper. The testimony of the witness, Anthony Comstock, the court ruled was not to be considered as that of an accomplice, but if the jury found that he practiced deception in obtaining evidence against the accused they may take it into consideration in estimating his credibility. The government was also held to be obliged to prove that the instrument advertised was intended for the alleged illegal and immoral use, and for no other purpose.

The case was given to the jury before the noon recess. They were given from 2 to 3 o'clock for dinner, and at about 3:15 reported that they had agreed for a verdict. The foreman stated that the only question with the jury was not whether the defendant was guilty or not guilty under the indictment—that was agreed to in the negativ from the start—but how long they ought, for the sake of propriety, to remain out. It was finally agreed that they should deliberate long enough to carry them by the dinner hour, and thus get one more meal out of the government before the case was ended. When it was announced that Mr. Heywood was found not guilty, his friends who were present manifested their pleasure by clapping their hands; the crier promptly suppressed the applause, and Mr. Heywood withdrew from the court room to receive their congratulations.

It is very evident from the termination of this case and the rulings of Judge Nelson and Judges McCrary and Treat in St. Louis, that Comstock's methods are getting into disrepute with the judiciary. It givs us unalloyed pleasure to be able to say this, for only two years ago it was sure conviction for a man to be dragged into a Federal court charged with obscenity. It is a happy sign that the times are changing.

Mr. Heywood may be fanatical and rash, his methods may be disagreeably repugnant to sensitiv people, but no one can fail to admire him for his stanch advocacy of what he conceives to be truth, and of the right of every one not only to his own opinions on all subjects, but to his equally inalienable right to express them in his own way. His victory is a triumph of common sense, too, and an indication that the people will not countenance Comstock in his endeavor to suppress all discussion upon the subject of over-population.

Although Mr. Heywood does not profess to be an Infidel, yet it is to Infidels that he turns in his distress, and it is they who hav aided him in his fight. Whenever the freedom of the press or of speech is interfered with by the law on religious grounds, Liberals are bound to protest, and when the victim escapes the clutches of the churchly bigots, they are bound to exult over another proof that legal injustice and ecclesiastical tyranny do not always win, and that in the long run liberty will be recognized and the right of each individual to his own thoughts and their expression be respected.

It is not necessary to say that we do not approve of Mr. Heywood's methods. That is not the question. In England Positivists like John Morley, so-called Liberals, are afraid to protest against the imprisonment of Mr. Foote for fear they will be thought to sympathize with the caricatures of Christ that he published. That is just no Liberalism at all. It is conservatism that would need but little more shrinking to be orthodoxy. Mr. Foote had a right to assault Christianity in his own way, and no law can be put in operation against him that does not equally endanger Mr. John Morley himself. And the same remark applies also to the case against Heywood. Although every one of Heywood's opinions and theories may be wrong, his right to disseminate them is just as clear as the noonday sun, and no country can be free that legally suppresses any opinion upon any subject.

A great many hav said that Heywood was foolish to thrust his head into the lion's mouth. Their great aversion to his published expressions clouded, and even closed, their eyes to the principle involved, which is that of freedom of dicussion of all subjects. But the outcome shows that he was wiser than his critics, for the nation is a little freer to-day than before his trial, and freedom of speech and press are in less danger from church interference. It may be freedom in the wrong direction, but the very license of liberty is preferable to ecclesiastical suppression of radical and humanitarian thought. However widely we may disagree with Mr. Heywood, however much we may deplore his absurd theories and coarse manner of promulgating them, we must giv him credit for having the courage of his convictions and for standing up valiantly and well for the right of private judgment in social matters as well as in religious.

Bradlaugh Acquitted.

We learn by telegraph that Mr. Bradlaugh has been found not guilty of publishing the Freethinker, and the Christians must be satisfied with one less victim. Messrs. Foote and Ramsay were indicted with him, but it seems they were not dragged from jail to be punished a second time. Truly the Freethinkers of England ought to be grateful that the Christians are satisfied with one term in jail for them.

Mutilating History.

A friend in Canada writes us making inquiry as follows:

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., April 9, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Last week I procured from the public reading rooms here a volume of "Milman's Gibbon's History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire."

It contains copious notes by the Rev. H. H. Milman, and I hav been told that that gentleman has been good enough to revise the original text almost completely out of the work.

I would like you to throw a little information on the subject in next week's paper, and also refer to the most authentic original of this book which may be had. SUBSCRIBER.

It has been a common practice for theologians to take standard histories and other works and by mutilation to make "library editions," "student's editions," etc., and scarcely any school-book but bears marks of their assiduous care over the minds of the young. Upon comparing these revised editions with original or real scholar's editions, it will always be found that the "edited" portions are those militating in some way against Christianity.

Just as this query came to us a book was published which throws much light upon the subject. It is the "History of Christianity," and comprises all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and Gibbon's "Vindication" of his great work against the base aspersions of the clergy, who attacked him in swarms upon its publication. The publisher of this most valuable and timely work explains one cause of its publication among others to be that these abridged editions of Gibbon hav found a wide circulation in our schools and colleges, the author of one of which betrays himself by coolly saying that "the most important omissions relate to the history of the church, in which Gibbon too frequently displayed the hostility he felt toward the Christian religion." The publisher of this recent work does not appreciate the pious labors of these commentators, and has been particular to reprint from one of the early editions, and he informs us that the reader may rely upon its being a correct transcript from the original text.

The current editions of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall" are from the work edited by Dean Milman, who, although a prejudiced churchman, left for later theologians the work of garbling what is, taken altogether, the most magnificent historical work extant. We cannot explain the position of Dean Milman better than by quoting from Mr. Eckler:

"This learned divine was permitted to inspect the unpublished posthumous works of Gibbon, with the express understanding, however, that none of their contents should be divulged; Lord Sheffield, in whose care they had remained, having positivly prohibited, by a clause in his will, any further publication of them. Mr. Milman, having thus had access to Gibbon's notes and private memoranda, and having devoted much time to the subject, was well qualified to form a correct estimate of Gibbon's labors; and, notwithstanding his strong Christian prejudices, he is constrained to admit that he has 'followed the track of Gibbon through many parts of his work; he has read his authorities with constant reference to his pages; and must pronounce his deliberate judgment in terms of the highest admiration as to his general accuracy.'

"'And indeed, if, after all,' continues Milman in a sorrowful strain, 'the views of the early progress of Christianity be melancholy and humiliating, we must beware lest we charge the whole of this on the Infidelity of the historian. It is idle, it is disingenuous, to deny or to dissemble the early depravations of Christianity, its gradual but rapid departure from its primitiv simplicity and purity, still more, from its spirit of universal love.'

"After admitting so much in favor of Gibbon's accuracy as a historian, and acknowledging so much that Gibbon has stated in regard to the 'melancholy and humiliating' origin of Christianity, is it not somewhat surprising to see this learned and cautious champion of the church use the following language in endeavoring to explain why some damaging truths, called 'objectionable passages,' in Gibbon's History, hav been allowed by him to remain unchallenged?

"'The editor,' says Milman, speaking of himself, 'would further observe, that with regard to some other objectionable passages, which do not involve misstatement or inaccuracy, he has intentionally abstained from directing particular attention toward them by any special protest.'

"A passage that is not misstated and is not inaccurate must necessarily be true, and to call a historical truth 'objectionable' because it conflicts with certain Christian prejudices, proves that this pious and learned divine was rather a partisan for his creed than a sincere lover of truth for its own sake. He considered it wiser to pass over these 'objectionable passages' in silence, hoping the reader would not observe their significance, rather than risk the danger of arousing suspicion by challenging investigation. What a short-sighted and time-serving policy for an eminent Christian historian to assume! What a contrast such methods afford to the labors of our modern scientists who earnestly seek to demonstrate hidden facts in nature and discover new truths in science, regardless alike whether these new discoveries militate for or against their preconceived theories.

"'The art of Gibbon, or at least the unfair impression produced by these two memorable chapters' (the fifteenth and sixteenth), continues Dean Milman, 'consists in his confounding together, in one undistinguishable mass, the oirgin and apostolic propagation of the Christian religion with its later progress. . . . The main question, the divine origin of the religion, was dextrously eluded, or speciously conceded by Gibbon; his plan enabled him to commence his account, in most parts, below the apostolic times; and it was only by the strength of the dark coloring with which he brought out the failings and the follies of the succeeding ages that a shadow of doubt and suspicion was thrown back upon the primitiv period of Christianity.'

"The Jews justly complained that their Egyptian taskmasters compelled them to make bricks without straw; but this difficult performance would hav been no greater than to attempt to write an authentic history without facts. 'Short, indeed,' says Bishop Watson, 'are the accounts which hav been transmitted to us of the first propagating of Christianity.' 'The scanty and suspicious materials of ecclesiastical history,' says Gibbon, 'seldom enable us to dispel the dark cloud that hangs over the first age of the church.' Had Gibbon drawn upon his imagination for his facts, he could hav written a history that would hav given great satisfaction to Dean Milman and his fellow-churchmen. But a history written from such a standpoint would be as useless and ephemeral as were the productions of Gibbon's opponents, which hav already passed into a merited oblivion.

"M. Guizot goes a step further than Milman, and effectually disposes of the latter's argument against Gibbon by asserting in effect that there was no history of the primitiv church to which Gibbon could hav referred for information or authority—that in reality 'the history of the first age of Christianity is only found in the Acts of the Apostles, and in order to speak of the first persecutions experienced by the Christians, that book should naturally hav been consulted.'

"Such a method would certainly simplify the case very materially, and enable us in future to dispense entirely with the study of history. We would only hav to consult the four gospels, read carefully the texts of scripture, take assertions for facts, and repeat that stereotyped formula from generation to generation. Criticism would be unnecessary, investigation would cease, and uniformity of belief, one of the signs of the coming millennium, would necessarily be established."

It is extremely difficult to find what Gibbon's real religious opinions were. He has been attacked by the church violently, but more because the facts given in his work overthrew the claims to a supernatural and divine origin of Christianity made by the later Christians than because he was personally opposed to them. He left Catholicism and partook of the sacrament at a Protestant church in Switzerland in 1754, but it does not appear that he took further part in such mummery. That he was currently regarded as a skeptic after the appearance of his history is certain. He was a great admirer of Hume, and said that a letter he received from the latter regarding his work overpaid the labor of ten years. One minister was much amazed upon reading Gibbon that "the prelates and dignitaries of the church did not vie with each other whose stone should sink the deepest in the forehead of this Goliah." The Monthly Review of October, 1790, speaks of Gibbon as "our skeptical historian." Attempts to answer him were made by some dozen or twenty churchmen, but all that is preserved of these polemics is their titles—a certain indication that their worthlessness has been discovered by even the church.

There are several good unabridged editions of Gibbon in the market, but any one wishing to consult his criticism of the rise of Christianity will find the volume we hav referred to the best source of information.

Christian Legislation.

The men elected to the legislature of this state are truly a depraved set. Most of them are ward politicians, spending what time they are not at Albany around corner saloons, without a particle of honesty or statesmanship in their compositions. There is not much choice between the two parties, the only perceptible difference being that the Republicans steal for the Protestant church and the Democrats for the Catholic.

Last week the Assembly passed a bill to provide money to support a Christian home for intemperate men. This institution is strictly sectarian. There is no objection to the churches supporting charitable organizations if they feel like it, but when they get their houses and lands exempt from taxation, and then ask the state to vote money to support them, they cease to be charities and become ecclesiastical schools or asylums. The Christians make large claims on the strength of their charities, but the impudence of these is exposed by the passage of such laws as the one in question.

If the Christians want a home in which to support their drunkards let them build it. The state has one now and there is no need of its voting further supplies.

Not to be outdone in hypocritical piety, the Senate has passed a bill to punish all who put upon the stage a representation of the character of any of the Bible "divinities." This is aimed at the Passion Play, but it will hit the Catholic's who annually depict the scenes in the supposititious life of the supposed Christ. It is a law to protect God and Christ, who, omnipotent as they are, are unable to take care of themselvs or inspire in the breasts of their followers the respect claimed for them.

This is an acknowledgment we should not think Christians would care to make.

The Monument.

The following subscriptions hav been received since the last report was printed. We shall, as soon as spring fairly opens, get plans and estimates for the monument, and report the same to our readers, giving the amount necessary and the amount on hand. There is not enough as yet. THE TRUTH SEEKER family is a large one, and every member should do his duty by our dead father. Let us giv him an honorable remembrance in the shape of a monument that shall bear his name and virtues on for many, many years.

A Beautiful Oration.

A large concourse of eminent people assembled on the night of the 15th, at the mansion of Colonel Fitzgerald, on K street, Washington, on the occasion of the funeral ceremonies of the late John G. Mills and to listen to the eloquent remarks of Colonel Robert Ingersoll. Mr. Ingersoll was deeply affected and could hardly command his emotion sufficiently to speak clearly. The following are his remarks:

"Again we are face to face with the great mystery that shrouds this world. We question, but there is no reply. Out on the wide waste of seas, there drifts no spar. Over the desert of death the sphinx gazes forever, but never speaks. In the very May of life another heart has ceased to beat. Night has fallen upon noon, but he lived, he loved, he was loved—wife and children pressed their kisses on his lips. This is enough. The longest life contains no more. This fills the vase of joy.

"He who lies here clothed with the perfect peace of death was a kind and loving husband and a good father, a generous neighbor, an honest man, and these words build a monument of glory above the humblest grave. He was always a child, sincere and frank, as full of hope as Spring. He divided all time into to-day and to-morrow. To-morrow was without a cloud, and of to-morrow he borrowed sunshine for to-day.

"He was my friend. He will remain so. The living oft become estranged; the dead are true. He was not a Christian. In the Eden of his hope there did not crawl and coil the serpent of eternal pain. In many languages he sought the thoughts of men, and for himself he solved the problems of the world. He accepted the philosophy of Auguste Comte. Humanity was his god, the human race the Supreme Being. In that supreme being he rested. He believed that we are indebted for what we enjoy to the labor, the self-denial, the heroism of the human race, and that as we hav plucked the fruit of what others planted, we, in thankfulness, should plant for others yet to be.

"With him immortality was the eternal consequences of his own good acts. He believed that every good thought, every disinterested deed, hastens the harvest of universal good. This is a religion that enriches poverty; that enables us to bear the sorrows of the saddest life; that peoples even solitude with the happy millions yet to be—a religion born not of selfishness and fear, but of love and hope—that religion that digs wells to slake the thirst of others; that gladly bears the burdens of the unborn.

"In the presence of death how beliefs and dogmas wither and decay! how loving words and deeds burst into blossom! Pluck from the tree of any life these flowers, and there remains but the barren thorns of bigotry and creed. All wish for happiness beyond this life—all hope to meet again the loved and lost. In every heart there grows this sacred flower of eternal hope.

"Immortality is a word that hope, through all ages, has been whispering to love. The miracle of thought we cannot understand. The mystery of death and hope we cannot comprehend. This chaos, called the world, has never been explained. The golden bridge of life from gloom emerges and on shadow rests. Beyond this we do not know. Fate is speechless, destiny is dumb, and the secret of the future has never yet been told. We love, we wait, we hope. The more we love, the more we fear. Upon the tenderest heart the deepest shadows fall. All paths, whether filled with thorns or flowers, end here. Here success and failure are the same. The rage of wretchedness and the purple robe of power lose difference and distinction in this democracy of death. Character alone survives. Goodness alone livs, love alone is immortal.

"But to all there comes a time when the fevered lips of life long for the cool, delicious kiss of death. Tired of the dust and glare of day, they hear with joy the rustling garments of the night. What can we say of death? What can we say of the dead? Where they hav gone reason cannot go, and from thence revelation has not come. But let us believe that over the cradle Nature bends and smiles, and lovingly above the dead in benediction holds her outstretched hands."

Mr. Mill was a man of great literary attainments, and a remarkably clear writer. He occasionally contributed to the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The article "Joined to his Idol," printed in the March 17th number of the present volume of this paper was probably his last communication to the Freethought press. The circumstances of his life and death we are unacquainted with. But we know that he was a Freethinker, a Positivist, a friend of his race. He did what he could with voice and pen for the freedom of the human mind, and this good which he did livs after him.

Book Notes.

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL says of "Golden Throne:" "The author certainly has genius; there is in him the divine creativ spark. The book is filled with manly thought, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. It is filled with beautiful, touching, and inspiring ideas of generosity and hope, running over with sympathy and charity so that no one can read it without thinking better of this world. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"

"NATURE'S HARMONY," by Francis D. Lacy, of Nirvana, Mich., has just been published at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. It is a handsome work of 165 pages, selling for one dollar. We shall take pleasure in noticing it at length further on.

"JESUS CHRIST A FICTION FOUNDED UPON THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA," is the latest work purporting to come from the industrious spirit, M. Faraday. It is claimed that through the spirit of Faraday numerous pagan priests of Rome hav disclosed the true origin of Christianity. The book contains 208 pages. The price in cloth is 75 cents; paper, 50 cents. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

"ANSWERS TO CHRISTIAN QUESTIONS." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent to new subscribers three months for fifty cents. There is no better way of serving the cause than by getting up clubs of trial subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Prohibition Question.

CAN THE WORLD BE REGENERATED BY PHYSICAL FORCE?

John Calvin tried to compel Dr. Servetus to do what he (Calvin) thought to be right. Failing in words, he had him burnt at the stake. In our day Anthony Comstock is in the same infamous business, using physical force to compel people to do right. But John Calvin, or Anthony Comstock, are not alone by any means in the infamous business of trying to compel people by force to do right.

Some very good and no doubt well-meaning people, but with mistaken zeal, think the world can be regenerated by physical force, that they can stop the sale of intoxicating drink by the sword. Never were people more mistaken. John Calvin, Anthony Comstock, and those who would take the sword to compel men by force to do right, are all on the same platform. To compel people by force to stop selling intoxicating drinks is precisely the same in kind as those who enact laws to compel people to believe as they do, or go to prison or the stake.

It all has its rise from the doctrin, "Believe or be damned." Whether the use of intoxicating drink is a curse or a blessing, is not the question, but it is, Has the use of physical force been successful in regenerating the world? For thousands of years the Christian world has held sway, and preached the doctrin, and practiced it too, "You shall believe or you shall be damned." And it is Christians who are running the anti-rum—not temperance—crusade; you shall stop selling liquor, or you shall go to prison. Those who put Mr. Bennett and others in prison used force—the sword; and those who are enacting laws compelling people to stop doing what they think is wrong are in the same army of persecutors, using force—the sword—to regenerate the world.

Those who advocate physical force to redeem the world hav no right to condemn the Christian persecutions of the past or present. The true reformer, the redeemed soul, does not resort to the sword to compel his fellow-men to do right. The forcible arguments of E. C. Walker, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, hav never been answered, nor ever can be. It is sad to see reformers—so called—take the sword to compel men to stop wrong-doing. Has not the experiment of five thousand years of force been enough to satisfy any one that it is a failure?

I am sick and tired of the everlasting senseless clatter of trying to compel people to stop doing wrong, and do what they—the writers—think is right. Intemperance will never be abolished while money is in existence, or those great cess-pools of crime, cities, exist.

While these hiding-places for criminals, cities, exist, and money, the most unnatural medium of exchange, is used, it is a waste of time to cry out against intemperance. People never were, nor ever will be, made better by force. If every legislature would adjourn, and every law-book was burnt, the world would be a million times better for the change.

Countless millions of human beings hav been murdered by Christians, all to make people better, and all done by law—force—and any law to force people to stop rum selling is the same in kind, and the more law the more crime. Abolish money, and you stop all crime, and never before. But as this can never be done, or if it can, not for a thousand years, it is folly to think of suppressing crime by law. Only one week ago, an anti-rum lecturer—there are no temperance lectures now—said, "There is more rum sold in Maine to-day than there ever was."

But is there nothing below all this fearful tide of intemperance? Where do people get the appetite or unnatural thirst for the abominable stuff that they make themselvs worse than beasts of? Men take into their stomachs that which an animal will not touch. Why is it? Has the food they eat anything to do with it? Has the vile narcotic tobacco, and the millions of gallons of filthy hog's-grease, and the abominable unhealthy food that people gorge themselvs with, anything to do with the cause of the unnatural thirst they hav? Has the unnatural generation of millions of children, begotten when the mother is entirely exhausted, and every drop of the father's blood is poisoned with tobacco, any cause for this thirst for unnatural stimulants?

A habit that has been thousands of years in forming will never be given up by force or law. While people work unnaturally, liv unnaturally, and generate unnaturally, intemperance will not only continue but increase. Every law that has been enacted for suppression of rum selling has been a curse, and only a curse, to the cause of temperance.

No person can save another until they are first saved themselvs. Those who cry out for law to stop any wrong-doing are not saved themselvs; they hav the same persecuting spirit that men had when they hung witches and burnt heretics. The world can never be redeemed, and brought into a condition of true happiness, until men stop making laws. Tyrants only try to compel people to giv up their bad habits. It never was done nor ever will be. It costs the people countless millions of hard days' work every year to support governments of force, every dollar of which is worse than wasted. Love, kindness, justice to the suffering poor, will redeem the world, but force, never.

SEWARD MITCHELL.

Newport, Maine, April 3, 1883.

P.S.—Since writing the foregoing I hav read J. Syphers's letter in the last TRUTH SEEKER. I am at a loss for words to express my true feelings. Such a long rigmarole of nonsense I hav not read for many a day. There is not a sensible sentence from beginning to end.

There is no need to say one word about Mrs. Severance's letter, except to call it grand and giv her our best blessing. If Mrs. Severance does not feel like defending the right to sell intoxicating drinks, I do. I hav the same right, unmolested, to sell whisky, or any other drinks, that you, Mr. Syphers, hav to sell flour. And whoever attempts to stop me by force I denounce as a tyrant, and not a particle better, as far as the principle is concerned, than is Anthony Comstock in using force in his infamous business in trying to suppress what he calls obscenity. When Freethinkers, Liberalists, or reformers, attempt to reform the world by the same means that Christians do, it looks as though the world was going backward.

S. M.

REPLY TO PROF. SYPHERS.

Discussion is a great educational method, and when properly conducted, brings out the salient points of a subject as nothing else can. In my article to which Brother Syphers replies I thought to illustrate the principle of prohibition by applying it to other things which I believe to be injurious, such as tobacco, tea, and coffee, thinking I could thus make it patent to anybody that the cure for such evils was not dictation; and that if not for them, no more so for alcohol, which is, in my judgment, always an injury when taken into the human system.

There are many people that think differently, and honestly believe that their health is made better, their strength augmented, and even their life prolonged, by the use of alcoholic stimulants. Now, hav I a right to forcible prevent such from obtaining and using it, any more than hav they to compel me to take it sick or well, or, in their judgment, in need of it? I say here most emphatically that a man has just as much right—so far as arbitrary interference from others is concerned—to drink whisky as he has tea or coffee, or even water. I hav a right, and more, I feel it my duty, to teach people so far as I can, and to exert all my influence, as I always hav done, to prevent people from using alcohol, tobacco, and a thousand other things now eaten and drank that I know to be injurious. If the prohibitionists would spend the time and money they now use to bring about their coercive measures, in teaching the people the effects of alcohol upon the human system, in ameliorating the condition of the laboring people by giving them the just fruit of their toil, so that discouragement, want, and despair would not drive them to their cups for temporary forgetfulness; in giving woman conditions in which children could be better born, and not as now tired and exhausted when brought into existence by antenatal overtaxation, thus causing a craving for stimulation to relieve temporarily their depleted nerve power, or worse still, as many are, with appetites inherited by the mother being ordered by her physician to take liquor in some form "to keep up her strength under her trying circumstances"—practical and important measures which lie at the very foundation of temperance—they would help humanity to greater freedom.

Selling diseased meat, as alluded to by the professor, it seems to me any thinking person will perceive is not an analogous case at all, as people then do not get what they desire; that is like selling a man adulterated whisky. In purchasing any article we are entitled to what we pay for. If we pay for whisky, we hav a right to demand that a genuin article be furnished us. If we pay for coffee, no one has a right to sell us peas.

Mr. Syphers queries, "How about the right of the rum seller to take the hard-earned money of his victim and giv him no equivalent?" Let me answer that by asking, who is to decide how a man shall spend his hard-earned money, himself or some one else?

I hav good reason to believe that drug medication ruins more constitutions, produces more wretchedness and misery in families, and destroys more lives than alcohol as a beverage. Even so learned a writer as John Mason Good, M.D., F.R.S., makes this statement, "Drug medication has destroyed more lives than war, pestilence, and famin combined." With such a belief, founded on substantial evidence, I would not be willing to hav laws enacted that would prevent people from the manufacture, sale, or use of drugs; better die individual men and women from the effects of any wrong practice than liv a race of slaves, to eat, drink, use, or be deprived of anything a king, pope, or the majority shall decide best.

Mr. Syphers must see the difference between horse-stealing and drinking whisky. The law should protect the individual in the possession of his own from the tyrannical usurpation by another in taking what does not belong to him. Friend Syphers wants nothing but whisky mentioned. Can he not see that by comparisons we illustrate principles?—and it seems to take a great many of them to make some persons perceive what seems to me as self-evident; and can he not see that if the principle of prohibition is correct when applied to whisky drinking as an evil, it would be equally proper when applied to any and every other evil practice?

It is news to me that the "mission of our government is to solve great moral questions!" In my judgment our government has nothing to do with morals. It's only proper mission is to protect every individual, in his liberty to do as he pleases, from any interference from any other individual. The evils of assuming to settle moral questions by legislation is illustrated in the case of the imprisonment of our reformers on the claim of their doing immoral acts, decided to be such by legislation; and I hav heard Comstock talk as eloquently over saving people from this hydra-headed monster obscenity. And "ye god's look not down this way when the great fight comes off," between Bennett, Heywood, Wakeman, and any other man that has brains enough to discover and comprehend the principles of freedom in contradistinction to tyrannical usurpation, as does friend Syphers over Dr. Severance's proposed contest for people to do as they please, whether it pleases her or not.

Was there ever a more untruthful, unjust, or senseless sentence written than this? "Moral suasion and education afford no protection against this evil." It is by education and moral influence that every reform work has been advanced, and we may just as well decide that we can legislate intellectuality into people as morality.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

QUITE A MISTAKE.

M. Farrington has called each Prohibitionist by name to stand forth for this principle once more, this time to defend it from the degradation of being a child of Christianity. It does not seem to be asking too much to ask that Prohibitionists be supposed of knowing whether or not they find themselvs associated with Christians or Freethinkers in the prosecution of the temperance work.

It will be at once admitted that certain forms of the temperance work hav been carried on by the church people in their own peculiar way, and that what has been so done by them has borne little, if any, good results. For instance, so far as I can remember, the Y. M. C. A. is the only institution that has ever hired a detectiv, or missionary, and furnished him with money to go from saloon to saloon on Sunday and purchase drink, and on Monday make a formal complaint against the dealers. In this sort of thing there is a species of hypocrisy that no Freethinker could submit himself to. Temperance work by means of long prayers, or any sort of prayers, or in the name of "Gospel Temperance," or under the guise of any sort of God-meetings, is a thing Freethinkers do not indulge in.

Mr. Farrington and Mr. Walker are both temperance men according to their own printed utterances, and in their own way exert an influence which tells for temperance. They know, as all intelligent persons must know, that when the rum and beer interests pass away that form of man that will run after and go crazy over the lochrymose lollipops like Moody and Sankey will also pass away.

The temperance movement has gone boldly forward along the natural highway of evolution from the timorous pleading of the half dozen reformed sots who began the Washingtonian movement to the determined demands of the Prohibitionists who to-day speak the voice of manhood and of right.

It is no longer the timid pleading of a few doubtful of the wisdom of their own position, but the firm, defiant notes of a host strong in the right and determined to win at all hazards.

What has Christianity to do with it? The churches can be had to-day for temperance meeting only as concessions to some favored few. The ordinary temperance tramp lifts up his voice only in some little struggling church on condition of dividing his poor little collection and holding his peace upon every other subject. Scarcely a church of wealth and style is to be found in the whole United States that does not lean upon some two or three wealthy distillers, brewers, or liquor-dealers to pay something more than a modicum of the annual church expenses. So long as this state of affairs exists, the leading spirits of every local temperance movement must necessarily be men outside of the pale of the church of Jesus Christ and him crucified.

Almost every temperance orator tells the people plainly that if the church people would take hold of this work and stand together for temperance, the success of the movement would be immeasurable.

The temperance movement is emphatically a Freethinkers' movement, and if the Freethinkers stand bravely together until they rid the world of intoxicating religions and intoxicating drinks posterity can hav in its calendar no more worshipful a saint than the Freethinkers themselvs. We must learn to "hew to the line, let the chips fall where they will."

LIBERTA.

Notes from the Field—Sturgis and Coloma.

February 3d will long be remembered for the great sleet, and the beginning of the disastrous floods, which destroyed two hundred lives and thirty million dollar's worth of property. It was on the morning of this day that I left Cleveland for Sturgis, Mich., passing through my nativ town, Tremont, destined in a few hours to be submerged and suffer serious loss of life and property.

On Sunday, February 4th, I commenced a course of four lectures at Sturgis, which in spite of clouds above and ice below were well attended.

Sturgis is a handsome town of 3,000 inhabitants, a very considerable portion of whom are Liberals. The finest church edifice here is owned by them. Christian bigotry was the impelling force that secured its erection. Some years ago the Spiritualists, having helped to build the Baptist church, occasionally used it for their meetings. But toleration is not a Baptist virtue, and they were soon denied its use. When the edict of expulsion came, a meeting of Liberals was immediately called, at which it was resolved to erect a building with a platform broad enough to hold an honest man, whatever his belief might be. The next day a site was selected and a large kiln of brick was purchased. At a set time, farmers and others came with their wagons; thirty-one teams were loaded with brick. These were formed into line, and then, with banners flying, the long procession moved triumphantly through the streets of Sturgis. It was a field-day for Liberalism. In less than sixty days the beautiful structure was completed and dedicated, not to God, but to humanity.

Among the Liberals whose acquaintance I formed while here were Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Gardner and daughter, Mr. Packard, and Mr. Baker.

My next engagement was at Coloma, a little town on the Chicago and West Michigan railroad, near the Eastern shore of Lake Michigan. I was billed for Wednesday evening, Feb. 7th. Wednesday morning I left Sturgis and proceeded to Kalamazoo, where I expected to reach Coloma via the South Haven branch of the Michigan Central. Owing to blockades the road was out of coal and no trains were running. I then boarded a Michigan Central train and came through to Niles, intending to take the Benton Harbor road. Trains on this road were snow-bound, and I was baffled the second time. One more chance remained, and that was to reach New Buffalo before the train went north. So I took the Central again. Unfortunately it was a through express, behind time; and dashed through New Buffalo at the rate of forty miles an hour. A revival was going, on and Coloma Christians were on their knees praying for Providence to interfere and keep the Infidel away. Like one of old I had successfully wrestled with this gentleman, but in this encounter it looked as though he was destined to win. Michigan City would be the first stop. On, on we sped, and the prison city was in sight. At the draw-bridge we halted for a moment. An eastern-bound train was slowly moving by. No time to parley or inquire. I sprang on board. It was the Chicago and West Michigan train, and I was safe. Coloma would be reached in time, and "Providence" be beaten.

At Coloma I gav three lectures to full houses. Like Sturgis, Coloma is quite a Liberal town, and what Sturgis has done by way of securing a Freethought temple, Coloma proposes doing at an early day.

The leading Liberals at this place are Dr. Ryno and his estimable wife, Dr. Baker, Minot Ingraham, S. P. Merrifield, R. R. Hewson, E. A. Hill, and B. S. Ryno and wife. Ably co-operating with them in the Liberal cause is Albion Smith, of Waterveleit, a little town near by. The father of Mr Smith, now lacking but a few years of one hundred, has been a life-long Freethinker, ever battling for the right. How I reverence these old war-scarred veterans! What a debt of gratitude we owe to them! And shall we let them suffer? Must such old pioneers as Hacker, Broom, and Tuttle plead, and plead in vain, for the bare necessities of life? Forbid it, Liberals!

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Experience.

Some of my orthodox friends with whom I occasionally hav a little talk seem to think that they hav completely vanquished me, and proven everything in their favor, when as a last resort for an argument they make the assertion that they "know the Bible to be true because they hav experienced the truth of it."

Now I would not giv a button for any person's experience unless it harmonizes with some scientific prediction.

We may experience the truth of a book—or, in other words, may indorse the author's sentiments, but it givs us no clue to the author's name. Because the Bible contains some true things does not prove it to be the word of God, even if it contained no gross vice and contemptible tales.

A person who relies on experience for truth is often blinded. The liquor drinker is blinded when he takes a stimulating cause for a good result. The arsenic eater has a most delightful experience at first from small doses, but he finds too late the sad result of sacrificing reason to experience. I could speak of many cases where what seemed to be a favorable result, meant death.

The Christian experience is that of impulse and feeling. I hav had the opportunity of attending several Christian revivals, and I never yet heard a person relate their experience but what I could trace it to some of the surrounding influences of this world, and also account for the differences in experience—the experiences of persons corresponding to temperament and mental development.

But all, at first, claim to be happy. And why? Because they believe they hav escaped eternal damnation. Well who would not? And then comes their sad experience with the devil, which is nothing more nor less than their reason admonishing them for their foolishness. Reason presents to them ideas antagonistic to their belief, and hence their experience in a fight with the devil.

The Christian experience is a proof of itself that there is no supernatural power connected with it. It is simply absurd for Christians to claim that they hav experienced any divine truth in the killing of an innocent man to save the guilty; or in the fact that God, as spoken of in the Bible, acted like a blood-thirsty savage who could accomplish nothing without a slaughter of human lives. OSCAR A. BUCK.

English Idol Manufacturers.

It is a curious and not very flattering fact that Christian manufacturers in the foremost Christian land should be engaged in producing objects of idolatry with which to supply heathen countries. Alluding to this description of English trade, a copy of the London Punch has a few telling paragraphs—not "founded upon," but all fact. "Having learned from the 'Record,'" says Punch, "that a very brisk manufacture of Hindoo idols is carried on by a most respectable and orthodox house at Birmingham, we hav, though we confess it with some difficulty, obtained a list of the articles. The bill we hav had duly translated from Hindostanee:

"Yamen—God of Death: In fine copper. Very tasteful.

"Nirond—King of the Demons: In great variety. The giant he rides is of the boldest design, and his saber of the present style.

"Varonnin—God of the Sun: Very spirited. Crocodile in brass, and whip in silver.

"Canberen—God of Wealth: This god is of the most exquisit workmanship, having stimulated the best powers of the manufacturers.

"Smaller demi-gods and minor demons in every variety. [This last sentence is in capitals in the text as well as the names of the gods.]

"No credit, and discount allowed for ready money."

Religious Liberty Endangered.

From the Christian Register.

It is encouraging to see our Presbyterian contemporary, the Interior, defending civil liberty against the fanaticism of the English society whose prosecution of the Freethinker for blasphemy has provoked the just indignation of English Liberals. The Interior says:

"The English rationalists, while they might be ashamed of such an exhibition for the sake of the good repute of their nation, could ask no better means for breaking down public respect for Christianity than that now afforded by the operations of this new society of indiscreet and fanatical zealots. The issue thus raised will inevitably result in a victory for religious liberty, but it will not end with the vindication of religious rights. The sentence of a man to a year's hard labor in the penitentiary, and another to nine months, and another to three months, and the lodgment of an innocent newsdealer in jail with a heavy fine, all for the expresssion of religious or irreligious convictions, is an assault upon English liberty that will arouse the most intense and vindictiv animosity against the religious organizations of the realm. The English Parliament is an absurdly conservativ body, but the most stolid statesman cannot fail to see that, in re-establishing religious persecution, he is lighting a fire in comparison with which the Irish troubles are insignificant."

English love of "fair play" has been pretty well stirred up by the late prosecutions for blasphemy, resulting in the conviction of the editors and publishers of the Freethinker for "blasphemous libel." The editor has been sentenced to twelve months' hard labor in prison, the proprietor to nine months, and the publisher to three months. The unjust ruling of the judge has brought down upon him indignant rebuke. The conviction was secured through the revival of an old law defining criminal blasphemy to be "any contumelious reproach or profane scoffing against the Christian religion or the holy scriptures, and any act exposing the holy scriptures and the Christian religion to ridicule, contempt, or derision." While we cannot approve of coarse and irreverent assaults even upon superstitions that deserve rebuke, yet it is evident that if such a law were to be enforced in these days, the foundations of civil and religious liberty would be utterly shattered. There are narrow-minded sectarians who would be glad to revive and enforce similar moss-grown laws in this country, but, we trust, with no such shameless success. We hav little sympathy with Col. Ingersoll's method; but we rejoice that he is able to speak his mind with none to molest him or make him afraid. The Passion Play in New York may be in bad taste; but we cannot see that the law has any right to interfere with it. Civil and religious liberty must go hand in hand. We cannot endanger one without endangering the other.

A Debt of Gratitude.

From the Universe.

The Freethinkers of Calilornia and of the entire Pacific coast owe a debt of gratitude to the Jewish people for the generous and hospitable manner in which they received the late and lamented D. M. Bennett upon his arrival in this city from his tour around the world. His first hearty greeting was from a Jewish Freethinker, Mr. A. Berenz, Sr., doing business at 140 Montgomery st., who hired a boat and sailed out some two miles to meet the famous voyager. It was a Jewish Freethinker, Mr. Philip Cowen, a well-known merchant of Petaluma, who sought a place of comfort for Mr. Bennett that he might rest in peace a few days after his long and arduous journey, and that place of comfort was the hospitable home of Mr. Wm. H. Pepper, residing near Petaluma. It was in a Jewish newspaper office—the Jewish Times—of this city that Mr. Bennett made himself perfectly at home while in our midst, and it was there that he received letters from all parts of the world, sent in its care and awaiting him. It was in the store of a Jewish Freethinker, Mr. E. Frank, the well-known clothing merchant, that all the boxes and packages of books addressed to Mr. Bennett were safely stored until his arrival. Mr. Max Frank was largely instrumental in getting up the meeting at Platt's Hall in honor of Mr. Bennett, and between them a warm friendship existed, as both were nativs of the state of New York. It was two young Jewish boys, nativs of California, Michigan, and Alexander Frank, who waited upon Mr. Bennett and with almost filial devotion attended to his every want. They packed and unpacked his boxes, arranged his curios, and, in a word, fitted him out splendidly for his trip across the continent. If there is any remembering in the beyond our good friend Bennett has reason to remember the kind acts of the Frank family to "the stranger within their gates."

It is with pride we note these facts. They illustrate the natural goodness and nobleness of the Jewish heart. Mr. Bennett had been followed up and persecuted by his enemies; not content with imprisoning him they sought to defame him by the most infamous means. When he arrived in this city last year all the newspaper offices were flooded with the vilest documents emanating from his persecutors at the East, and with the intent of destroying his influence here. His friends and the lovers of justice rallied to his support, and we see what the result was—a triumph for the great Freethinker, the immortal man whose words hav pierced superstition to the heart. In this triumph many of our Jewish citizens took a leading part, and for this noble and humane conduct we, as Freethinkers, here and elsewhere, should hold the Jewish people in grateful memory.

Legislation Best Nipped in the Bud.

From the Sun.

The committee on public education in the Assembly must be composed of powerful intellects. The only conspicuous result of the deliberations of that body during the present session is a favorable report upon a bill in these words:

"Any person who shall sell, loan, or giv to any minor under sixteen years of age any dime novel or book of fiction, without first obtaining the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment or by a fine not to exceed fifty dollars."

This measure appears to hav proceeded from the mighty mind of Mr. Abel Goddard, of St. Lawrence county.

A schedule ought to be annexed to the bill prescribing legislativ definitions of a dime novel and a book of fiction.

Indeed, why put in dime novels at all? The words "any book of fiction" would seem to include novels of all prices, whereas a law against the sale of ten-cent stories would not be violated by selling the same works at nine cents or eleven cents apiece.

But what are the books of fiction against which Mr. Goddard wants to guard the youth of St Lawrence? "Robinson Crusoe" and "Cinderella," "Tom Brown at Rugby" and "David Coperfield," "Pelham" and "The Newcomes?" A mere reprint of the parables of our Lord would be a book of fiction, for it was by simple and striking stories that Christ taught some of the most impressiv lessons to be found in the scriptures.

When a man undertakes to deal by legislation with the injurious influences of a form of literature which seems occasionally to excite criminal tendencies in youthful readers, he needs to be a man of sense. If he is such a person, he soon learns that law can do so little in the way of a remedy that it had better let the subject alone.

JOHN SANDERSON, the witty author of "The American in Paris," once made the following remark touching unnegotiable clerical "paper" which he held: "They will take the minister's word, unquestioned, every Sunday for the eternal future, but won't take his note with only ninety days to run!"

A Woman's Account of the Heywood Case.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: It is a long time since I hav written much for your paper, feeling and knowing that the pen of younger and more able writers demanded all the space; but an event of such great interest to all workers in moral reform has just transpired in Boston that I feel like asking room to giv a woman's view in relation to it. And first let me write in "large letters," so that all may read it, Victory, victory, victory! The malicious and unprincipled agent of the New York Vice Society was thoroughly beaten in Judge Nelson's court in Boston in the case of Mr. Heywood, indicted for sending obscene matter through the United States mails.

I hav been a very close observer of all the proceedings, called legal, since the arrest made in October last. I was at the court held by Commissioner Hallett, where Mr. Heywood was examined. I saw how fierce the government was to find guilt in the accused and how very respectfully Anthony Comstock was treated. I do not complain that a court treats its officials (or rather government officials) with civility, but how a decent man in or out of court should find it necessary to go out of his way to treat with respect a man of the character of Comstock, as shown by his own testimony, was and is a problem. To prevent Mr. Heywood's committal to prison, by giving bonds in one thousand dollars, appeared the venerable and most honorable Elizur Wright. I can understand very well how any one with the worship of the good and true, as personified in man or woman, would involuntarily uncover the head in the presence of Elizur Wright. Long may he liv to bless the world by his practice of justice, mercy, and love! Mr. Wright came forward, and when asked to swear by the commissioner, said: "I hav no particular objection to swearing, if you wish it, but I would just as lief swear by the multiplication table as by God;" and so he affirmed. I left that court with a heavy heart. I saw that if it were the final court, there was no hope for any favor, and of the court to come I knew nothing. I was not favorably impressed by the counsel, Mr. Pickering, and so expressed myself. Mr. Tucker expressed his own view, and that of many other of Mr. Heywood's friends, in the next issue of Liberty, advising or suggesting that he conduct his own case. Whether Mr. Pickering took offense or otherwise, I do not know; but at the sitting of the court to which the case was remanded, Mr. Heywood appeared without counsel. Mr. Searls, who was associated with Mr. Pickering, conformed to etiquet and gave up the case, at the same time moving to quash the proceedings, because of some technical flaw, I suppose, in the indictment. I am not learned in law or law phrases, and so beg pardon of the profession if I hav blundered in my statements. The motion was not considered; but because the defendant was left without defense, and as time was necessary, in such an emergency, Judge Nelson consented to adjourn the case to the April term of the court.

It is due here to say of three gentlemen learned in law, Messrs. Searls, Cobb, and Stillman, that they were diligent in doing all that they could, both in supplying information concerning the law, and adducing facts which were of great use. Mr. Cobb suggested that the government must be called upon to prove that the obnoxious advertisment was deposited in the mail by Mr. Heywood, and really that was the card which, in the technicality of the law, was the winning one.

So much for the preface. Now I must tell you of the beginning of the final end, and of the way to and by which it was reached. My friends in Boston sent to me at Raynham the notice of the day and hour on which the trial would commence, the 10th of April, 10 o'clock. At that hour, in company with my cousin, I found myself in the United States Court, listening to the crier who opened the session, and then by order of the marshal, ex-Governor Banks, made as comfortable with easy chairs, etc., as possible, the occasion being so trying. The jury were brought in, sworn, and took their seats; there were but few present, save the court and its officials, at the opening, but gradually the room filled; some eight or ten women, including the mother, sisters, and daughter of the wife of Mr. Heywood. The postmaster, Mr. Gregory, of Princeton, with some several other men from that town, men from other towns, old-time Abolitionists, citizens of Boston, two women besides myself, and Comstock, the instigator of crime, were called to our feet, to swear to tell the truth; some men took the oath, others with the three women affirmed. Mr. Gregory said the name on the wrapper which contained the paper in which was found the advertisment was Mr. Heywood's handwriting.

I beg pardon of my readers, I ought to hav told them that the court threw out two of the three counts in the indictments when they were read, which seemed to me an omen of good; these were those which charged that "Leaves of Grass" and "Cupid's Yokes" were obscene, not designating any particular portion of them. The reason of this wholesale condemnation, I think, very few of the readers of The Truth Seeker would be able to guess without help, so here I transcribe it: "Said the United States attorney by his assistant, that as the records of the court are copied by a lady, the obscenity of the books was too apparent to giv a lady to copy."

Judge Nelson, after being referred to the two or three "prohibited poems" and some sentences of sexual physiology, and last but not least the little poem in "Cupid's Yokes," written by Dr. Watts, in which the phrase "Cupids yoke the doves" occurs, announced that in "his opinion the court is robust enough to endure all that he found," and so those two counts were lost, stricken out.

In return, the government by its indictments was now to prove that the notice of the "vaginal syringe," known as the "Comstock syringe," was an obscene advertisment, that its purpose came under prohibition by the statute, and that Mr. Heywood had committed these grave offenses.

The proof furnished was this; the postmaster, Mr. Gregory, said 'twas the handwriting of Mr. Heywood; supposed it went through the mail, did not know; supposed it was put into the office by Mr. Heywood, did not know. That was all the evidence the government had, save what was to come through Comstock. I once heard Stephen S. Foster, in describing his arrest and imprisonment in Concord Jail, say that it was providential, inasmuch as through his incarceration were brought to light cruelties that would blacken the government of a company of pirates—be it providential in the case if a woman's instincts are the providence; I had heard every word of the testimony at all the courts, and by that knowledge obtained the right to say on affirmation that this man, Comstock, a government spy, had falsified himself in two separate instances, each in regard to the aliases used in the decoy letters. Mr. Tucker, of Liberty, also remembered so as to be able to testify to his contradiction of statement.

Every man on the witness stand testified to the high moral character of the defendant, save only his accuser. I think there were more than twenty persons all voluntarily testifying in his favor. The court gave wide license to Mr. Heywood, because it was not to be supposed that in conducting the case he might not sometimes go contrary to established usages; he was treated with the respect due to a gentleman by judge, marshal, and all the inferior officers. The plea was an effort of which anyone might be proud; nearly five hours were occupied in its delivery. I hav listened to the oratory of Ingersoll, to the masterly argument of Wakeman, to the close-cut logic of Burleigh, to the unanswerable reasoning of Garrison, to the condemnation of sin and the utter damnation of the man or woman who wantonly wrongs and oppresses a human being, by Pillsbury and Foster, but in no instance hav I listened to anything higher in moral tone, grander in utterance, more pathetic in appeal, more perfect in logic—in fine, in all the essentials that the occasion required and demanded. Some of the jury were moved to tears, and when at last, in the manly strength of a good conscience, Mr. Heywood said, "I hav nothing to retract, nothing to regret; I only ask to be allowed the right to my opinion, to utter that opinion, to publish it, and transmit it through the mails," I felt sure that those twelve men would say that demand was only justice. When the charge was given we, the friends, felt sure of the verdict. "You will not allow the opinions of the defendant to hav any weight in the verdict; you will, if you hav any doubt regarding the mailing of that particular paper by the defendant, giv him the benefit of the doubt. Was the notice an advertisment or only a notice? and then, may not the accuser in this case hav been an accomplice by his fanatical zeal? Consider well, and in every doubt giv the accused the benefit. Was Mr. Comstock's testimony valid? or was it contradictory?" etc., etc. Such was the import—not every word perhaps as I hav written it, but very nearly the same.

Oh, how in my heart of hearts I blessed Judge Nelson. The jury retired, were out three hours, in that time were dined, and came in with a unanimous acquittal.

So has ended this trial, costing so much anxiety to all lovers of freedom and such fearful expectancy to friends. Who shall measure its consequences? The attending of this trial by myself was a cup whose contents were not agreeable to the taste. I would hav avoided it had I not felt it a duty. I do not agree with Mr. Heywood in many of his theories, at least in some of them, but I believe in every person's rights being protected, and the more obnoxious to me the theories or opinions holden, the more sacred the duty to demand protection in the utterance. Lest I be misunderstood let me say that I do believe that woman's right to the control of her own person should not be controled by statute law or Vice Society, as to the number of children she may hav.

But let all lovers of justice remember that such is the law, and though Mr. Heywood has triumphed over his persecutors in this instance, the fangs of the serpent are not destroyed. All judges are not Nelsons; there are many Benedicts. All juries are not wise. None of us are safe while the church controls the state. If we let our dislike to being called lovers of obscenity prevent our work for freedom, we are not true to the demands of duty. Comstock said under oath that he was a Christian. That assertion is a good text for a sermon upon Christianity.

I must close, dating this letter from the elegant and most hospitable home of Walter C. Wright, of Medford, a man whose good deeds are so much like religion that if they were practiced by the world generally the earth would receive a new name—heaven.

Jubilate.

WRITTEN ON HEARING OF HEYWOOD'S ACQUITTAL.

Freedom and common sense hav won the day,
And hope grows joyous with the rising day;
Spite of the clouds the splendid beams flash on,
And the scared vermin slink before the dawn;
The chains are bursting, and the mind of man
Defiant holds its right all truth to scan.
Once more advance is made, and ne'er again
Will man fall backward from this step's large gain
That which has been achieved is for all time.
Fate has been conquered by a deed sublime;
That now its face is set to newer light,
And there is no reverse, no change to night.
An epoch has been marked, and freedom's brow
Wears a new jewel, on the world's march to glow.

Samuel P. Putnam.

Dies Iræ.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Sometime near the year 1255 a Franciscan monk called Thomas of Celano, having nothing useful to amuse himself about, wrote a piece of rhyme in Latin, which he called Dies Iræ—meaning day of wrath. The first verse of it runs like this:

"Dies iræ, dies illa,
Salvet sæclum in favilla,
Teste David cum Sibylla."

Below I hav endeavored to reproduce this poem or hymn in English verse. An extensiv ignorance of the Latin tongue has been a somewhat serious hindrance to a proper preservation of the original narrativ; but from previous translations—of which, according to the Independent, there are a hundred, the present swelling the number to a hundred and one—I hav been enabled to gather its general drift. The rhyme, rhythm, and versification, it will be seen, are all right. Hoping that my humble effort will meet the approbation of the editor of the Independent, who claims that a good translation of Dies Iræ is impossible, I submit the following without further comment, except to remark that a perusal of the original is necessary to a full appreciation of its merit.

George E. Macdonald.

On that day of wrath and fire,
Fumes of sulphur running higher,
Every sinner shall perspire.

There shall be a conflagration
Far beyond prognostication
Or our highest expectation.

Gabriel then will sound his trumpet,
Grab each dam-ned soul and dump it,
While the saints get up and hump it;

Death and nature in surprisement
See the general uprisement
To attend this grand assizement.

And the book wherein are counted
All the hairs our heads surmounted
Will be read and "soldiers" bountied.

When the judge brings down his gavel
Every contumacious slave 'll
Humbly contemplate his navel.

How shall wretched I present a
Meek demurer and dissenter
If in heaven I may not enter?

I will file complete denial—
Motion for another trial
Ere the pouring of the vial.

Peter, keeper of the gateway,
Open wide and let me straightway
Amble up that heavenly great way.

Since thy parsons me solicit
In vernacular explicit,
To eschew all things illicit;

And since I hav heard their teaching,
Undergone protracted preaching,
Unto me thy hand be reaching.

The floor with myself I'm wiping,
Terror at my vitals griping,
Holy Peter, hear my piping!

If to Magdalen thou'st spoken,
Don't see altogether broken
This poor sinner from Hoboken.

On thy earth I am excrescent,
In thy precepts acquiescent—
Keep me from the incandescent.

'Mongst thy sheep I'd be bell-wether,
Call the chosen ones together,
As with birds of single feather.

While in flames with demons dire
Souls externally expire,
Place me in thy heavenly choir.

Oh! that day of burnin', blist'rin',
Dynamite and nitro-glycerin!
Fold me from that fiery crater
In thy sweet refrigerator.

Letters from Friends.

HARLAN, April 6, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find enclosed $7.50, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to the persons named, and to pay up my subscription. With my best wishes for the cause, and the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, I remain, Yours respectfully,

C. W. POTTER.

[We return thanks to our friend for his efforts to extend the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is appreciated, we assure him. We need more in order to keep the price down to $2.50 and hope that friends in other places will do as Mr. Potter has done.—Ed. T. S.]

CEDAR SPRINGS, March 22, 1883.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I, P. M. Aldrich, of the above place, will giv $5 to any charitable institution for the following information:

1. Where the devil ever got drunk or had anything to do with whisky in any shape.
2. Where he ever betrayed a Jewish maiden.
3. Where he ever taught immorality.
4. Where he ever told a lie.
5. Where he ever advised war.
6. Where he ever advised the shedding of innocent blood in any shape.

P. M. ALDRICH.

PAROWAN, March 24, 283.

MR. EDITOR: You continue to send my paper, although the time for which I hav paid is out. Now, that is a great favor to me, for if Jere. Black does say that Utah is such a wealthy place that all the vagabonds of the land hav congregated here to plunder the saints, we who are fast here know too well that the old man was vaporing for coin. For it is a place of poverty, not of wealth, and for that reason your subscriber has been compelled to defer or neglect his duty for many days.

Thanking you kindly for continuing my paper, I ask you to find inclosed $3 for this year, "Self-Contradictions of the Bible," and "Orthodox Hash," by Barlow. Fraternally yours, H. H. CASH.

MOUNTAIN VIEW, March 16, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2.50 for my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year.

On Sunday, March 7, 283, Dr. J. L. York delivered one of his interesting and characteristic lectures, entitled "The Theology of Nature and the World We Liv in," to an appreciativ audience, they all, save a few, being well pleased. He was not as radical as he usually is, but still it was a masterly effort. We expect to make some arrangements toward engaging him when he returns from his lecture tour to deliver a course of lectures.

I hope that the trial subscribers whom I sent you will continue to take the paper, as they seem to be well pleased with it. I will try and find some more three-months' men for you.

Yours for the Liberal cause, DAVID JENKINS.

ALMOND, April 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $1 to pay for No. 14, Vol. X., you sent me. Please enter my name as a subscriber, and I will send more money in a few months, and something to help the Monument Fund.

Last August, when coming from the Watkins Convention, as I pressed Mr. Bennett's hand, bidding him good-bye at Elmira, he going east, I west, I little thought how soon death would end his noble work, but such is life. Of him it can be truly said his works do follow him; I am glad THE TRUTH SEEKER still livs. The books he wrote will continue to speak away down the ages, when foolish theology will be a thing of the past, and the Bible will hav assumed its proper place, simply a relic of barbarian ignorance and superstition. He has erected for himself a monument that will endure when the most lasting granit shall hav crumbled to dust.

O. D. WALLACE.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR; I had almost resolved to discontinue my subscription to your valuable paper, observing that my subscription had expired. Let me state frankly my objection. With all its Liberality and fearlessness in exposing error, its weekly perusal is to me a source of irritation, and must be to all Spiritualists. of which class of Liberals doubtless you hav many on your list.

Our late lamented friend, D. M. Bennett, well understood this when he tried to keep within the pale of decorum some of his asinine contributors when treating on the subject of Spiritualism. Why not treat it with the same courtesy and respect due every other philosophical subject? For I assure you that behind much that is manifestly absurd and grotesque there lies a substratum of deep philosophy not to be carelessly derided. In the ranks of Spiritualism may be found the deep radical Darwinian philosopher; the enthusiastic evangelical Bible inflexible, shaping everthing to suit his early teachings; the awe-struck, timid Methodist, who, while admitting some of its wonders, can conceive nothing higher than the devil and his imps in full activity. So you perceive your "eternal sleepers" hav something yet to learn. At any rate, let them treat the subject seriously, and ever remember that everything is a miracle until it is scientifically explained. The world is full of familiarized miracles.

The inclosed $3 for a continued subscription will fully show that "D. B. is not dead, but sleepeth."

D. BRUCE.

NEW ERA, March 17, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for this year. The paper is better than ever; go ahead! If I were a Spiritualist, I should start a quarrel with D. M. Bennett for leaving just when he was most wanted. The Christians of New Era hav not only shut me out of the school-house, but hav actually got a bushel of eggs for me and threaten me with arrest for blasphemy the first time I come to town; but Doc. Spaulding says if I will only preach he will find the school-house, and I will. My text is "Christian Tolerance in all Ages." The fun of the thing is, the Baptists (led on by a certain Sister Osborn) and the Methodists (led by a "blowhard" by the name of Thompson and the circuit rider whose name is Blake) hav had a scandal quarrel, and of course this is Logan's opportunity, and I will make some of the Christian fur fly.

JOHN M. LOGAN, M.D.

BROOKSTON, March, 13, E.M. 283.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Say, do you feel that you are orphanized since the deplorable fall of your noble protector? Please accept a mite of consolation! The friend of your earliest infancy yet livs, and would gladly come to your aid and comfort, at eighty-five years of age. I am now before you, Mr. Editor, to solicit the use of your columns to ask a question, or rather favor, of the readers, and through your paper indirectly of the readers of every Liberal paper in the United States, or, indeed, in Christendom. The question is concerning the propriety of changing the common calendar of to-day, to wit, A.D. 1883. I am willing to adopt E.M. 283 in place of A.D. 1883.

I fondly hope that every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be kind enough to send his or her vote for or against the Bruno Calendar (E.M. 283) by a postal-card to J. A. Rutherford, Brookston, Lamar Co., Texas.

Now, kind friend, just conclude that the world is your home, and to do good is your religion, and try to send me postal-cards. As it will not be practicable for me to hand you the dimes for your expense and trouble, I'll propose what is better. If I receive one hundred cards in this case, I pledge myself to donate a church or school bell, worth $25, to Center Hill High School, located in Lamar Co., Texas, now in operation, under the superintendence of Prof. Lackey. Since I think of it, I'll extend my bequest to the readers of the Liberal or progressiv papers in Christendom who may chance to see it. If the result of this test should afford much light, the public shall hav it.

Come on, brothers and sisters, you should work while it is day. He who does not feel under obligation to be of benefit to his fellows does not deserve to hav lived.

We are trying to get out a new edition of the class of Ingersoll, Elmina, and others, at our Center Hill High School, and you know it would look well for us to hav a bell. Roll in one hundred postals and you hav me.

J. A. RUTHERFORD.

HELENA, March 26, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been reading W. S. Bell's "Liberty and Morality," and, with your permission, would say to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that it is as good as the very best I hav ever seen on that subject. It is indeed much in little. Mr. Bell has done a good thing by sending out this little pamphlet, and Liberals should see to it that it is put into the hands of the worshipers of the unknown God—commonly called Christians.

I am quite sure that were those who hav written so much of late in THE TRUTH SEEKER in support of prohibition to get "Liberty and Morality," and read it till they thoroughly understand the subject, they would undoubtedly see where they might occupy their time and talent to much better advantage than in defending such an absurdity.

Legislation has always been the greatest bane in the march of civilization. When legislators hav attempted to correct any of the so-called social or moral evils by legal enactments, how often hav the innocent been made to suffer, while many that were really guilty went unscathed of punishment? Take for example (as it is first in our minds) the case of our lamented Bennett. As a rule we hav too much law—or, as Gerrit Smith once said, "they are simply acts, not worthy the name of laws." But the difficulty has been to get the obnoxious acts repealed, or they linger along for years until they become a dead letter on our statute books. Instead of progressing, we spend the greater portion of our time in tearing down and clearing away the rubbish that has been piled up in our way through ignorance and superstition.

Now, if Allen goes before the Legislature and gets an act passed to regulate Brown's social and moral affairs, Allen, by that very act, virtually says to Clark, Jones, or ten thousand others, "Go in, boys; if there is anything about my shanty that does not suit your individual tastes, why, just prohibit it at once." Now, if Allen does not say this, then he is a tyrant—an unprincipled scoundrel.

But, Mr. Editor, I only intended to call attention to "Liberty and Morality" when I sat down; but, if you think this worth the room, all right; if not, consign it to the waste-basket.

W. P. BROOKS.

PARSIPPANY, April 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: When THE TRUTH SEEKER came to hand on the Friday following after the death of the noble editor, we could hardly realize that D. M. Bennett was no more. All regretted to hear of his death.

My father and brother called in his office when they were in New York, nearly two weeks before he died, and had a talk with him. He told them that he had a slight cold, but did not think it would amount to much. We hav his books of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and though I had not read all of them, the first volume (the only one I hav read through yet) I consider interesting in the extreme. It givs more information, for so little money and the time required to write it, than any book I ever read regarding the occupations, customs, and education of the people.

In the death of D. M. Bennett we feel that the world has lost one of the most earnest and indefatigible workers that Liberalism has ever produced. THE TRUTH SEEKER now is firm as an oak after a tempestuous storm, in its belief of what it will advocate. I wish to say through the columns of your paper that I greatly admire Mr. Peck's arguments in regard to Mr. Town. In conclusion I would say, "May THE TRUTH SEEKER long liv to show the Christian bigots that it was not established for nought."

M. FLORENCE HENNION.

WILLIAMSTOWN, April 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Reading the article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 7th, the account of Thomas Paine's fears of being left alone reminds me of one Lewis Mertzs, a devoted Christian, gentleman whose whole soul's aim seemed to be to do good, be moral upright, and truthful. Having been his father's family physician for more than twenty years, and his for nearly ten years, I know whereof I affirm. If he did a wrong it was through his ignorance, and, when discovered, he would make acknowledgment and right all wrongs. A good citizen, a kind husband, an affectionate father, a neighbor beloved and respected by all who knew him, always referred to as an exemplary Christian. Last winter, while attending a Methodist revival meeting, where the heated apartments of the old gentleman so often referred to in those meetings—the great Methodist scarecrow used to drive sinners to the mourners' bench to make a great revival (as Josh Billings says about loafers in cholera times, "Each counts one"), Mr. Mertzs became fearfully wrought upon, and as I attended him up to the day we sent him to the asylum, where he still remains, he told me and everyone that his savior had forsaken him, and that the devil was continually near him and at times laid hold on him; that he could see the devil in a personal form, and he became so fearful he could not be left alone for one minute. Although his general health seemed good, he was compelled to hav company all the time, and his brother told me that when he went out to work Lewis would remain so near him through fear that he would hav to quit work and go to the house and stay close to him so as to keep him quiet. He is now in the asylum at Columbus, Ohio.

The question is, What made this gentleman so fearful of the devil after leading such a strict moral life? He never read anything but the Bible and religious books, and had a good training and example from infancy up. His aged parents are still living, loved and respected for their moral and truthful life, and all of his brothers and sisters are here with us, as good citizens as the state holds.

CENTERVILLE, March 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The good TRUTH SEEKER keeps coming, containing good food for serious thought and reflection to all who read its fearless, instructiv pages. I seldom see a letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER from this infernal priest-ridden territory, where the old Bible Jew-god reigns supreme among his infernal host of lecherous Mormon scallawags calling themselvs saints of the most high. Here they are living in fine style, defying the laws of the United States government, and outraging society with their filthy debaucheries. Truly the Bible God's chosen and covenant people are peculiar! Then we hav quite a number of other kinds of theological priests, with their new god-houses and gospel-shops, all referring to that contradictory book (the Bible), which is a reproach to the world and a sore curse to human reason.

Many of your readers hav expressed my heartfelt sorrow in the death of the noble founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER, D. M. Bennett, and I can sympathize with Mrs. Bennett in her sad bereavement, as I hav lost my beloved wife. Many seem to think that we shall never see or hear another such a person as Mr. Bennett. But hark, the same power by which Mr. Bennett was actuated is not dead. No, but it will bring, and is bringing, other great minds to the front.

I am glad THE TRUTH SEEKER is losing none of its former interest. So, Mr. Macdonald, don't show any quarter to Bible gods and sons and Christianity, but pour in red-hot shot of truth into the priestly ranks, and let us see what can be done to rid the world of the infamy and curse of theological priestcraft.

Please to send me the pamphlet "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," by Mr. Bennett. I inclose twenty-five cents in stamps for it.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

Poetry.

Reward.

Yes, call him mad who dares to climb
The rock-strewn path of Truth—
You who would never dream to peer
Beyond the ken of youth—
You who never see the seed
Till the bursting of the grain,
And can never feel the sunshine
Glowing just beyond the rain!

Call him mad who, pushing forward
Full a century in the van,
Plants his banner on the hill tops—
Claims Man's leader is a man!
And if you must stop and linger,
Afraid to breast the hill,
Stand back in lower darkness—
Make room for him who will!

Float in your idle vessels
Close within the harbor bar;
Make it dance among the ripples,
Though you may not venture far;
Lie and wonder at the waters,
Stretching out so wild and free;
Somewhere there's a better sailor
Who will dare to put to sea!

Sleep you then in perfect safety
Close within your guarded fort;
Make the war of earth a pastime,
And the fight of life a sport;
Linger, if you will, in pleasure,
While the weary hours lag;
Somewhere there's a bolder sailor
Who will carry on the flag!

Call him mad! And yet forever
Some grand leader will be there
Pushing upward to the summit—
Pushing up toward clearer air;
You may stay in lower darkness,
Clasping close your clanking chain;
Some one yet will strike it from you,
Making free the heart and brain!

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

Are surer and quicker in action than any other Magnetic Garments.

They are made out of lace or netting which makes them the coolest and lightest appliance made.

Their magnets have on them an armature or keeper which makes them continuously curative. No others have this necessary addition. See any work on Natural Philosophy to see how necessary the Armature is.

The VICTORIA is so constructed that the patient can remove the magnets at pleasure and wash all the goods. This cannot be done with any others.

Paralysis, Asthma, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Female and Spinal Diseases, Rheumatism, Sick Headaches, Dyspepsia, General Debility and all diseases arising from deficient nerve force, there is no other treatment that is as successful as the wearing of VICTORIA MAGNETIC GOODS.

All other garments are slow in action.

VICTORIA is quick and sure. All other appliances oblige the patients to hope for to-morrow.

VICTORIA gives help to-day.

Send for circulars, price lists, etc., before you buy of others!

Beware of Cheap and Fraudulent Appliances which will not hold their currents without the aid of the ARMATURE!

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol., 12 mo., 864 pp., cloth. Illustrated. Price $1.50.

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This history contains Gibbon's theological writings, separate from his historical and miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity.

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the origin of Christianity, is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, and other eminent Christian historians who have edited editions of Gibbon's works; and the pious but scholarly remarks of the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon, are also given in full.

Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full glit, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove, is

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

How great soever the results arising for any of the antique religions of the past may be supposed, by many, to hav been, and howsoever closely they may be thought to hav been connected in the great work of evolution through which the race has passed, one thing is morally certain, they are no longer adapted to the wants and needs of the present. The world has outgrown all the imperfect and febulous theories and doctrins of olden time, and is reaching out for something better, something higher, something truer. Wise he is who is prepared and willing to step forward with the advance guard, and help to "ring out the old and ring in the new."—D. M. Bennett.

"THE sweeping blast, the sky o'ercast,"
The joyless winter day
Let others fear, to me more dear
Than all the pride of May;
The tempest's howl, it soothes my soul,
My griefs it seems to join;
The leafless trees my fancy please—
Their fate resembles mine.—Burns's Winter.

CURIOUS, I say, and not sufficiently considered; how everything does co-operate with all things; not a leaf rotting on the highway but is indissoluble portion of solar and stellar systems; no thought, word, or act of man but has sprung withal out of all men and works sooner or later, recognizably or irrecognizably, on all men! It is all a tree: circulation of sap and influences, mutual communication of every minutest leaf with the lowest talon of a root, with every other greatest and minutest portion of the whole. The tree Igdrasil, that has its roots down in the kingdoms of Hela and Death, and whose boughs overspread the highest heaven!—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

THE TREE.

I love thee when thy swelling buds appear,
And one by one their tender leaves unfold,
As if they knew that warmer suns were near,
Nor longer sought to hide from winter's cold;
And when with darker growth thy leaves are seen
To veil from view the early robin's nest,
I love to lie beneath thy waving screen
With limbs by summer's heat and toil oppress'd;
And when the autumn's winds hav stripped thee bare,
And round thee lies the smooth, untrodden snow,
When nought is thine that made thee once so fair,
I love to watch thy shadowy form below,
And through thy leafless arms to look above
On stars that brighter beam when most we need their love. —Jones Very.

MAN dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep.—Job xiv, 10-12.

HERE lies the gentle humorist who died
In the bright Indian summer of his fame!
A simple stone, with but a date and name,
Marks his secluded resting-place beside
The river that he loved and glorified.
Here in the autumn of his days he came,
But the dry leaves of life were all aflame
With tints that brightened and were multiplied.
How sweet a life was his; how sweet a death!
Living to wing with mirth the weary hours,
Or with romantic tales the heart to cheer;
Dying, to leave a memory like the breath
Of summers full of sunshine and of showers,
A grief and gladness in the atmosphere.
—Longfellow on Irving.

WE know that one man is generous and open-handed, and another close, niggardly, and stern; but we do not know that the generosity of the one and the niggardliness of the other may not be a mere yielding to nativ temperament. In the eye of heaven, a long life of beneficence in the one may hav cost less exertion, and may indicate less virtue, than a few rare hidden acts of kindness wrung by duty out of the reluctant and unsympathizing nature of the other. There may be more real merit—more self-sacrificing effort—more of the noblest struggles of moral grandeur in a life of failure, sin, and shame, than in a career, to our eyes, of stainless integrity. "God seeth not as men seeth." Let this be a consoling thought to the sinner who, black as he may be before the world, has yet contrived to keep some little light burning in his own soul; a humbling and a warning thought to many who now walk proudly in the sunshine of immaculate fame.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

THEN gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman;
Though they may gang a kennin wrang,
To step aside is human.
One point must still be greatly dark—
The moving why they do it;
And just as lamely can ye mark
How far perhaps they rue it.
Wha made the heart, 'tis he alone
Decidedly can try us;
He knows each chord—its various tone,
Each spring—its various bias.
Then at the balance let's be mute;
We never can adjust it.
What's done we partly may compute,
But kenna what resisted.
—Burns's Address to the Unco' Guid.

MR. GLADSTONE trusted that the House would always continue to appreciate—he might almost say to worship—liberty of speech; but would not carry the license to such a point that it should, of itself, become the gravest of all the vices of a legislativ body, and inflict upon it a total incapacity for the discharge of its duties.—London Spectator (Feb. 25, 1882).

I HAV been young and now am old; yet hav I not seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread.—Ps. xxxvii, 25. [Such is the testimony of David, but if anybody, arrived at the years of discretion, can walk through the streets of New York or Chicago and say the same, we should say that he was as blind as a bat and had as little regard to truth as our Talmage.—Hylax.]

Odds and Ends.

A YOUNG lady home from boarding-school was asked if she would hav roast beef, when she replied; "No, I thank you; gastronomical satiety admonishes me that I hav arrived at the ultimate stage of deglutition consistent with dietetic integrity."

A LITTLE three-year-old girl impressed her parents with her juvenil wisdom the other night by wording the following prayer: "Bless the food; make the baby good; forgiv the sins; bless everything in the house. We thank you for keeping us through the storm. Keep the baby good. Amen."

WAS ENOCH'S CHARIOT A TWO HORSE OR A SINGLE HORSE WAGON.

A well-known minister exchanged pulpits with an interior preacher the other day, and the town preacher declares that while he is willing to struggle for the suppression of sin, he is not willing to distribute gospel facts to a congregation of such polemic inclination. During the sermon a man whose most prominent feature of wardrobe was a checked shirt with wooden buttons, arose and said:

"Cap'n, wush you'd reshuck that last pint."

"I don't understand you," replied the preacher.

"I ax you let out your back band a little on that last statement."

"My friend, I am totally in the dark as to your meaning."

"You said that Enoch went to heaven in a chariot of fire. Strip a little more of the bark off and let me understand the timber better. A chariot is a sort of a wagin, ain't it?"

"Yes," replied the preacher.

"Was it a two horse or a single horse wagin?"

"I can't tell."

"Wall, you must tell. Some time ago a fellow driv a wagon over one of my hogs and killed him, and when I fotch up a suit I couldn't tell whether it was a one or two horse wagin, and consequently I didn't rekiver damages. Since then I've been more careful. So I want this chariot business settled right here."

"My poor friend—"

"I know I'm poor, without enough corn to run me through till the next crap, but settle the wagin question."

"I say that the chariot makes no difference, so far as our interest in heaven is concerned. All we need to know about it is that it ascended up to the home prepared for the bliss of the servants of the Lord."

"That talk sounds well enough, pardner, but when a man comes into this neighborhood with pints, he's got to specify. If you say the wagin had two horses, we'll accept your statement and let your business go on, or it will be the same if you say that the vehicle only had one hoss. All we want to know is that the thing has been settled. Can you square the diffikilty, cap'n?"

"I cannot."

"Then come from behind the box." The minister obeyed, and the question remains unsettled.—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medical Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF "Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles and keep the feet perfectly dry,

The Scientific construction of our garments prevents loss of magnetic power.

Continued success enables us to giv a written guarantee to return the purchase money to any person the garments fail to cure, when those advised by us are worn.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

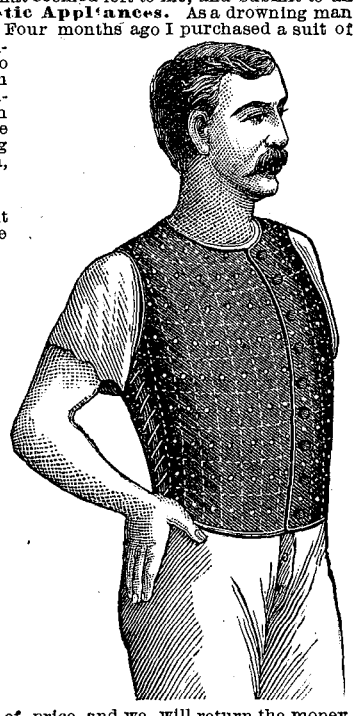
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that fully one-third of the Roman Catholics of St. Louis are believers in Spiritualism.

Many preachers seek to impress their hearers with the fact that life is short, but forget it in their sermons.

It is estimated that there are twelve hundred towns west of the Mississippi river without churches or regular preaching of any kind.

The fence of a graveyard in Pennsylvania bears an inscription in large white letters, "Use Jones's bottled ale if you would keep out of here."

Sitting Bull will join the church on the 1st of June next. Until his sincerity has been proved beyond a doubt we suggest that somebody else pass the contribution box.—Rochester Post-Express.

An official and volunteer organist of a church not one hundred miles from Elizabeth was once asked to assist in passing around the plate. He replied that he didn't object to playing the organ, but he did object to being monkey.

An irreverent friend objects to having a clergyman offer thanks "for what we are about to receive" at a banquet, to share in which has cost him (the i. f.) $5, until he finds out whether he is going to get his money's worth.—Boston Transcript.

The Waseca Radical uses this language in recommending a pastor: "The Rev. D. Morgan is one of the State Executiv Committee of the new party. David is a good one, and will make things warm for all the other parties. He loves politics, some think, as well as, if not better than, salvation."

The Medical Society of Scott county, Iowa, has elected Dr. Jennie McGowen, a well-known woman physician of Davenport, as its president for the ensuing year. This is the first instance in the history of the medical fraternity in which a woman has been chosen for the executiv position of a medical society.

Mighty is the power of prayer. A Vermont deacon prayed that the man who stole his horse might be blessed, and at that very minute the thief was selling the animal to the deacon's brother, who didn't know the horse, for twice what it was worth; and the deacon somehow is not glad that his prayer was answered.—Boston Post.

"You must cheer up. Remember that everything is for the best. You must not grieve. Just remember that your wife is in heaven, where there is everlasting peace," said Reverend Miggles to Colonel Snowfer, who had recently lost his wife. The colonel shook his head and replied sadly: "I wish I could think so, but I can't. There may hav been peace in heaven before she got there; but you know what sort of a woman she was."

Of course, says the World, it would not do for the very orthodox New York Evangelist to compliment the Mormons in any very positiv manner, but it comes as near to it as it dares when it says: "It must be said for the Mormons that when they hav anything to do they set about it in a very direct and commonsense fashion, and are not easily turned aside by threatened danger. Here are some sixty of their emissaries in New York this week straight from Utah—just as if the Edmunds bill had no existence. They represent themselvs as the advance party of 150 persons selected by the Mormon Church Conference so late as April 6th for work in several European countries—chiefly England, Scotland, and Wales. These 'apostles' are made up of common farmers, mechanics, and laborers, and are understood to go at their own charges and proposing to remain abroad about two years. Their conductor challenges 'all the religions of the world to produce a class of ministers who act with more faith, do severer labor, or accomplish more satisfactory results.'"

It is alleged, says the Sun, that a careful statistical investigation among the Good Templars of an entire county in England has proved the smoking teetotalers to be over five times more liable to break their pledges than those who abstain from tobacco. Consequently the newest craze in the ranks of the Hydropods is a "thorough-going" badge of blue, with a white stripe down the middle, the meaning of which is that the wearer has taken a pledge not to use tobacco.

The Rev. Washington Gladden has been installed over a Congregational church in Columbus, Ohio, without a dissenting vote in the council, although his declaration of theological views contained the following: "I am not satisfied with any theory of Christ's atoning work. What forms the endless life in the world to come will take I do not know. The mysteries of the future I do not try to fathom. I only know that, as it is ill with the wicked in this world, and in all worlds, so it is well with the righteous in this world and in all worlds; and I am content to wait for the knowledge of how well it is with them till that shadow come who keeps the keys of all the creeds."

Mr. Maspero, the distinguished archeologist, claims that he has discovered a Coptic church of the fifth century among the ruins of Thebes. He relates how last year he found under a tomb a sarcophagus of limestone covered with inscriptions. More recently, on removing this, he found a Coptic inscription on one corner of it. Prosecuting his researches with the aid of competent workmen, he discovered the church. The way down to it is by five brickwork steps. The floor is tiled, and the walls are covered with bricks and rough-cast, bearing inscriptions. Among many interesting curiosities is a stela covered with a white, hard substance, on which are traced in red ink 300 lines in Theban dialect, forming part of a sermon directed against Monophysite heretics. These underground churches, although not uncommon, are found all over Egypt.

One of the stori es about Col. Ingersoll is that a Christian woman went to his house to convert him. The colonel smiled with the most deferential politeness as he said: "Will you walk in, madam? There is no need of making too solemn a business of it. I thank you for your kind intentions, at any rate." The lady, who apparently expected to be knocked down and dragged out for her temerity, looked very much relieved at the kindness of her reception. A moment after the dinner bell rang. "Come," said the colonel, "walk out and dine with the family, and we can talk over this conversion business as we eat." Soup was served. As it came on the table, and before it was ladled out, the lady lifted her hand. "Stop!" said she. "What is it?" said the colonel. "Do you not think we ought to thank the good Lord for this bountiful dinner before we begin eating?" "I will only make one suggestion first. Your Lord is a just Lord, is he not? Now, perhaps within a block of me at this present time there is some faithful, devout Christian who is starving. Perhaps, if perfect justice were done, our dinner would be on his table. Do you not think the less we say about this matter the better?" It was in this way that the talk ran on. The lady came every day to visit the colonel and his family. She appeared to be fascinated with the loving trust, content, and happiness of this compact household. Finally she said to the colonel: "I apologize. I do not care what you believe. You are leading more of a Christian life than I ever hope to accomplish."

Queen Victoria's servant, the late John Brown, according to the Banner of Light, was a spiritual medium. He was frequently controled by the spirit of Prince Albert, and was the instrument used by the latter to communicate with his widow. The Banner of Light's editor claims this because the prince told him so. "We remember particularly," he says, "an occasion when he requested that the spirit of our medium might accompany him to London, as the queen was quite ill, and he desired help to form a magnetic relation between her and the medium Brown, to enable him to throw off the incipient disease that was lurking about her system. The result was that our medium went in spirit with Prince Albert, and remained at Windsor Castle at least three hours. She was gone so long that we asked why she did not return. 'Don't know,' was the reply of an observant Indian spirit. 'All I know is that she went over the big water with the Albert chief.' We willed that she return and her spirit came back with astonishing rapidity. 'Why,' she said on coming back to her normal condition, 'what's the matter? It seems as though I hav been flying through the air at a rapid rate.' The next instant she was controled by a spirit, who said, in a masculin tone of voice, 'England greets America! John Brown. Good night.' This was so extraordinary that we asked for an explanation from our spirit friends, to which answer was given that at the time the spirit of the medium was called back to her earthly body she was so closely en rapport with Brown's spirit as to force him to accompany her to Boston."

It has long been a source of complaint that no satisfactory census had ever been taken of the teeming populations of British India. A census has at last been attempted, and although the full details hav not yet been made public, much new and valuable information has been furnished. The population, which grows at a rapid rate, is set down at 253,891,821—a population nearly as large as that of the whole of Europe—and it is known that there were some neglected spots. The population, it is believed, is considerably larger than these figures, enormous as they are, represent. Looking at the divisions arising from race and religion, we find 187,937,450 Hindoos, 50,121,655 Mohammedans, 6,426,511 Nature Worshipers, 3,478,884 Buddhists, 1,862,634 Christians, 1,863,428 Sikhs, and 1,221,896 Jains, not to mention Parsees and others. The Hindoos are minutely subdivided into sects and castes. The worship of the Hindoos is characterized by a mixture of tree and serpent mythology, and with ceremonial services representativ of the reproductiv forces of nature. It was formerly the custom of the Hindoos to burn their widows, but that custom, mainly on account of the resistance offered it by the British government, has, except in rare and solitary instances, been abandoned. One of their worst customs is that of marrying girls when they are mere children. The census shows that there are 63,000 widows under ten years of age, 174,524 between ten and fifteen, 15,312,651 between fifteen and twenty, and 1,572,145 between twenty and thirty. Among the Mohammedans these early marriages prevail also to a large extent, but not to the same extent as among the Hindoos. The Christian population is larger than was expected, and more than one-half are nominally Roman Catholic. The Hindoos and the Mohammedans do not harmonize, but, on the contrary, they are strongly opposed in feeling, and there would frequently be open rupture were it not for the pressure of the government. The Koran, it is noted, has not escaped a certain modification under the influence of Brahmanism. It has come to be affected by caste in spite of the pointed teaching of the Prophet in regard to the equality of man before God. Buddhism is also found in a mixed form, and the religion of the Jains is a sort of admixture of Buddhism and Hindooism. The Sikhs, it appears, are Theists, are less superstitious than the other races, as a rule, and are followers of some fifteenth century reformers. Conversions to Christianity from the higher races, or from the educated classes, are not of frequent occurrence—the conversions hitherto being for the most part from the lower castes and from the savage tribes. Among the Mohammedans Christianity makes no headway; but the Bramo Somaj societies, under the lead of Keshat Chunder Sen, are spreading among the educated Hindoos and leading to a sort of simple Theism. These statistics show that India is to be a great field of future religious experiment.

The Rostrum.

The Philosophy of Integralism.

BY MRS. A. C. MACDONALD.

From an Address Delivered before the Manhattan Liberal Club.

It is one of the fundamental dogmas of the Integral philosophy that we must accept everybody's philosophy and find a place for it. If as a school we seem to be found assailing other schools, it is their limitations that we assail and the narrowness and sectarianism which necessarily result. I hav no purpose, therefore, to assail anyone's philosophy, except in one particular, and that particular is in the claim that any philosophy less than Integral can cover the whole ground of being. A philosophy, to be Integral, I hold, must be made up of all the different philosophies, and then, in addition, must hav a contribution of its own to make—the contribution of an element or factor which will enable us to reconcile the antagonisms in all the philosophies—the Materialistic, the Spiritualistic, the Idealistic, and the Positivistic.

George Henry Lewes says that the "foundations of a creed must be broad enough to furnish standing-room for the most antagonistic schools;" and then, in the very same paragraph, he goes on to reject both Spiritualism and Materialism, showing that the "foundations" which he was laying in his treatis on the "Problems of Life and Mind" were not broad enough to answer even his own aspirations. It is one thing to see what ought to be done, as he himself elsewhere acknowledges, and entirely another thing to do it. But what is the advantage of having a platform so broad as to admit of antagonistic schools unless we hav some means of reconciling them? Of what avail to place any two antagonistic philosophies or theories upon the same platform while either is asserting itself broad enough to cover the whole ground, and claiming that there is no room or use for the other?

If the philosophy of Materialism explains all explainable phenomena, and answers all the questions constantly arising for answer in human experience, then it covers the whole ground of being, and there is no room, nor place, nor use for any other. But if it should be found that Materialism only half covers the ground, what then? If there are found facts and phenomena that the philosophy of Materialism does not explain, what shall we do? Deny the facts and ignore the phenomena? That would seem to be the only alternativ unless we admit some other philosophy, but it would hardly be scientific. Denying or ignoring facts or problems does not remove them, nor annihilate them. They are still there, demanding explanation and solution. Take the fact of consciousness; does the Materialistic philosophy explain that? It seems to me not. Though it says it has a material origin, it yet fails to explain how matter can be converted into consciousness.

It is a fact universally confessed that we do not know what consciousness is. It has been confessed again and again from this platform that we do not know.

Now my theory or doctrin is that you do know, or may know, as much of consciousness or mind as you do of matter. You do not know what matter is except by its manifestations, neither do you know what consciousness is except by its manifestations.

The claim of the philosophy of Materialism, as I understand it, is that matter, with its manifestations, is all that there is; that matter never was created, and never is to be, nor can be, destroyed; that it is the only uncreated and eternal entity in existence; that man himself in his individuality is but a changing form of matter, and "that all sensation, consciousness, thought, motion, and force hav a material origin." Matter is the beginning and the end; the cause and its effects; the one great, all-absorbing fact of existence. Great is this Diana of the Ephesians; "great is matter," and the "powers and potencies" of matter furnish themes for never-ending essays. And it is simply dead matter—dead, inorganic matter. With all its powers and potencies, there is, according to this theory, no life in matter.

Ernst Haeckel, in his "History of Creation," on the origin and pedigree of man, says: "The most ancient ancestors of men were living creatures of the simplest kind imaginable—organisms without organs, like the still living Monera. . . . . The first of these Monera originated by spontaneous generation out of so-called 'inorganic combinations,' namely, out of a simple combination of carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen. The assumption of this spontaneous generation, that is, of a mechanical origin of the first organisms from inorganic matter, has been proved in our thirteenth chapter to be a necessary hypothesis." And he adds, after speaking of "a direct proof being possibly still found in the structure of the egg"—(it must be very direct proof that is only possible); after speaking of this, he says: "The assumption of this first stage is necessary for most important general reasons;" that is, that a stage of living creatures of the simplest kind imaginable (organisms without organs, he says), which had been produced by inorganic matter—dead matter—spontaneously moving itself, spontaneously generating living organisms; a simple combination of carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen producing a living animal—a "mere mechanical origin," he says! Can the miracles of the theologians, of God creating the world out of nothing, go further, or further tax our credulity than this? If they would concede life to matter, it would do; but they will not do this. Not only Ernst Haeckel, as I hav quoted, but others, adduce inorganic matter as the origin of life. Huxley, in his "Lay Sermons," says that it is "the animals' highest feat of constructiv chemistry to convert dead protoplasm into that living matter of life appropriate to itself. Therefore," he says, "in seeking for the origin of protoplasm we must turn to the vegetable world."

Mr. Wakeman, in his scientific sermons, says: "When philosophers who hav done grandly for science make the slip of ascribing the potency of life to inorganic matter, or sexes to chemical affinities, they not only discredit themselvs, but furnish a basis for endless delusions."

Or if it is conceded that there is life in matter today, the claim that consciousness had a material origin is a claim that it really had an origin; that there was a time when it was not, did not exist—not merely upon this planet, but it did not exist anywhere. And they proceed to trace the course of the evolution of man back through the animal world, back to and through the vegetable world, to protoplasm, and from there to inorganic matter. Or, commencing at the other extremity, they claim that inorganic matter, by spontaneous generation—that is, by self-acting, produced a living organism. Man's origin, says Ernst Haeckel, was "mechanical" from "inorganic combinations out of simple combination of the four gases, carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen." "This assumption," as I quoted before and repeat, "of the spontaneous generation of the first organisms out of inorganic matter is a necessary hypothesis"—this assumption of this first stage "is necessary for important general reasons" ("History of Creation," vol. ii, by Ernst Haeckel, as published in THE TRUTH SEEKER).

These "important general reasons" I take it, as I hav not followed him to see whether he makes a statement of them himself, are that he must start life somewhere in order to go on and trace the development of life into higher forms—the evolution of man. With his tracing of this development, or evolution through succeeding and different stages, I hav nothing to do. I hav no difficulty at all in conceiving the evolution of the higher animals from the lower—of man, the highest of all, from those below him. Grant the first step and the rest follow, or may follow, as a matter of course. My objection is to the first step, and my claim is that the evolving by itself of life from inorganic matter, or combinations of inorganic matter, or of living creatures ever so simple, "organisms without organs," even, as Haeckel puts it, or of any organism having in it life or the power to move itself, is an impossibility.

Dead, inorganic matter could no more originate by itself, unaided by any other factor, the intelligent activities and the intellectual life on this earth to-day than God could originate the universe. The argument among Materialists is that the universe, the thing assumed as created, must be either like God, the creator, or it must be different. If it is like God, then it would only be but a continuation, there being no disconnection, no break, and therefore no creation. The one was only a continuation of the other. If the universe was unlike God, of an entirely different nature from himself, of a different substance, he could not hav created it out of himself? I hav condensed the argument somewhat, but this is the gist. But the same argument applies equally well to matter as the originator of consciousness as it does to God as the originator of the universe, only there is no if in the way. Matter is no more like consciousness or like intelligence, a factor of consciousness, or like feeling, also a factor of consciousness, than any other two perfect antithets are like each other.

Physical forces are in matter—the force produced by explosions, the force of gravitation, chemical forces, etc. The contact of steel and flint, or even the rubbing together of two sticks, produces fire, but not conscious force, unless you admit, what Prof. Van Der Weyde contends, that "atoms know what they want—that matter thinks." Concede this, and I must, per force of reason, lay down my arms as against the Materialist. Knowing, thinking matter could easily and must necessarily by the laws of its own nature, organize itself into knowing, thinking beings.

Matter is no more like consciousness, like spirit, using the more general term, than light is like darkness, except in the fact that they are the two antithetical complements of each other, the two opposit halves of the one whole, and it takes the two to make the whole—spirit and matter to constitute the universe, mind and body to constitute the man, subjectiv and objectiv, or subject and object, in the realm of philosophy; physical and metaphysical in the realm of science; abstract and concrete in the realm of knowledge; and there are many other terms in common use to designate these two entities and their manifestation.

I find an excellent statement of the opposit, or spiritual philosophy, in the "Freethought Directory and Magazine" for March, by S. P. Putnam. He designates it as the "Transcendental Spiritualism." He does this, probably, to distinguish it from a philosophy quite prevalent among a certain school of believers in the so-called spiritual phenomena or spirit manifestations, prominent among whom stands Andrew Jackson Davis. This latter philosophy asserts that spirit is the highest form of matter. At a recent meeting which I attended, in announcing his philosophy of being or of the universe, a gentleman said: "I consider spirit to be refined matter, and matter to be gross spirit." That spirit is refined matter, that is, the most ethereal form of matter, is the prevalent belief among a large class of Spiritualists, though whether they believe that after matter has once become refined into spirit it then can again be made gross enough to become matter, I do not know; but this doctrin is in fact nothing more nor less than Materialism, except as Spiritualists carry it a little further and say that matter can be so refined as to fit it for higher and higher spheres; that it will liv on and on instead of returning to dust. But it is not this doctrin or philosophy that I am presenting for consideration. It is that alluded to which Mr. Putnam calls "Transcendental Spiritualism." Speaking of the Rev. Dr. Sampson, a gentleman of the advanced school, Mr. Putnam says: "He gave a masterly description of the growth of consciousness, all of which from the scientific standpoint is essentially true, the difference lying back of this in the origin of consciousness itself. Dr. Sampson assumed the priority of mind to matter, and being before, was therefore the creator of matter."

"This independence of consciousness is also the creed of Prof. Cook, who is what we might call a transcendental Spiritualist. He makes consciousness all in all, the beginning and the end, the Alpha and Omega, and man himself in his individuality is only an experience in this eternal consciousness. Matter is but its outward rim, coming and going and constantly changing, while the consciousness is the unchangable, the substance which is at the basis of all, and the only real power in the universe."

So you perceive that the Spiritualist and the Materialist take precisely the same ground—make the same assumptions—in regard to the two different entities. The Materialist claims that matter is all there is; that without any help (for there is no god outside of matter, and no consciousness outside of matter, and no consciousness inside of matter, primarily, not till matter evolved it) it evoluted all there is to-day. "Matter is all there is, the beginning and the end, the all in all, and man himself in his individuality is but a form of matter," says the Materialist. "Consciousness is all that there is, the beginning and the end, the all in all, and man himself in his individualty is but an experience in this consciousness," says the Spiritualist.

Now I would ask which is the greater feat to perform—the greater miracle—to evolve consciousness from unconscious matter, or to create matter out of consciousness or spirit. To me one seems as impossible as the other. All thinkers see the chasm between mind and matter. Tyndall, in his Belfast address, declared that he could not see how mind could affect matter, or matter, mind; and Prof. Fisk says that "in no sense is thought the product of molecular movement;" and that "the progress of modern discovery, so far from bridging over the chasm between mind and matter, tends rather to exhibit the distinction between them as absolute."

I would say in passing that had he been familiar with Universology he would hav seen that, while they are, and must ever remain, absolutely distinct, while still inseparably united, the bridge over the chasm which separated them has been found—that the laws and principles of mind and matter are the same.

The reason next to that of the impossibility of matter evolving mind, or mind creating matter, is an a priori one—a reason deduced from the law that had previously been induced from facts and phenomena within the scope of human observation, which is that all concrete being is made up of two antithetical factors, that consequently no being, either the universe as a whole, or any of its parts, can be made up of one single factor; neither of matter alone, from which to evolve mind and all its manifestations, or of mind alone, from which to originate matter; but that both matter and mind always hav been, and always will be. They are uncreate. They are co-equal, coeval, co-eternal in time, co-extensiv in space, inseparably united as the two halves of one complete whole; and the product of this union is conscious life, as we see it to-day, with all its manifestations. In Universological terms, matter is unismal—the manifestation of the principle called unism, the tendency to unite, the spirit of oneness or unity; Spencer's integration, manifested especially as one instance, in gravitation. Spirit is duismal, the manifestation of the principle called duism, the tendency to divide, differentiate; Spencer's differentiation, manifested especially, as centrifugal force in the outer world, as discrimination or thought in the philosophic world, as Individualism in the social world; and concrete being, with all its activities as we behold it to-day; in a word, the universe itself in its entirety as made up of these factors, is trinismal—the union of the other two.

As the universe was uncreated, always existed, so these factors of the universe were never created, but always existed; they always were; they eternally are.

It is a favorit conception of the teacher and students of Universology that "the universe is a dramatization of laws and principles;" but can we conceive of laws and principles existing without matter, or of matter existing without these principles? I cannot; and any philosophy that undertakes to prove that matter was first, and evolved spirit, or any philosophy that undertakes to prove that spirit was first, and evolved or created matter, undertakes what it cannot accomplish; asserts what cannot, in the very nature of things, be true.

The fundamental error which underlies all reasoning upon this subject, by Materialists and Idealists and Spiritualists, by all the speakers whom I hav cited, and by all writers who hav discussed the subject who are not Hegelian or Universological, is that they practically, and, it must be presumed, for the most part unconsciously, but still always and universally, assume a beginning in time. This is the theological point of view, and by theologians is consistently held with all its logical consequences. But with others, and especially with Agnostics and Infidels, those of all schools who are assailing theology, it must be by an unconscious lapse on their part that they place themselvs in this theological position, for it is they who are at the same time loudly warning the world against this very error.

Universology also posits a beginning, but that beginning is logical, not historical—in reason and the very nature of things (spaceoid), and not in time (motoid), or, rather, it is in the dynamic unity of opposits, which is the very essence of being itself. This idea is Hegelian, but the explanation and demonstration of its truth is Universalogical, and as a standing-point it offers the only possible escape from confused, partialistic, and unsatisfactory theories of the constitution of the universe. It is nevertheless true that we are somewhat constrained by the very limitations of our minds, in thinking them, to take our departure from the one point or the other; but it is only necessary to know this, to know that there are the two points, and to know from which point we are starting, in which order we are going, and then to know that the two orders are to be integrated or united, while still held separately in our mind, to compass the total conception.

It was asserted in a lecture recently upon this platform that "the relativity of all phenomena and conditions of existence establishes in the speaker's mind the truth of Mr. Andrews's Universology." Now this statement may be satisfactory to the gentleman who made it, but it is not so to me. His acquaintance with Universology seems, to me, to be insufficient. This "relativity of all phenomena and conditions of existence" is one of the factors merely, which make a one science of the universe possible. The proof that what the teacher of Universology claims as that science is in its applicability to its domain and to every part and parcel of its domain, just as mathematics is applicable to its domain—numbers; or chemistry to its domain; in fact, that it furnishes the means of explaining, as its author claims it does, "every mystery but the mystery of being itself." That it has already done this is not claimed. The limits of time and strength hav forbidden; but that its principles, its laws and methods, are equally applicable in any and every domain is claimed, and also that any competent person can take the principles, laws, and method, and make a special application of them in any domain he may choose, and that he will come out right every time—the same as a person competent in mathematics can use the rules of mathematics to solve a problem in numbers, because the rules of mathematics are not rules arbitrarily made, but are deduced from the nature of numbers themselvs. So the laws and principles and method of Universology are deduced from the nature of things in the universe.

What Universology has discovered and formulated, and claims as the one science of the universe, is not, as the gentleman seemed to think it, a science of relativity merely, but a science of the very opposit of that as well. It is, in fact, a science of a complex of oppositnesses, of absoluteness and relativity, as well as of other antithets. Relativity with Universologists no more covers the whole ground than does Materialism. It is simply a hemispherical or half-truth which modern thinkers hav got hold of, and ride to death as if it were the whole truth. Claiming to be wholly positiv, they still base themselvs upon relativity, which, as George Henry Lewes says, is a purely metaphysical conception. Relativity means relationdom—the domain of relations. What, then, are those instances of being between which relations exist? How can there be a "betweenity" without any things or entities between which the betweenity is? Relativity just as much demands entity as spirit or life demands matter. This latter point, that spirit or life demands matter, is constantly insisted upon by those who as constantly assert that relativity is everything.

To the Universologist entity and relation are again correlates, and the necessary factors of whatsoever is. To him it is axiomatic that in every instance of being, big or little throughout the universe, there is an absolute or entical, and a relativ constituent or factor begripped or united to each other. It is as patent an absurdity to talk of relations without things related, as it is to talk of an up without any down, or of any other hemispherical presentment of what is, in its nature, spherical or complete, or of any polar extremity without implying an opposit pole.

If the Materialist cannot conceive of the absolute, it is because he is holding in his mind the theologic idea of an absolute being apart from and above the universe, the absolute with a capital A instead of what it is a one phase, constituent, or factor of all being, which it is, just as relativity is another such phase or factor of being. To Universologists the relativ apart from the absolute is equally as unthinkable. The relativ and the entity, then, in turn, stand and must ever stand, in relations with each other, but even this all-embracing relativity does not in any sense destroy the entical or absolute factor of its own constituency.

In Universological technicality, therefore, the aggregate totality of being can only be adequately described by the compound term, absoluta-relativ, or, inversely relativa-absolute. If then it be true, as it is true, that everything is relativ, it is just as true that everything is absolute and entical, down to the infinitude of the minutest detail.

This is the crux or difficult point in Universology, and I do not expect in a single statement to make it either wholly intelligible or very acceptable to minds warped in the direction of the prevalent conception of relativity as excluding the absolute aspect, factor, or constituent of being.

George Henry Lewes rejects both Idealism and Realism. He says neither any form of Idealism or crude Realism satisfies all the conditions of the problem. What he would adopt in the place of Materialism and Spiritualism, which he so summarily rejects, I hav not studied his works sufficiently to plainly state; but in the place of Realism and Idealism he has what he denominates "reasoned Realism." It would hav done just as well to hav formulated a "reasoned Idealism," for in Idealism there is to be found the other half truth antithetical to that found in Realism, and neither expression includes the whole. Said a gentleman in my presence endeavoring to explain and evidently indorsing the Ideal theory: "That chair we see is not, according to this theory, the real chair, but the chair which the designer had in his mind when he made this chair is the real chair. "If some one should take that chair and strike the gentleman upon the head with it, I presume he would think it a real chair," I replied. "Yes," he said, "it is real to our senses." His failure and the failure of that school, and of every school but the Universologists, is in not recognizing the fact of the doubleness of all complete truth, and the complete truth in this case is that the two chairs are each and both real—one real to the senses, the other real to the intellect.

And the same writer again, in his "Biographical History of Philosophy," treated philosophy and metaphysics as though they were things of the past. They were dead and buried, and he was sounding a requiem over their tomb. Twenty years later, in his work on the "Problems of Life and Mind," he confessed the necessity of metaphysics—a science of what is beyond physics—and his attempt at a solution of the progress of life and mind was an attempt to found a philosophy. He was aware of the fact that he had made himself liable to the accusation of retreating, but this he parried by denominating his new position a mere change of front. The change of front seems to me, however, so complete that he is really walking back over the same ground—in fact, retreating. All through his work you will find intimations that he saw the truths contained in the opposit doctrins, the same as Dr. McCosh and others hav done; but nowhere does he perceive that the two antithetical aspects of truth are necessary in the very nature of things, and that they are combined in a higher unity. He seems almost, at times, just ready to perceive this fundamental truth, as does also Dr. McCosh, even more ready than he; but nowhere and by no one, till Mr. Andrews, as a part of the science of Universology, announced it, has it been announced. And to-day it seems almost impossible for many minds to grasp it. Indeed, it seems that hardly any but those who hav subjected themselvs to his private teaching—and but few comparativly of those—as yet comprehend it in its fulness and in the importance of its results. The results cannot be overestimated; they are as wide and far-reaching as human experience itself. This philosophy offers the means of reconciling into peaceful harmony the most antagonistic schools and the most bitter feuds.

The Universologist or Integralist—for this latter philosophy arises of necessity out of Universology—when he hears a truth asserted accepts it as far as it is true, as a half-truth to be complemented by the antithetical half-truth, and he holds the other half-truth ever in his mind. When he hears it asserted that matter is eternal he accepts the statement, nay, joins in affirming it. He cannot conceive otherwise; but when he hears it claimed that matter was the origin of consciousness, or life, or mind, he does not concede that, for he cannot conceive it. He denies that assertion, for it is not according to the laws of the constitution of being, as demonstrated a priori upon other grounds.

When he hears the Spiritualist assert the eternity of mind, or spirit, or consciousness, the Integralist concedes it, for he cannot conceive otherwise; but when he hears it asserted that mind was prior to matter and created matter, he does not concede that, for the reasons already stated in respect to matter. His position is that they both are eternal and absolute, while yet relativ, in so much that their existence has no manifestation, no working reality, except by their actual copulation with each other.

When he hears asserted as a truth the doctrin of necessity; the scriptural doctrin of foreordination; the scientific doctrin of evolution, he accepts them also as half-truths, but only as half-truths, to be complemented also by their opposit—the freedom of the mind.

Again, when it is said that mind, with all its manifestations, is the mere function of matter, Universologists and Integralists counterstate by affirming that it is just as true—neither of the statements being the whole truth—that matter is the function of mind. In mathematics, if a is the function of b, then b is the function of a, and in the highest Universologic philosophy we come back, at the opposit extreme of the long range of sciento-philosophic evolution, to the same reciprocal doubleness of thing and function. This point is too subtle and far-reaching to be discussed here, but too important to be wholly omitted.

I said in the beginning of this lecture that the Integral philosophy must not only be made up of the truths of all philosophies, but must hav its own contribution to make—the contribution of a factor or element which would enable us to reconcile the antagonisms of these philosophies, and to hold, in a centering grip, all possible philosophies.

You doubtless hav perceived before this what that factor or element in the Integralistic philosophy is—that it is simply the knowledge of the fact that every radical truth, every philosophic truth, every fundamental truth, is made up of two exactly antithetical truths, and of necessity so constituted by the laws of being itself. This, it is believed, is the highest generalization to which philosophy will ever ascend.

Hypocrisy in Legislation.

From the Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Daily News.

Counterfeit virtue seized the members of the assembly on Thursday. The rankest hypocrisy came to the front, and in the face of justice and right they passed the amendment to the Penal Code relating to fishing. By this act of cowardice thousands of men will be driven out of the open air into groggeries on the first day of the week. The Graphic well and truly says:

"There are thousands of hard-worked, poorly-paid men who need all the cheap enjoyment of an innocent kind that can be had on the only day of the seven that they can call their own. It is well enough to say that the day is the Lord's and not theirs. But no two churches agree as to the precise method of observing the day; there are differences as to which is the legitimate day; there are many—as Mr. Beecher—who think the Lord can be served outside of as well as inside of the church, and the class we speak of needs all the outside air that it can get during the few brief hours that it has its liberty. The few that are rich can hav their pleasure at any and at all times. The great monopolies are making these few richer, and the great army of poverty grows larger and poorer day by day. Is it not unjust to say that the many who work for scanty pay in close ill-ventilated rooms from dawn to sunset, and whose places are in the crowded and heated street, through all the summer, shall not hav one day out of seven to get the river or the ocean air and to take to themselvs the slight enjoyment which is all they can in any event hav?"

The truth is that seven-eighths of the men who voted for this provision will not only fish on the first day, but will, in hundreds of ways, violate the spirit and letter of the Penal Code. The virtuous Boyd, of the Senate, wishing to emulate the hypocrisy of of the lower house, came to the front with a bill, the spirit of which is bigoted and intolerant to the last degree and which we regret Judge Nelson's committee thoughtlessly reported favorably. It has taken hundreds years to separate the church and the state. In this gigantic work thousands of heroic lives hav been lost, and rivers of blood hav been grandly poured out. They can never be united again without the utter and complete destruction of human liberty. There is a growing sentiment, intelligent and moral, rapidly gathering volume and strength—it belongs to no creed. Suppose this great class should some day become as bigoted as the Solons at Albany?

Was it a "Put-up Job?"

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The conversion of a "great Infidel" is an event which so seldom occurs that I am not at all surprised to hear that our Christian friends are making all the capital they can out of the incident which friend Meikle refers to, especially in localities where it is unlikely that the antecedents of the individual in question may become known. In such places, I hav no doubt, the story of this "sudden conversion" in answer to special prayer will be told with thrilling effect, but here, where the circumstances are so well known, a discreet silence is preserved on the subject, even by that evangelical organ, the Daily Witness. This is accounted for by the fact that that journal devoted a whole column of its valuable space to a report of the "great Infidel's" lecture, which made that indiuidual appear in such a ridiculous light that they hav since been ashamed to acknowledge him as a "brother in Christ." In response to your inquiry for further information on the subject, I send you the following facts, which you can rely upon as being correct.

One Sunday afternoon in February, Mr. Ploomberg introduced himself to me, in the library of the Freethought Club, as a stranger in the city, and being an enthusiastic Liberal, he had made immediate inquiries as to the whereabouts of the Freethought Club. He was welcomed, of course, as any stranger would be under similar circumstances, and invited to attend the weekly meeting while he remained in the city. On a subsequent Sunday he expressed a desire to address a few words to the audience before the meeting closed. On being called upon, he, much to our surprise, produced from some mysterious hiding-place a formidable looking roll of manuscript and commenced reading it at a most terrific rate. We immediately discovered that we had a crank of the first order to deal with, and after fifteen minutes speaking, his remarks and conduct became so outrageous that the chairman was compelled to request him to discontinue his remarks and to leave the platform. This he did in a most crest-fallen manner, and after muttering something about the approval with which his addresses had always been received by the people of the United States, and a hint that we poor benighted Canadians were not sufficiently advanced to appreciate them, he left the hall.

Nothing further was seen or heard of him until a few days after the public announcement of Mr. Watts's lectures on March 21st and 22d, under the auspices of our club. Then there appeared some startling posters announcing that "The Great Infidel" would lecture in Mechanic's Hall on "Paine and Voltaire," March 23d and 24th. Being in the same hall and on the nights immediately following Mr. Watts, some little confusion prevailed in the public mind as to "which was which." This was the object aimed at, and after satisfying ourselvs as to the identity of the individual, we took the precaution of informing the public that there was no connection whatever between the two, and fortunate it was that we did so, as subsequent events hav proved.

Mr. Watts's lectures, as your readers already know, were a grand success, notwithstanding the railroad accident which prevented him arriving in time to giv the first lecture as advertised, and which necessitated the delivery of the second at 3 o'clock on a Friday afternoon. The "Great Infidel" occupied the same platform on the same evening, and as the article which you reproduce from the Star says, "the affair proved a failure in every way." The lecturer and his treasurer made a sudden exit from the building by the back entrance, while the audience were clamoring for the refunding of their admission fees. I need not add that they were unsuccessful in their demands. The sequel to the story as told by the Star is, I believe, substantially correct.

Although there are several suspicious circumstances about the matter which would strongly support the theory of its being a "put-up job," yet I should not like positivly to assert that it was so, but would rather incline to the other alternativ that the individual needs careful looking after by his friends. If it was a planned affair with the object of throwing discredit upon the Freethought cause, it has proved a total failure, and although the "home news from abroad" will doubtless bring the story back again with such little embellishments as the ingenious imaginations of Talmage, Moody and Sankey, Hammond, Jo Cook, or General Booth, may from time to time add to it, depend upon it, the Christians of Montreal will be forever "mum" on the subject.

Montreal, April 16, 1883. C. Stevens.

Songs of the Morning.

This is a book of original songs, including responses to old hymns and old hymns in responding versions. The author has given in this new book 228 songs of sensible and truthful sentiments, songs that can be sung to the sweet old tunes without a twinge of conscience, such as must now invariably steal over the minds of all Liberals as they utter the words of the old versions praising and eulogizing gods, ghosts, and myths, and picturing the cruel pains and penalties that are declared to fall upon all who do not believe in them as veritable entities.

Just as I hav pleaded for Liberals to appropriate the dear old holidays and redeem them from the superstitions with which Christians hav enshrouded them, so do I now ask that the sweet tunes we hav all loved from childhood's hour be redeemed from the false and fabulous ideas so long attached to them and made bright and glorious in the sunlight of truth, fact, and science. With the new Christmas, new Easter, and new Thanksgiving ceremonies Liberals will inaugurate shall be blended the sweet old tunes, sung to these new words. I hope our friends will buy the Liberal Songsters, and sing the new words till their reverberating echoes shall drown forever the old in the floods of the new, or at least cause them to be relegated to the realms of Mother Goose, their more appropriate sphere and home.

"Hasten where the light is flowing
Undistorted all around,
Where the wholesome plants are growing
Over all the gladdened ground.
Seek no more your life to nourish
On the fungus of decay;
Living shoots abundant flourish,
Which would giv it healthy play."

Joe Cook.

When the Evening Post, the most conservativ daily in this city, will say as much as this concerning the notorious nuisance of Boston, it is pretty certain that when the whole truth is found out the public will hold him in the same estimation that we do. The Post insinuates that Cook is not to be believed, but we go further and unhesitatingly say that he is a braggart, liar, and the truth is not in him. The American people will know this sometime:

"The Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, who also calls himself 'The Boston Monday Lectureship,' has been discoursing on the shortcomings of the American press in one of those performances which he calls his 'preludes,' which consist in some ramdom observations made prior to the regular lecture. He describes himself as much troubled not only by the deficiencies of the press, but by the low opinion entertained of it by foreign critics. Mr. Cook's reports of what he has seen and heard, either abroad or anywhere, are always to be received with caution; but even if he has heard all he says he has heard in the way of 'merciless sneers,' he ought to be the last person to reproduce it. There is probably no person professing to be educated, who has brought so much discredit on the American mind within the last seven years as the Rev. Joseph Cook himself in the eyes of those foreigners whose opinions about newspaper or any kind of literature are worth repeating. His gross ignorance and inaccuracy on those matters of science with which he has undertaken to deal, hav again and again been exposed by scientific men. So hav his reports of the opinions of foreign philosophers and thinkers. There is, however, nothing discreditable to the country in the existence of a conspicuous blunderer of this kind. What does damage it is the triumph of Mr. Cook's remarkable talents as a sensational preacher over all attempts to make his real character known to his audiences. His hall is just as full, we believe, as it was before he was found out, and there is no apparent diminution in the number of those who think he has reconciled religion and science. The better educated and more rational clergymen are as much ashamed of his performances as anybody, but a lamentably large nnmber of them are glad to accept his assistance in keeping alive a spirit of credulous wonder which they mistakenly, we are sure, consider in some manner favorable to the growth and maintenance of genuin religious feeling.

"The success of Mr. Cook's sonorous platitudes in Boston, which passes in the eyes of foreigners for the most cultivated city in America, has probably given far more gratification to the enemies of democracy than any shortcomings on the part of the American press. His books, his lectures, and himself hav furnished to foreign critics more materials for 'merciless sneers' directed against the mental standards of the community which produced him and which can listen to him, than even the worst American newspapers hav ever done. A bad newspaper can always be explained away by decrying the character of its readers, who are an invisible and unknown body. But Mr. Cook gathers his subscribers into a hall, where they can be counted and inspected. That they hav a very respectable appearance and make certain claims to 'culture' nobody can deny, and this is all the cynical foreign enemy of our institutions asks for. He then turns on us and says that when such people as these can take Cook for a prophet, and bear up under the revelations which hav been made of his incompetency, what hope can there be for our intellectual future? Why should there be 'first-class dailies' or weeklies in a community, they ask, which can find mental food in a 'Monday Lectureship,' and which can take his collection of chromos for a gallery of old masters? One cannot answer a sneer of this sort off-hand. To explain Mr. Cook would need a small volume."

Made Happy!

From the Christian Advocate.

We are happy to say to any pessimists, Agnostics, Infidels, or unbelievers of any degree that the past winter has been the most extraordinary for conversions, payment of church debts, erection of new churches, and gifts for benevolent and distinctivly Christian enterprise recorded for a long time.

In the New York East Conference the other day one of the brother preachers of the editor of the Advocate claimed that his (the editor's) "facts" must always be taken with a due allowance. The query that occurs to us is, Had the brother seen the above statement, or did he base the allegation upon some recent observations of the Advocate concerning mining stocks?

The Animal World vs. the Moral World.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I cannot repudiate the Bible, because it agrees with my experiences in animal and moral sciences. Moral science is the reflection of material science, and has a language peculiar to itself. The letter of the Bible has no life in it, and only will answer the low animal and creeping things of the sectarian world. Moral science is of a high order, and can only be understood by experience through the organ of comparison, which is secluded from the animal world by secretivness. Thus, as it is said, "He came to his own" (Freethought people), "and they received him not."

The "He" (Jesus) in moral science has no personality, but is a saving principle in every man and woman, and is obscured from our vision by the dark cloud of deceptiv secretivness. "This light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not." The Bible has a twofold meaning. It has and does satisfy the animal world (Sectarianism), and when received will satisfy the moral world. But I said Jesus means in the moral language a saving principle, which is dormant in every brain and will continue so until we believe in it. It requires faith and will as much as if personal.

When we repudiate an outside God (which we thoroughly do) we must hav one in the belief of moral science, and the will power to save our individuality from our worst enemy—beguiling, deceptiv secretivness.

We must not repudiate the Bible. The animal man, I know, feeds upon it, as I once did myself and was killed by it, and thus I eat his flesh (the animal, or letter), and now I drink his blood (the moral), and thus I am risen from the death of the letter to the spirit of the moral through comparison—the very same that Jesus as a representativ preached 1883 years since, for without a parable spake he not unto them. It being Nature's progressiv production, it was recorded for the special benefit of this age as a wise provision; for we hav no personality to lead now, but are diversified members of one body—the whole house of Israel—when we stand upon the resurrection of moral science and self-saving power. This subject is very important to me, however it may seem to others. I can harmonize the dark passages of the Bible upon this principle. Zenas Kent.

The Clergy and the Country.

From the Chicago Times.

Parker hall, near the corner of Madison and Halsted streets, was crowded to its utmost capacity last night by members of the Liberal League and others to listen to Prof. W. F. Jamieson deliver a lecture on "The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic." Prof. Jamieson said that republican liberty was seriously threatened by the growing influence of the clergy. Religious despotism was arrayed against American freedom. Notwithstanding the strength of the nation it was threatened by more insidious foes than ever gnawed at its vitals, and these foes were the clergy. Self-government and Christianity, he contended, were incompatible. Christianity wars against the natural, inalienable right of the people to rule themselvs. It does not believe in the people; it distrusts them; it claims to be superior to them. A truly democratic or republican government has no God. It is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Christianity meant a government of gods, kings and queens, lords and ladies, against the people. Human government meant freedom. Christian government, in whatever guise it appears, is pure despotism. Christianity is now grasping for power in order to destroy this republic, which it considers too American, too human, and seeks to substitute for the government of the people a government of God. For several years there has been a deeply-laid plan by Christians to overturn the principles to which the nation owes its existence. The ideal divine government conceived by the clergy is diametrically opposed to this. They despise and denounce the principle of self-government, asserting that the consent of the people as to whether God shall govern them is rebellion against him.

Prof. Jamieson also attacked the clergy for introducing the Bible into schools. Children, he said, are thus inculcated with false ideas, and foundations are laid for superstitious beliefs, opposed to all reasoning and scientific truths. That the clergy are endeavoring to destroy the governing principles of this government is evident, he held, in their persistent efforts to remodel the Constitution. They want to insert after the words "we the people," these: "Humbly acknowledging almighty God as the source of all authority and power in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler among nations, and his revealed will as of supreme authority, in order to constitute a Christian government," after which the remainder of the preamble should continue in its present form. This is not a Christian government, the lecturer contended. It was not so intended by the men who framed the constitution. This is an Infidel government, and was so devised by its founders. If its strength were to be sapped by the encroachments of the clergy, human liberty in this land of liberty would soon be at an end. Already the clergy are extending their power and influence. Chaplains open the proceedings of Congress and of state legislatures, and even of political meetings, praying that God may carry the election for their party. This was not contemplated by our forefathers; by Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, or Thomas Paine, who was the spirit of enlightened thought in those days. The Constitution guarantees to every man the right to worship any god he chooses and as many of them as he chooses, including the devil. This is a land of Freethought, and should be maintained as such, and its powers should not be curtailed or its influence trammeled by the tyrannical dictates of the clergy, who would establish a religious despotism where now universal freedom is acknowledged as the aim of all our institutions. The lecturer upbraided the clergy for the stand they took on the slavery question, the majority of them being opposed to abolition, and while he respected them as men, he detested and hated their Christianity and denounced their attempts to disrupt the government.

How to Avoid Paying Taxes on Homes.

From Pomeroy's Democrat.

How to avoid the payment of taxes. This great subject attracts the attention of good sinners and dishonest saints alike. The bondholder, smuggler, and Christian, each beats the government all he can by sneaking out of the payment of taxes and duties. Hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of church property are untaxed because they are used for religious purposes. Not exclusivly for the sheltering of those who listen to gospel utterances or religious rulings, as parties, fairs, lotteries, etc., are held in these edifices. If these churches are exempt from taxation because they are used a part of the time for religious exercises, then under the same law all homes in which family prayers or other religious exercises are held, no matter how seldem, are also exempt from taxation.

Near by is a church building. As a property, the land it stands on, the building, the fence, and all within the inclosure is exempt from taxation. Preaching and singing are to be heard there say once or twice a week. They hav oyster suppers, tableaux, lectures, grab-bags, lotteries, concerts, etc., there at times. The boys and girls go there to spark; the women to show their bonnets, and the men to show their breeches and to gain a rest for the brain from business tension so they can sock it to their best friends the rest of the week. Buildings used for this purpose are exempt from taxation, while the home of a poor man who has religious service in his house fourteen times a week is taxed! And his house is not open to shows, concerts, tableaux, etc., as are the large buildings wherein audiences assemble for many other purposes than to pour out their souls in praying or penitence.

Religious farmers, mechanics, and home builders, if church property used only once or twice a week for religious services and often for other purposes, is exempt from taxation, then your homes in which religious services are held daily; in which the Bible is taught, and prayers are heard or lifted up, should also be exempt from taxation, unless your God teaches that Christianity consists in sneaking out of paying anything for the protection of its property.

Christian Persecution.

When Charles Darwin promulgated the theory of Evolution as the true history of creation, the church, conscious of its peril, sought to scoff and ridicule it down.

The Christians' old familiar weapon, slander, could not be used to crush so great, so grand a man as Charles Darwin. With reason they could not overthrow his theories. In this he occupied a seat sublimely above them all, while every rock, and tree, and all created things, proclaimed the truths he uttered.

How then could priestcraft overthrow the man and save their faith and power?

"Why?" they said, "think of a monkey as Darwin's MOTHER!" Then Christians, ignorant of great nature's power, and of the wisdom of her ways, but proud of their decent from Adam made of mud by God in Eden, laughed and scoffed at Darwin until the tears ran down their eyes. Thus they sought to serve their God and save their faith.

But Darwin sat majestic through it all, nor smiled nor frowned nor sought protection from their jeers, and lived to reap the world's applause. He died knowing that science once again had triumphed over superstition.

The tables now are turned on Christians. The world begins to know that God is but a myth, and Christianity, once so sacred held, is but a superstition worthy of contempt and ridicule.

England, as it were, admits the truth of all that's said and lets her sober scholars liv, but says that he who laughs shall die. Prove, if you must, the Jew's Jehovah all a myth, but pray be serious, and do it reverently, or die.

Oh, how sensitiv are Christians, born again to heavenly thoughts! These new born-babes of Christ's humility! How hard for them to bear the cross of ridicule! Better that Foote, Ramsay, Kemp, and all who laugh at Christians' threat of boiling hell, shall pine in dungeons than that these babes shall suffer the keen cut of ridicule of their old fiendish God and silly superstition.

Christians, beware! "He who taketh the sword shall perish by the sword" (you may hav heard this saw). The giant Liberty cannot now be bound by Christian thongs, and if you harry him too long, why, he may turn and rend you.

If you believe that God or Christ has power, and did perform the miracles you preach, and can and does perform them now, and visit vengeance on their foes, and answer Christian prayers, ask them to punish scoffing sinners, we will not chide you; but if your God and Christ decline to do your bidding after you hav long and loudly called, and scoffers prosper still, then as Christians smile at Hindoo superstition, so we may smile at your credulity, and if you take the law to make our faces solemn, long, and straight, as you were wont to do in days of yore, then we may straighten you; that's all. W. O. FISHER.

To Delinquents.

There are a considerable number of our subscribers whose date upon their wrapper indicates that they hav not sent us any remittance for their TRUTH SEEKER since January, 1882—some fifteen months—and a larger number whose time expired sometime during that year. To these, and especially the former, we would say that we need the money to pay the running expenses of the paper, and we ask them to remit without delay. We dislike exceedingly to be constantly dunning subscribers, but the necessity for it is not of our creation. The individual sums are not large, and will not inconvenience any one to send, but in the aggregate they foot up hundreds of dollars and are just what we depend upon to pay bills. Those in arrears will oblige us greatly by paying attention to this at once.

Notes.

"CHRIST," remarks the Advocate, "was a carpenter." We remember, now we think of it, that he bore a holy name, and his saws hav been passed down to us among his augurs and other tools.

"THE situation is serious, but not terrifying," says the Methodist organ. The reverse may be said of the doctrins that paper promulgates. They are somewhat terrifying in themselvs, but there is no excuse for anyone to consider them serious.

THE last of this season's series of parlor meetings to consider the effects of hereditary transmission, prenatal culture, etc., will be held at Dr. Foote's, 120 Lexington av., an Thursevening, April 26th. An invitation to all who feel interested is extended. The meetings during the winter were very interesting and instructiv.

MR. E. H. HEYWOOD is coming to this city to hold a Labor Reform meeting. He will use Clarendon Hall, 13th street, between 3d and 4th avenues, on Monday and Tuesday, May 6th and 7th, for that purpose, holding three sessions daily. Among those who will address the audiences, besides Mr. Heywood, are Prof. R. W. Hume, Wm. Rowe, an old land reformer and a good worker; Wm. Hanson, and Dr. Caleb S. Weeks, author of the recently published book, "Songs of the Morning." Mr. Heywood intends to make the right to produce the Passion Play in this city one of the issues, and hopes the friends of mental liberty will come to his aid.

FOR a good specimen of Christian courtesy in writing of an opponent, we can conscientiously recommend the following from the American Christian Review, published in Cincinnati:

"The audience of Col. Ingersoll, when he gets up a tirade against the Bible, reminds one of the old adage that 'birds of a feather flock together.' All the riff raff of society—profane men, and bad women, thieves, and liars, and drunkards, and debauchees, and adulterers, and sportsmen, and fast women, and sensual pleasure-seekers, and apostates from churches—all these rush to hear him, because bad men and abandoned women willingly believe these things they desire to hav true."

If we could insult the editor of that paper by calling him a liar we should feel like doing it, but as it is, we will be content with promising him a harp when he gets to heaven.

A YOUNG lady, now an inmate of the Roman Catholic convent at Montreal, and belonging to the order called Saints of the Names of Jesus and Mary, has for the past few weeks been endeavoring to obtain absolution from her vows, and to return home to her parents. The bishop has been appealed to, and the matter laid before the pope, but without success. The young lady's health is in a shattered condition, and she is liable to die if not liberated. That is the way the matter stands at present. The cupability in the affair rests equally with the authorities of the convent and the parents of the young lady. The former hav the power to release the nun, and the latter hav the power to remove her against the wishes of the pope and bishop. The girl is too much under the influence of the bishop, and has too much respect for the church, to break her vows. It rests with herself to say whether she will brave the wrath of the church and be free, or sacrifice her health and happines to superstition and remain a prisoner. Unless she decides upon the former course she will deserve little sympathy from the world if she continues an inmate of "God's prison house" as long as it stands.

DIED, in Morristown, N. J., on the 18th, in the hope of a glorious resurrection, James Treglown, murderer. Mr. Treglown was hanged. He went hence by the way of hemp. He had murdered his sweetheart, Minnie Chergwin. In theory and practice generally he was a Christian. On the night before his execution he dictated a poem, one verse of which is as follows:

"The platform is built, I saw it made,
And yet to die I am not afraid.
It is death to die, but oh, how sweet,
The blessed savior there to meet!"

Mr. Treglown may, as he intimates, experience great pleasure on meeting his savior, but it is doubtful if the joy will be mutual.

A MINISTER out in Steubenville, Ohio, recently preached a sermon in which he stated that that place was a sin-cursed city. The editor of the Steubenville Gazette admits the possible truth of the assertion, but claims there are extenuating circumstances. He cannot find it in his heart to censure Eve for bringing sin upon the earth in the way she did. He does not believe the picnic sort of life passed in the Garden of Eden was suited to the activ mental capacities of woman. The elegant leisure must hav been monotonous. The apple was there. She conceived it would make a fair dessert, and she ate it. Thereby sin came, but knowledge escorted it, and civilization strolled along in the rear. The world may be growing wickeder, but nowadays we hav no women like Lot's daughters, and no men after God's own heart as sinful as David. The editor maintains the signs of the times are auspicious. Steubenville ought not to be sin-cursed with so many ministers as it has, and he doesn't think it is worse than other cities. Between the minister and the editor the readers of the Gazette enjoy the prospect of something unique in religious polemics.

THE Rev. Dr. Blanchard, president of Wharton College, Ill., was called upon to officiate at the funeral of a deceased member of the Knights of Pythias. He took the occasion to denounce all secret societies in a most severe manner. A sister of the dead man was so affected by the affront given her friends that she fainted, and was carried out of church. Her husband then requested the preacher to stop, and the father of the deceased told him he "better quit," whereupon he gathered up his manuscript and went away. Another minister was hunted up, and the services continued. Mr. Blanchard showed himself to be no gentleman, and bereft of good sense. The Knights of Pythias, as a society, are not as dangerous to American institutions as the Young Men's Christian Association, and contains better men. The college president had no excuse for denouncing it at a funeral of one of its members. Ministers proverbially show bad taste at funerals. That it is time the dead were taken out of their hands is a conviction which is rapidly growing. They cannot injure them, but they can and do, as in this case, wound the feelings of the living. Religious ceremonies at funerals should be done away with.

THE Presbyterians in Jersey City are having a teapot tempest over the cabinet organs some of the churches hav introduced to aid the singers. The United Presbyterian church is the fossil! Its members are veritable Calvins and Knoxes, regarding the introduction of music into their worship as being without doubt the work of the devil. This view was especially held at a recent meeting by Brother Harrison, who said that dangerous heresies always commenced with music. Several clergymen openly threatened to "burst up" the whole church unless they prohibited organ or other music, and one elder was in favor of "bursting it up" any way, for "he could see no peace for God's church so long as the devil's organs and cornets and fiddles and trombones made such a racket." It begins to look as though the United Presbyterians are rather disunited, and music "which can split a cabbage" may be the rock upon which it will stand. The meeting closed over the maddest lot of Presbyterians seen for many a day. This clash of sixteenth century bones is very amusing to outsiders, and reminds one of the old-time ecclesiastical councils where men were killed in the heat of argument over some fine point in theology.

ONE of the results of nineteenth-century development in New York is the "Dude." He is a young man of the age when it is uncertain whether it is best to shave or try and raise a moustache. He gets the cut of his clothes from London; wears close-fitting trousers; long, pointed shoes; yellow gloves; a short overcoat with about two inches of the spiked tails of the coat underneath visible below it, and carries a cane, the silver head of which he amuses himself by sucking. He is partly educated, has some money, and plenty of leisure time. His resort is the sidewalk in front of hotels. This is the substance of the description given of the Dude by the Tribune, which then goes on to say that he gets his religion from Col. Ingersoll. From what source the Tribune derives its facts in regard to the religious aspect of the Dude is unknown. It appears to us that the average Sunday-school youth has more of the Dudic characteristics than the Infidel young man. The Toughs of New York, it is well known, are fervent Catholics. So are the Boys; and both are ready to fight any man who isn't. The Dude, the Tough, and the Boy form the three out-of-the-way classes of New York young men. If the first gets his religion from Ingersoll, there is hope for him. He won't go to the penitentiary with the Tough, nor into Tammany Hall with the Boy. He will probably go to Chickering Hall and hear Adler, giv up his snobbish habits as he gets older, and may yet become a useful member of society. He certainly is not a dangerous one.

W. F. JAMIESON has been invited to deliver a course of lectures in Merrillan, Wis., which may be given within two weeks. He would be pleased to visit other places near Merrillan. Address him at Lake City, Minn.

Materialistic Immortality.

To Otto Wettstein, of Illinois: In The Truth Seeker of the 14th inst. I read with much interest your graphic account of the reception given to Mr. Bennett by yourself and others on his return home from his travels in foreign countries. In the exposition of his opinions, which you describe as having taken place on that occasion, I trace the line of thought embodied in the most philosophical of all his writings—a tract on "Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind," which he published some years ago, and which appeared originally as editorial in The Truth Seeker. I am glad that one so intelligent, candid, and generous as you are, esteemed Bennett as an honest man, and appreciated him as a thinker. I am pleased that with all your Materialistic prejudices you gave him a hearing, and that you deemed his argument for a future state of existence plausible, if not logical. I take this opportunity to say that for the rest and satisfaction I hav found on those great questions which are now agitating the minds of men, I feel more indebted to Bennett than to any other man living on this planet. His theory tends more to unity of belief and feeling than any other I know, and to my mind disposes of objections that other theories leave untouched In this letter, which I take the liberty of adddressing to you in Bennett's own paper, I beg leave to submit some reasons for believing in a future state of existence, taken from a Materialistic point of view; and if you will read Bennett's little tract attentivly you will see that in doing so I am only hammering out on the anvil of my mind the ideas which originated in the workshop of his brain.

Let us admit that matter, in its varied forms, is the only thing which exists and composes the universe; that mind—intellect—is a force which does not exist outside of matter, but is an attribute of matter itself; that the various and opposit conceptions of a God, formed and announced by the religious sects, are all false and childish. Then, matter, dead and coarse as it seems to be to a thoughtless observer, is, after all, self-endowed with innumerable capabilities. It is not only indestructible, and can neither be increased or diminished in quantity, but it is in an eternal state of change.

If we take a mass of iron ore or gold, and put it into a crucible, it loses its hardness by heat, and becomes a liquid. Increase the heat, and it becomes a vapor like steam. Increase the heat still more, and the vapor becomes so attenuated as to escape our notice, but it is still matter; and if we could follow it up above the ether and subject it to our fiery experiment there is no telling how many more changes it could undergo before we brought it back, by the application of cold, to its solid condition as metal. Most persons associate with matter the idea of grossness; but the ether, which begins where our atmosphere ends, and which forms the medium through which alone we can receive the light and warmth of the sun, is matter. The odor of a violet which salutes the olfactory nerves and givs us pleasure is composed of the infinitesimal particles of matter. The odor of musk mixed centuries ago with the mortar used in building the walls of an oriental palace is clearly discernible to this day. A man in perfect health and cleanliness may be clad from crown to sole in close-fitting garments, yet if he goes into a crowd of a thousand persons his dog will get on his track and find him. Nay, a hundred men, all from the bath where soap and water hav made them absolutely clean, may intermingle with a thousand others, and each man's dog will hav no difficulty in finding his master. In this case the dog's organs of scent are so delicate, yet so powerful, that he detects the peculiar odor which is eliminated from his owner's person; and this faculty is as reliable to the animal as the organs of sight, hearing, or feeling.

Matter is so subtil and susceptible that it can be transformed into thought. What two things can be more dissimilar than a plate of boiled beef, cabbage, and potatoes, on the one hand, and a poem, like the Iliad, on the other? Yet the Iliad, in the wonderful laboratory of the stomach and the brain, where nature manipulates her materials, may be manufactured out of just such substances. Bennett cites the experiment of a chemist who sends a current of electricity through a solution of nitrate of silver. Immediately the silver is separated from the nitric acid which holds it in solution, and from one of the wires conducting the electric current, a beautiful silver tree begins to sprout, under the law of crystallization; branches of the metal are thrown out and covered with seeming foliage, just as a plant perfects itself under the summer's light and heat.

Now, suppose that a current of electricity from a passing cloud is sent through a man's body, which is made up of more than a dozen chemical ingredients, why may it not simply separate the subtil and invisible, but real, qualities of the matter which composes his personality, and send them off to continue their existence under the great law of change; while, under the same law, it sends the coarser material to the grave, or more properly, the crematory, there to be changed by time, or fire, into life-giving qualities, so that they may enter into new forms of being? If the nitrate of silver exists after it suffers a shock of electricity separating it from its environments, and it assumes an improved condition of existence, who that believes in the endless possibilities of matter will be bold enough to say that when a man's body is paralyzed by death the thinking part of it called mind—intelligence—may not go off, under the law of change, in one direction, as the rest of the body has gone to meet its destiny of change in another direction? What is there unreasonable and unphilosophical in the idea that the chemistry which can distil a play like "Hamlet" out of cabbage and potatoes, through the medium of the stomach and the brain, could convert death into a new form of life? In disease the body sometimes loses half its normal weight. The parts which composed it hav gone into the atmosphere and taken on new forms of existence.

The mind, though it is admitted to be matter, may be more etherealized and sublimated than the ether itself. Why may it not pass away at death into enlarged conditions as well as the gases which compose the rest of the body?

The potentialities of matter are conceded to be infinit. Why should it not be one of these potentialities that the subtil power of thinking continues to exercise its functions after the rest of the body has entered upon its destined changes? Look at the wonderful changes through which the human embryo passes in the womb before it attains the perfection of development which fits it to be an inhabitant of this world. The slits in the neck called gills close up, its limbs are developed, its ape-like feet assume the human form of those organs; its hairy covering is laid aside; its caudal appendage disappears; it breaks away from its living dependent connections with its mother, and sets up an independent existence as a member of the genus homo, thenceforward doing its own seeing, hearing, breathing, digestion, and circulation. If, during his antenatal existence of nine months, a man can run the whole career of change from an infinitesimal protoplasmic cell up through all the gradations of existence to a human being without his identity being destroyed, what has his identity to fear from the change called death? The changes he experiences before birth are vastly more numerous and momentous than those he undergoes while he livs, and when he dies. And as there is really no such thing as death, or annihilation, of anything that has ever had being, but only change from one mode of existence into another, I see no reason why the wonderful force called mind, which by its volition so controls the body, may not exist and maintain its identity indefinitly into the future.

We stumble over the terrible apprehension that death destroys our identity, and that after the event takes place we only liv as a fallen tree does, in its race, or its descendants. But the physiologists assure us that about once in seven years the particles of matter composing the flesh and bones and brain of a man are all transformed into a new body, by virtue of the great law of change. During this slow process, however, the man preserves his identity, so that if he commit a crime the law holds him responsible, although the act occurred more than seven years before. His identity consists in the sameness of that part of him which understands, which thinks, and which feels that it ought, or ought not, to do a certain thing. All sense of accountability rests upon the fact of this sameness of one's personality continuing from the beginning to the end of life, notwithstanding the constant changes which the substance of his body is undergoing. Then, if all the changes made during the wear and tear of seventy years of life, amounting to ten in number, hav not produced the least effect in destroying a man's personal identity, why should it be destroyed by a current of electricity which separates the refined thinking part of his body from the phosphorus, the lime, the sulphur, the magnesia, the carbonic acid, the ammonia, the hydrogen, the oxygen, and some other materials, which the chemist, by actual analysis, finds the rest of the human body is composed of?

There is another argument I wish to submit to examination. It is clearly the intention of nature that a child should remain in its mother's womb the greater part of a year to undergo the process of development, fitting it to answer the purpose of living in this world. But suppose that a week before birth the child dies. On examination of the body we find that the eye was formed to see, the ear to hear, its nerves of smell to enjoy the odor of flowers, the brain to eliminate thought, and the limbs for action and locomotion. This wonderful structure was obviously designed to act on a theater much larger and very different from the narrow confines where we find it. Nature designed it to be born, to grow up to man's estate, to develop all its latent powers of body, mind, and affections during a life reaching through eighty years. In thousands of other cases like this nature has carried out her purpose, and this leads us to believe that it was her intention in this case, but the whole scheme has been frustrated by death. Now, when we come to contemplate man as he is, we find that, as an animal, he has more aspirations than can be realized, and vastly more capabilities than he can use on the theater of this world. It is not necessary in order merely to be happy that he should understand astronomy, geology, mathematics, or any other of the sciences. Savages and barbarians are perfectly contented with the smallest amount of scientific knowledge, and are more happy than we are. Indeed, civilization, progress, proves a restless, unsatisfied state of mind which seeks relief in change, and thus blindly responds to the great purpose of the universe. The contented barbarian has, however, latent fire in his soul. He has, in an undeveloped and germ state, all the intellectual powers that Newton possessed. He has every one of the possibilities which we see actualized in the great men of our time, for we ourselvs, if we go back far enough in tracing the line of our descent, will come to the cave-dwellers.

Again, we find that man has a variety of desires of the body, the intellect, and the affections. To meet and gratify these desires in all their variety nature has made abundant arrangements. If he has a desire to attain knowledge he has the brain adapted to observe, compare facts, and to draw conclusions, and the whole field of knowledge lies open before him, and invites him to enter in and gather its fruits. If he desires wealth, or any other good, they are to be obtained, not by mere wishing, but by a use of the necessary means. The same is true of the desires of the body and the affections. Now, among the strongest of his desires is the one to perpetuate his existence; to fall in with the great law of progress and develop those powers he is conscious of possessing, but which are only in a germ state, yearning for the environments to be such as will facilitate his progress toward perfection. His ideal of perfection as to the beauty and strength of the body, as to the objects of the affections, and as to the capacity of the intellect, is infinitly higher than anything he sees realized in this life, and he longs to attain it. But life is too short to gratify this desire. The present environments are unfathomable. The whole man is a modification of matter, and it seems reasonable that among its infinit possibilities is the interesting one that, whereas we underwent a mighty change for the better at birth, still preserving our life and identity of person, so we will undergo a similar change for the better still after the body is dissolved by death. This is what, I think, Tyndall meant in his celebrated Belfast address when he said that he discerned in matter the promis, as well as the potency, of every form and quality of life.

I flatter myself that I hav made out a case from the Materialistic standpoint going to show the extreme probability—ninety-nine chances against one in a hundred—that death is not the annihilation of the identical person, but a simple change in the mode of existence. But I do not wish to be deceived in this matter, and to build up hopes through life which will be dashed to pieces at the grave's mouth. There is one thing, however, which is comforting. As human beings we are all in the same boat. If she strikes upon the rocks of fate and goes to the bottom, we all go down together. If she livs through the storm of death, and gets into smoother seas, and has plain sailing, we shall all be there to rejoice in the fact and in the prospect of a long and delightful voyage.

Darwin's Religion.

From Gaillard's Weekly.

Karl Blind, in the Vienna Neue Freie Presse, notes the curious fact that the recent revelations regarding Darwin's religious opinions were only noticed by three or four of the English periodicals, and that even Nature suppressed Darwin's letter to a Jena student, which Haeckel had sent to the editor as a part of one of his lectures. In this letter, it will be remembered, Darwin had stated verbatim: "For myself, I do not believe that there ever has been any revelation;" and in a conversation with Dr. Ludwig Büchner, he said he was with him in thought, but preferred the word Agnostic to Atheist, and that he had given up Christianity because "it is not supported by evidence." Karl Blind adds to this testimony another item, in the form of a letter written by Darwin in 1873, to a Dutch gentleman (N. D. Doedes), of which we giv the following translation from the German, as given in the Presse: "I find it impossible to giv a brief answer to your question. I do not know if I should be able to answer it if I should write a great deal about it. Thus much I can say, that the impossibility of understanding how this great and wonderful universe, besides our own consciousness, could hav come into existence, through chance, seems to me to be our principal argument for the existence of a God; but whether this argument is of any value I hav never been able to decide; for I know that, if we accept a highest cause, the mind again strives to know whence it came and how it arose. Moreover, I cannot pass over the difficulty which, on this assumption, arises from the vast amount of suffering prevalent in the world. I am, indeed, bid to attach a certain amount of weight to the judgment of the large number of intelligent men who hav implicitly believed in God; but here, again, I see what an insufficient kind of proof this is. The safest conclusion seems to be that the whole subject lies beyond the range of human understanding; nevertheless, a man may do his duty."

Infidel Philosophy.

The other day (being piously inclined) I took up a religious paper and read the following: "Our Heavenly Father is able and willing to do more for us than an earthly parent can do." It would be difficult to express the feelings which these few words left in my mind. Will Christians ever become sufficiently intelligent to distinguish between truth and falsehood? said I. Will they ever become honest enough to speak the truth when it is made known to them?

Instinctivly my mind ran over the thousands who had perished by shipwreck. I thought of the countless thousands who had perished by famin and epidemics; of millions who had perished by fire and flood; and other millions by volcanoes and earthquakes. Christians are not ignorant of these facts, and why will they persist in filling the minds of the young with such false notions? The tendency is not to make them self-reliant and cautious, but to trust to a source for help from which it never comes and so make them careless. Do these shipwrecks, famins, epidemics, floods, fires, and earthquakes, where thousands perish without regard to condition, age, or sex, the innocent with the guilty, show forth the tender care of a father?

I hav in my mind a poor idiotic being who for more than thirty years has been tortured with fits too terrible to be described. Many times as I hav looked upon this poor demented sufferer, I hav asked myself if a fiend could do worse or accomplish more. His "earthly father" has spent a great deal of money to effect a cure, while "our heavenly father" seems perfectly willing to let him suffer.

A few days ago I met an old man nearly ninety years old, whose face was being eaten away by a cancer. This man has worked hard and served his turn in the world, and now must die one of the most painful and loathsome deaths that could be imagined. Is this the best "our heavenly father" can do for his children? Hasn't he ingenuity enough to take off an old man in a more humane manner? The most brutalized among savages would hardly treat a child in that way.

The "tender care" and "loving kindness" of "our heavenly father" is ever upon the Christian's lips. It has been interwoven in prayers, sung in hymns, and preached in sermons, until the people hav received it as truth without thought or consideration.

I wonder if this loving God, filled with tender care for his children, is any relation to that god that gets wrathy and swears at his children, and sends them "strong delusions," and puts "lying spirits" in their mouths? And I would like to know what this tender-hearted God wants of a hell to roast his dear children in, whom he does so much better for than an earthly parent can do?

By the way, Mr. Christian, how do you think this idea of an endless hell comports with the loving kindness and tender mercy of your God anyhow?

This brings to my mind the case of an individual with whom I hav been acquainted nearly forty years. During all these long years he has been a hard-working, prudent man. Like thousands of others he has raised a large family of children, and done the best for them he possibly could. He has been a kind husband, a tender parent, and a faithful friend. For the last four or five years he has been tortured with pain. He has lost his manhood and become as a child. Much of the time his sufferings are so intense that he cries like a baby. Day by day he prays for death to relieve him from his suffering.

Can it be possible that a tender, merciful God, filled with loving kindness, can thus torture one of his children in this life, and then roast him eternally in hell? Is such a God worthy of our adoration? If a man had the power to relieve such a sufferer and would not do it, he would be pronounced a brute. O ye Christians, will ye worship in a God what ye would despise in a man? Is it possible that agonies which move a man to tears will not touch the sympathy of a God who is filled with loving kindness? Is God more cruel than man? The hardest hearted man would relieve such a sufferer. Shall we adore a god who will not stoop to an act of kindness which the vilest wretch would perform?

When a man rears up a family of children and fits them for the discharge of the duties assigned to them in life, and when he has given to the world the best services of threescore years and ten, he has fulfilled his mission, he has accomplished all that nature sent him to do. Upon a principle of justice can such a man be eternally tortured in hell? If so, what becomes of the watchful care and loving kindness of "our heavenly father?" The great majority of men mean well and try to do well, and to say that the great mass of mankind was born only to be damned is better suited to a South Sea Islander's conception of justice than that which we ought to attribute to a God.

My Christian friend, to be consistent you must giv up the idea of the tender care and loving kindness of "our heavenly father," and in order to be human you must giv up the idea of an eternal hell, also. Could men be more unselfish than our Revolutionary fathers?—working as they did, many of them without pay, half clothed and half fed, staining the snow with blood from their bare feet, to make this country grand and free. Are they writhing in hell? A truer, braver man than Ethan Allen never lived; but he did not believe in the savior. Christian, do you believe he is in hell?

Think of the good old grandfathers and grandmothers who braved the dangers of pioneer life, some of them living upon roots and berries, watching their children to keep them from being devoured by the wolf and bear, and suffering such privations as we never dream of, in order to leave to us the beautiful valleys and fields of waving grain. Most of them must be in hell, too. Now, Christian, would it not be a decent thing for your God to let up on these a little?

Once a year we meet to scatter flowers over the graves of the heroic dead who fell defending the dear old flag. How can we be justified in strewing their graves with flowers if God has damned their souls? Why is it that these reflections so shock a sensitiv mind? Simply because a man who is abreast with the civilization of the age is a nobler being than the Christian's God.

The sufferings by which we are surrounded and the pains of an eternal hell can never he made to harmonize with the idea of eternal goodness. Christian, did you ever think much about your Bible God, anyway? You say he is tender and kind, and yet he made a big oven in which he is constantly baking his children into brimstone pies. He cannot do anything wrong, and yet he repents of what he has done. All-powerful, yet he got balked by a few iron carts. He begat a son, and was himself the child of his own begetting. He can bless little children, or send bears to tear them to pieces. He can make an ass talk or a man eat grass. Curious God, that. An inventor has recently brought out a chair that can be adjusted to a hundred different positions. If he could hav made it reach two hundred positions, it would hav suited the Bible God exactly.

Barnum could "get the bulge on" other showmen if he could secure this God and big chair. It would beat the "What-is-it?" Allow me to parody a couple of lines, and I will giv you a more perfect idea of him:

> The Christians' God, shaped by a squeeze,
> Is formed like wax and molded as they please.

Soon the children of men will turn their gaze from heaven to earth. Then good-bye Gods, good-bye ministers, good-bye churches, good-bye everything which does not pertain to the well-being of mankind. It may be a little tough on God, but it will be a great day for man. Say, my Christian friend, hadn't we better just let God go, and try and giv humanity a boost? You can't trust God; these shipwrecks and floods and fires show how awfully he goes back on his friends sometimes—and maybe in one of his wrathy freaks he will drop you into one of his boiling caldrons of brimstone porridge, and then you'll think how you dirtied the knees of your trousers for nothing.

Some of the more advanced Christians claim that these barbarous ideas of God hav become obsolete or far behind the standard of cultured Christianity. By whose efforts, I would ask, hav such crude ideas been rendered unpopular? Here we are surrounded with sickness and suffering, with famins and earthquakes, and after suffering here, doomed to a thousandfold greater torments in an endless hell; and yet the Christian talks about the goodness and mercy and kindness of "our heavenly father."

Could a greater absurdity be imagined? And while we hav been laboring to bring the minds of the people up to a higher plane of thought, Christianity has contested the ground inch by inch. While we hav been laboring to expurgate these obnoxious ideas, the Christians hav been denouncing us as Infidels and enemies of God. While they hav been sending missionaries to the heathen, we hav been uplifting the masses at home. Were it not for the work of the Infidels, Christians would be whipping women, hanging witches, burning heretics, and paving hell with infants' skulls at the present time. If human thought has been elevated, it is because Christianity has been beaten back. If the character of a jealous, revengeful, and ferocious God has been toned down and rendered more presentable, Infidelity, and not Christianity, is justly entitled to all the credit.

Naples, N. Y. JOHN PECK.

The Orthodox Doctors Defeated.

From Cooley's Weekly, Norwich, Conn.

"The bill to prevent the practice of medicin without diplomas was rejected." So says our legislativ report this week. The words are few but meaty. The bill was the one, or a child of the one, that was whipped out in the legislature last year, and has been, years before. It is a bill that won't wash. It is a bill the masses don't approve of. And it is a bill that never can pass in the legislature of this state, unless our future Solons deteriorate wonderfully. Any bill that hinders one from aiding or trying to aid another in sickness is clap-trap. Away with it.

Byron Boardman, of this city, has fought this bill with tooth and nail, as it were, this year, as well as last, and it is doubtless owing in great part to his merciless exposures that it has again been defeated by so large a majority. We are glad it has come out so, and that Mr. Boardman has the courage to manfully express his convictions in behalf of what we consider a good cause. Verily we do turn out things in the Rose of New England, other that slanderers and prize fighters.

Religion in Germany.

The following extract from an American girl's letter to the Home Journal depicts quite clearly the state of religion in Germany. Miss Lizzie Goodwin appears to be a Christian and of course can but lament over a state of things in which clearer-headed writers hav seen the cause of Germany's material progress. The church may be supported by and united to the state, but it was only when the people themselvs repudiated the unholy alliance and rendered it nugatory by their disbelief and absence from the state "barns" that Germany came down from her dominion over the air to a dominion over the destinies of all Europe. France would be a more respected nation to-day had her peasantry the self-reliance in religion of the Germans instead of being the slaves of the priests:

"One does not need to speak of the culture of Germany, but one cannot help noticing how entirely this culture is divorced from religion. Protestant Germany is practically free-thinking Germany. To believe literally in the Bible, or that its claims are higher than those of other books, is to the German nonsense. If you are 'pious' you are either knave or fool. Sincerity, enthusiasm, conviction—your German friend smiles at you in bland uncomprehension. He makes you feel by his pitying glance how ignorant, how narrow is your simple faith. 'Yes, I hav heard that it is different in America,' he says, in compassionate excuse for your stupidity. Poor soul! Circumstances hav been too much for you there, but at least here, in this purer air, you can throw off these fetters of church-going and Sabbath observance. To both Catholic and Protestant the Sabbath is a day of recreation; a day for picnics and excursions and balls and theaters. The late king of Hanover, perhaps the most pious king in Europe, gave court balls regularly on Sunday, and the English embassador, whose conscience troubled him because of his forced attendance, was a laughing-stock. The German, indeed, can hardly keep his temper long enough to ever hear the tale of the Puritan Sabbath. But he is glad to know that the proud German does not submit to it, and he hopes that continued immigration will blot out this stain on the fair land of liberty.

"But on the other hand a church does not mean in Germany, as with us, a community of believers united socially and spiritually, interested in their church and their pastor, and thinking of him as their head and leader in all good works. It means a building which the local government has erected, a bare, barn-like structure; no cushioned pews, no family sittings, no 'home' feeling anywhere. It means a minister in a black gown and frill, who also is paid by the state, and with whom on occasions of baptism, confirmations, marriage, and burial you are brought into formal relations. It means a cold liturgic service and poor congregational singing. One hears much of the narrowness of denominationalism with us. In Germany the church is broad enough for the four winds of heaven to blow through it, but some of us would prefer something not quite so catholic and a little warmer. Faithful ministers there are in Germany, and devoted Christians; but they are a pitiful minority. And while with us we associate Infidelity with cynicism, there it is joined to so many domestic virtues, to such reverence for the sacredness of all family ties, that one at first knows not how to meet it. Yet touch on sacred themes with these people, and you are answered with a coolness and irreverence that shocks at once your faith and your taste. Around German coins runs the motto, 'God with us,' but the common people hav relegated the divine name to a by-word. Until a few years ago baptism and confirmation were obligatory, and a man had to produce these two certificates to get leave to be married. Now a parent who does not wish his child baptized can be released from the obligation through certain legal forms; and purely civil marriage is growing in popularity. This seemed more rational to me, though certain old ladies mourned to me over the 'godless state,' and recalled the days when every child born in the kingdom was made through baptism and confirmation a member of the church.

"The church, as everyone knows, is supported by government, but not with sufficient liberality to make the profession a desirable one, and in the last thirty years there has been a large decrease in the number of theological students in her universities. So large, however, is the deficit in the public purse, that some years since the governing body of the church declared that one-sixth of the benefices hereafter becoming vacant, must remain so for lack of support. The truth is, the average German does not believe in religion, does not want it, and will not pay for it. Nor is the preaching one hears always of a religious type. A German friend told me of the sermons she used to hear at Jena from the university preacher. 'He did not believe in the Bible—as you do, I mean—or in Christ, or—in anything very much.' 'But how could he preach, then?' 'Oh, he preached on politics. The men went to hear him a great deal. He was very talented—brilliant, you know. And he had to preach on something to get his salary from the government, you see.'

"Indeed, looking over the whole field, one is forced to echo the Englisman who said lately of the land, 'The civilization of Germany is that of a world without God.' Yet it is a great nation, and it has so many heathen virtues that one's regret for the state of affairs is doubled.

"'Providence has given to the English the kingdom of the seas, to the French that of the land, to the German the air,' wrote Jean Paul years since, when German valor was not at as high a mark as now. He has possessed himself of his own kingdom and banished from it all sweet spiritual influence. Now he claims equal rule over the others, and life has become to him a purely material affair. His children indeed may keep their 'Christ-child' of Christmas joy and benediction. But it is only as a delusion of childhood that he will admit the story of his birth and his life. To this he has come, then, centuries after Luther. and there seems no present probability of his swinging back to the vigorous faith of his ancestors.

Romish "Decay."

It was to be expected that Bishop McQuaid's recent paper on the "Decay of Protestantism" would not be allowed to go unchallenged by the Protestant clergy, who number in their ranks a great many with zeal exceeding knowledge; and these expectations find realization in the last North American Review. The Rev. Wm. Kirkus comes to the defense of his faith and makes the counter charge that it is Romanism which is dying out. So far as this is said of Catholicism in the old countries it is indisputably true. So far as it relates to the United States it is not true. Catholicism has seen very bright days in Europe in past times. It will see them no more, and the Jesuitical pope and his priests know and realize it. The Catholic church has a vast army at its command. It is used to conquest. Its traditions are full of it. But its leaders see it dying out in the countries where once it held full sway and made the very meadows red with heretical blood, and tinted the sky with flames of heretical flesh. They recognize that under a secular government, where religion is seldom taken into account and none but Atheists disabled on account of their belief, they can grow up in quiet and peace until they are strong enough to rule, and that is the reason why this country has seen such a wonderful growth of Catholicism. What that church would do could it get control of our government, as it has had control of many European governments, is plainly stated in the following paragraph from the Catholic Review:

"There used to be a law in the old days against blasphemy and profanity, and a very good law it was. It is a pity that it should hav grown into desuetude. But the worst blasphemy is that talked in the drawing-room and spread abroad through the press. . . . There is such a crime, punishable by law, as treason against the state. Is avowed treason to God no crime? Lectures such as Mr. Parton's and Mr. Ingersoll's are public misdemeanors, an insult and a wrong to the Christian community. Freedom of speech is all very well, but it should not be allowed to run into blasphemy. There is a law against libel that very effectually restrains freedom of speech. It is time for us, if we are a Christian community, to hav the courage of our convictions, and silence men who openly assail the cross and the religion of God. Blasphemy, however specious its form, should be put a stop to. It is not honest doubt or inquiry. That may be respected and honestly met. But to jest with the most sacred subjects, and proclaim the savior of mankind an impostor, should render a man amenable to the law of a Christian people. To preach Infidelity is to preach the root of all sedition and destroy the state."

This is good Christianity, and is corroborativ testimony to what we hav all along been saying, that Romanism is the most dangerous force that threatens our republican institutions. It is a constant menace, and must be closely watched. Every religious tub should stand on its own bottom, and people hav a right to be Roman Catholics, but the state must be induced in some way to withdraw its support of this church, or it will soon be itself a mendicant at the cathedral door.

The Rev. Mr. Kirkus argues that if Protestantism is breaking up, Romanism shows unequivocal signs of being equally brittle. His remarks upon this are worth quoting:

"But I am very little concerned either with the accuracy or inaccuracy of Bishop McQuaid's statements. For the sake of argument I will admit them; and I think I can easily show that the bishop has entirely failed to perceive their true significance. He argues that Protestantism is a God-forsaken delusion, because it is continually splitting up into new sects; removing its ancient landmarks, if anything Protestant can be ancient; and changing, to suit the spirit of the age, the very foundations of its faith. And it altogether escapes his attention, not only that a similar disintegration is in progress within the Roman church itself, but that that church is as really responsible for the whole of Protestantism as the Anglican church is for non-conformity, or the various Christian sects for Infidelity and Agnosticism. Bishop McQuaid, of course, believes that the Roman church is the only true church; that it has existed from the time of the apostles, and also—for this is implied in the very structure of his argument—that one sure proof of its being the true church is the fact that it does not split into sects, that its creed remains unchanged, and that its ministry and government are unaltered. Of course, it is perfectly obvious that, in one sense, no Christian body whatever breaks up into sects; the sects break off from it; and though its numbers may be thus diminished, it claims to be the original body still. But this is by no means what Bishop McQuaid means by the decay of Protestantism. He argues that Protestantism has decayed because, from the original bodies, such as Anglicanism and Lutheranism, sects hav been continually breaking off. And he seems to forget that this is exactly what has been happening to the Christian chruch from the very beginning; and that it is this which happened, on the largest possible scale, to the Roman church itself at the time of the Reformation. He tells us, with the grossest possible exaggeration, that about three hundred years ago men had definit beliefs with regard to God and eternity. 'They then believed in supernatural truths and in mysteries. They also believed in a divinely established authority to guide men in all questions of faith and morals.' Just as if in the course of the church's history there had been no Arians or Pelagians, no Montanists or Donatists, no great schism between the East and the West. But let us also shut our eyes to these significant facts, alike undeniable and undenied. Let us admit that in the sixteenth century there was only one church, one creed, one divinely constituted and universally recognized guiding authority.

"We may go very much farther. This one church was at that time in possession, not only of all the spiritual forces which belong to a spiritual body, but also of all the physical force which belonged to all the states of Europe. Not only was this physical force at its command, but the church habitually made use of it with the most unrelenting cruelty. She had the absolute monopoly of education; the censorship of books; control, not only over the speculativ opinions, but over the practical morality, of the whole population of Europe. She had her learned doctors, her parish priests, her religious orders, her confessors in every household; she had every possible facility for maintaining her authority by instruction and persuasion; and if, in spite of this, any of her children stumbled into error, even in the labyrinth of the darkest mysteries, she could burn them to a cinder, and never hesitated to do it. She had the field all to herself; and in those days heresy was regarded as a more revolting crime than murder or adultery. And what, as an undisputed fact of history, was the outcome of all this? It was that Romanism 'decayed' into the innumerable sects of Protestants with which, at this very hour, the world is either cursed or blessed. Her truth, if she possessed the truth, became inoperativ; her disciplin, though enforced by the secular arm, became powerless. And if Infidelity and Agnosticism are the legitimate children of Protestantism, then Protestantism itself, with all its children, is the child of Rome. It is idle to pretend that she had disinherited and disowned them. So does Anglicanism disown the Methodists, and the Methodists the Infidels. The fact remains that at the time of the Reformation she lost, and has never since regained, by far the largest part of the population of all the most progressiv and most civilized nations of Europe. And even where she retains a nominal supremacy, it is a supremacy more disgraceful than honorable. That country in Europe which most nearly corresponds to the whole of Europe at the time of the Reformation, is Spain. The national church of Spain is Roman Catholic, and the whole population, with the exception of sixty thousand persons, adhere to the Roman Catholic faith. Any Protestant worship must be strictly in private, and every public announcement of Protestantism is strictly forbidden. The population of Spain is rather more than sixteen and a half millions; and out of this number, at the last general census, there were 11,800,000 persons who could neither read nor write. France, again, is nominally Catholic; is she truly religious? Does she love the church? Does she encourage 'religious' orders, or the accumulation of church property? Does she tolerate the Jesuits, or trust the education of the young to the Roman priesthood? And if Infidelity be spreading, whether as the result of Protestantism or of Romish superstition, what is the Roman church for, if it be not to repress Infidelity and win unbelievers to the truth? What, then, is her contribution to the defense of Christianity or of Theism? By way of commending the truth to puzzled intellects and bewildered consciences, she has invented, within the memory of all of us, the most grotesque caricature of Christianity which human ingenuity could devise; and required men to believe, on peril of damnation, what every student of history knows to be demonstrably false. She does not 'with meekness instruct those who oppose themselvs,' try to lessen their difficulties, and convince their reason; but she tells them that, as they will not believe in the Christianity of the apostles, they must accept in addition the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary and the infallibility of the pope, or go to the devil. Alas, the pity of it is that, on these terms, the great majority of educated men would rather go to the devil than to the church!

"But this brings me to notice that not only has Romanism 'decayed in its membership'—by the great loss she sustained at the Reformation, by the recent secession of the old Catholics, and by the growing indifference and Infidelity of her nominal adherents throughout the continent of Europe—but she is 'decaying' more fatally still from within, by altering her 'creeds,' and her 'government and disciplin.' And by altering her creeds I do not mean—which is all that Bishop McQuaid can charge against Protestants—that multitudes of her members hold large portions of her creeds in abeyance, or explain them away; but that she has made positiv and very serious additions to the creeds themselvs; so that the very conditions of salvation within the Roman church are no longer what they were fifty years ago. And not only has the substance of the creeds been altered—as, e. g., by the addition of the dogmas of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary and the infallibility of the pope—but the change has been made in such a manner, and on such grounds, that the whole foundation of the faith has been changed. In a word, the whole historical continuity of the Roman church has been broken. Her doctrin and disciplin no longer rest either on scripture or on tradition, or on both of them put together, but on the personal, official infallibility of the bishop of Rome. It is assumed, indeed, that he will be protected by the divine Assistentia from contradicting the scriptures or the already defined dogmas of the church. But this is a bare assumption; and in every case he is his own judge, and can infallibly determin either that a new definition does not in fact contradict, but only develops or modifies existing doctrins; or that there was some defect in their definition; or that, in spite of formal regularity, they are nevertheless untrue. Indeed, the dogma of papal infallibility as against the infallibility of the church was demanded for this very purpose: that the church might be saved the appeal to history, or the long and doubtful discussions of an ecumenical synod, and be enabled to decide off-hand, by an ever-available oracle, even upon the most mysterious and difficult subjects. In view of the ever-increasing Infidelity which characterizes this age, and against which the church of Rome is utterly powerless, it was hoped and expected that her real weakness could be concealed by a bolder assertion of strength; that doctrins which are no longer believed or believable would somehow become credible and acceptable, if they were repeated by a mysterious jargon from some sacred oracle; that the mere claim of infallibility would, by its sheer audacity, compel conviction. But in order that this might be accomplished it was necessary to assume the papal infallibility, and to act upon it, before its formal definition, and for the purpose of securing that definition. For this purpose the Vatican Synod was convoked, coerced, enslaved, and stultified. The Vatican Synod is the suicide of the Roman church.

"Not only was the Vatican Synod 'managed' with utter disregard of the most ancient precedents, in such a way as to deprive its canons and decrees of all general validity, but those decrees, when they were produced, wholly revolutionized the 'government and ministry of the Roman church. Bishop McQuaid makes himself merry with the timid uncertainty as to the nature and extent of their authority, expressed by some of the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal church, at a recent congress in Richmond, Va., and he argues from this a 'decay' in the ministry of that church. But the decay, such as it was, was not in the ministry, but in the private opinion of a few individuals as to the nature of that ministry. But the Vatican Synod has annihilated—except in name—the whole episcopate of the Roman church. Not a single bishop of that church any longer resembles in the least degree St. Cyprian or St. Augustine. Every one of them is the mere creation and curate and slave of the pope. What bishop now would dare to write to Leo XIII. as St. Cyprian wrote to the then bishop of Rome, or would escape excommunication if he did?

"So much for organic changes, introduced by recognized authority—change of 'creed,' by new dogmas, declared to be necessary to salvation; changes in 'government and ministry,' by the enslavement and virtual abolition of the episcopate. There is nothing in the slightest degree corresponding to this in the history of Protestantism. Bishop McQuaid knows that, and he therefore adduces varieties of private opinion—the High church, Low church, Broad church—as evidence of a decaying creed. Is there then nothing of that kind in Romanism? Are there no 'minimizers' there?

"The Romish revival in England is due, at bottom, almost exclusivly to two individuals, Newman and Manning; both cardinals, both entitled to speak with high authority, but both, also, so far private individuals that they cannot commit the Roman church to any opinion or confident belief that they may think proper to express. They are to the Roman church what, for instance, Maurice and Pusey are—or alas! were—to the Anglican church. Their differences of opinions, if they do differ, all prove a 'decay of creed,' exactly in the same way as such 'decay' is proved by the co-existence of our High and Broad church parties or schools in the Episcopal churches of England and America. Everybody knows that Cardinal Manning is a papist of the papists, the very type of an ultramontane, the great patron and promoter of those very extravagances of Mariolatry and infallibility which hav rendered all hopes of re-union with the Roman church monstrous and impossible. He out-Herods Herod.

"If Protestantism is 'decaying' because of a diminution of 'its membership,' . . . a fortiori, must Romanism be 'decaying,' which has lost all Protestantism to begin with, and is honeycombed with Infidelity and groveling superstition. If a change of 'creed' be a sure token of coming death, what must be the moribund condition of that church which has not only added, within the memory of all of us, new articles of necessary belief, but has shifted the very foundation upon which all her doctrin and disciplin rests? If vague private opinions about the nature of the ministry in the Protestant Episcopal churches prove 'decay,' what shall we say of the absorption of the whole episcopate in a single see? If it is impossible for a church to liv which embraces High and Low and Broad, a Pusey and a Maurice, what shall we say of a church which includes a Newman and a Manning! What Bishop McQuaid has proved, if he has proved anything, is the 'decay,' not of Protestantism, but of the Christian religion. For my own part, I am not in the least alarmed. Protestantism or no Protestantism, 'God is over all, blessed forever.'"

Between these Protestant and Cathclic charges and counter charges, criminations and recriminations, the world is likely to get considerable new light upon the state of the Christian religion. It looks as though Mr. Kirkus has struck the right note in his closing paragraph, that it is the decay of the Christian religion as a whole that the bishop proved as well as of that branch of it known as the Protestant church. And certainly Mr. Kirkus has not disproved it in any manner. The old adage about certain ill-behaved persons loses none of its force when applied to these wrangling churchmen. When a creed is changed, or done away with altogether, it certainly does mean death to it. The constant and vital concessions the church is making are in response to a public sentiment that demands something better and higher than the fables and superstitions that amused the world a couple of thousand years ago. The central dogmas of Christianity are no longer believed in by a very large share of the intelligent people of the world, and all the assertions to the contrary by Protestant and Catholic priests do not affect the fact. We do not believe, as Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews says, that the reforms come from within the church because the church wants to reform. They come because the church is forced to reform or lose her membership and the respect of those who hav for many years been her mental serfs. Creeds mark the mental plane on which stand their makers. The people advance while the creed remains the same, and finally its restrictions become so irksome that it is thrown aside and a new one substituted. The new creed leaves out all the waste and worthless dogmas. All will recollect the saying, "Let me make the songs of a people and I care not who makes the laws." So with the creeds. The creeds of an age are a true measure of the mental and religious character of the nations holding them.

The adoption of the dogma of infallibility has helped to disintegrate the Romish church, as the revision of the New Testament has thrown discredit upon that volume. No man can be infallible, and everybody knows it. The pope is but a man, and a very narrow-minded man at that. Believing himself to be but a little less in the divine machinery than Jesus, or the Lord himself, he is necessarily bigoted, intolerant, and a dangerous force in the nation. The belief in his infallibility makes his followers as arrogant as himself, and less and less disposed to place the welfare of their country before that of the church.

While the Protestants may find sectarian consolation in the facts presented by Mr. Kirkus, the Freethinkers hav solid grounds for rejoicing. But we advise everyone, both Protestant and Freethinker, to keep a sharp eye upon the Catholics in this country, or we may wake up some day and find them temporarily our political masters. This warning cannot be repeated too often or heeded too soon.

Integralism.—Immortality.

Contributors to the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER this week seem to hav a general inclination to discuss the unknowable. First comes the lecture before the Liberal Club on the "Philosophy of Integralism," which is probably the clearest exposition of the fundamental idea of Universology that has ever been given to the public. The notion which the speaker holds uppermost throughout is that whatever is is necessarily without beginning or end as to its existence in time. If the philosophers of Integralism are correct on this point, then the origin of both mind and matter is lost, and the search for it might as well be given up—which is, perhaps, a wise conclusion, their destiny being of more immediate interest to the human family. The lecturer adds to the vagueness of some of the points attempted to be made by the introduction of terms not found outside the technical phrases invented by the Great Universal Preacher, Mr. Andrews. The "dynamic unity of opposits" is not bad, but its meaning is recondite. "Betweenity" is an uncomely word. Its looks are against it. It may express what no other word does, or it may not; but the fashion of embellishing prepositions with suffixes is not conduciv to clearness of expression, and is an innovation upon the English language that has not hitherto been found necessary. "Absoluta-relativ" and its reverse are not much better. The terms need explanation as much as the problem to which they are applied. Universology promises a great deal, but while its significance is bound up and hidden in the mass of unfamiliar words and phrases which its present exponents find it incumbent upon them to employ, the science is not likely to be popularly understood. The Colloquium, of which Mr. Andrews is collocutor-in-chief, is a school of Universology. Nevertheless, when as astute a gentleman as Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, after attending its meetings, and having access to its printed documents, essays to set forth its purposes in an article in THE TRUTH SEEKER, it is necessary for Mr. Andrews to follow him in the next issue and set the public right by correcting several important errors. If a man of Mr. Putnam's insight goes astray in the premises, where less clear-headed people must expect to find themselvs when the conclusions are to be drawn is a subject for endless speculation. So much for Integralism and Universology.

Next we hav the Hon. Arthur B. Bradford on the subject of "Materialistic Immortality," a question which must always be of interest to seekers after the truth as regards a future existence. This topic is a favorit one with Spiritualists, and his theory appears to be the most reasonable of any advanced. It presents many difficulties for those Materialists to contend with who believe in the total and absolute cessation of consciousness at the death of the body. The question has never been better stated. The pen of Mr. Bradford adorns every subject it touches, and we take pleasure in printing whatever he is pleased to write.

Mr. J. R. Perry, further along, presents some novel ideas about the devil. He appears to be something of an Integralist, perhaps without knowing it. If Integralism seeks to utilize whatever may be turned to profit in this world, Mr. Perry has made that philosophy a valuable contribution by showing how the devil of resistance is useful as opposed to what might be called the divinity of force. The dynamic unity of these two opposits, if we catch the significance of the phrase, preserves the equilibrium of things, and produces the harmonious order in nature which we behold. The article contains more food for thought than the semi-humorous style in which it is written might lead the casual reader to suppose.

Other writers, Messrs. Peck and Lynn, for instance, hav done their share to make the present number of THE TRUTH SEEKER interesting to students. We hav not made these remarks with the view of taking issue with either of the contributors mentioned, nor with the expectation of saying any more upon their subjects, but merely to call the special attention of readers to the excellence of their articles, which, taken together, compass a large area of debatable ground.

The Forgery in Josephus.

It givs us great pleasure to comply with the following request:

FLEETVILLE, PA., Apr. 14, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As others are appealing to you for information, I will join the crowd. Graves, in his "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," in treating of the forged passage in Josephus referring to Christ, speaks of Dr. Lardner as an eminent Christian, who had thoroughly examined the subject, and who givs nine reasons why the passage should be considered spurious. He does not quote them in full. I would like to see them; and also, who is this Dr. Lardner? If you can print them in THE TRUTH SEEKER I doubt not that many others will be obliged as well as I. The Christians around here hav not yet learned of the forgery.

Yours truly, W. W. WALLACE.

Nathaniel Lardner was an eminent Christian author, writing many works to sustain the claims made for his system of religion. He was born in 1684, and died in 1768. He studied for the Presbyterian ministry. The following are his reasons for considering the passage in Josephus relating to Christ spurious. We hav taken the liberty to italicize a little to bring out the strong points:

"I do not perceive that we at all want the suspected testimony to Jesus, which was never quoted by any of our Christian ancestors before Eusebius.

"Nor do I recollect that Josephus has anywhere mentioned the name or word Christ in any of his works except the testimony above mentioned, and the passage concerning James the Lord's brother.

"It interrupts the narrativ.

"The language is quite Christian.

"It is not quoted by Chrysostom, though he often refers to Josephus, and could not hav omitted quoting it had it been then in the text.

"It is not quoted by Photius, though he has three articles concerning Josephus.

"Under the article 'Justus of Tiberias,' this author (Photius) expressly states that this historian (Josephus), being a Jew, has not taken the least notice of Christ.

"Neither Justin in his dialog with Trypho, the Jew, nor Clemens Alexandrinus, who made so many extracts from ancient authors, nor Origen against Celsus, has ever mentioned this testimony.

"But on the contrary, in chap. xxxv of the first book of that work Origen openly affirms that Josephus, who had mentioned John the Baptist, did not acknowledge Christ."

These are very conclusiv reasons, and no scholar of any note now contends that Josephus wrote the passage. The finger of suspicion points strongly toward Eusebius, who was given to doing such things for the glory of his God.

Book Notes.

THE Winsted Press says of Caleb Weeks's new "Songs of the Morning:" "Under the impression that the man who makes the songs of the people is more potent in his influence than the man who makes the laws of the people, Caleb S. Weeks has made a book called "Songs of the Morning," the contents of which are responses to old hymns, new versions of old hymns, and original 'chirpings,' intended 'to express in some degree the sentiment of the live, evolving, natural faith.' The new versification is adapted to the old tunes found in the 'Psalms of Life,' 'The Spiritual Harp,' 'The Revivalist,' and the 'Methodist Hymnal,' and those who hav discarded the venerable music contained in these books because of the antiquated ideas and revolting sentiments of the accompanying words will find in the work before us all that they hav wished for in the way of lines expressiv of more modern conceptions. The volume is one of 212 pages, printed in clear and full faced type, upon good paper, thoroughly indexed and bound in cloth. Those wishing to procure this valuable book should send a dollar to THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE North American Review for May contains nine articles, nearly every one of which discusses some topic or problem at the present moment prominent in the public mind. Senator John T. Morgan writes of "Mexico," and sets forth the considerations of commercial advantage and international comity which are rapidly bringing about a more cordial understanding between that country and the United States. The Rev. William Kirkus, taking occasion from Bishop McQuaid's recent vaticinations regarding the decay of Protestantism, makes a vigorous counter charge upon the papal system in an article entitled, "The Disintegration of Romanism." In "Emerson and Carlyle," Edwin P. Whipple discourses with all his old-time keenness of psychological insight and perfection of literary form upon the strangely diverse mental and moral characteristics of those two great thinkers. Prof. Felix Adler offers "A Secular View of Moral Training," arguing that the current skeptical habit of thought demands an independent system of practical ethics, based primarily on observation rather than on revelation. "Communism in America," by Prof. Alexander Winchell, givs very forcible expression to the apprehensions of those pessimistic observers of the trend of events in this country who think that they see in our political and social development all the signs of impending national decay. The other articles are "Affinities of Buddhism and Christianity," by the Rev. Dr. James Freeman Clarke; "Woman as an Inventor," by Matilda Joslyn Gage; "College Endowments," by Rossiter Johnson; and "Extradition," by A. G. Sedgwick.

Religion's Latest Recruits for the Insane Asylum.

From the Sioux City, Iowa, Weekly Journal.

Oscar Swegan and his wife, both residents of this city, were taken to the insane asylum at Independence Monday by Sheriff McDonald and Deputy-Sheriff Thayer. They were examined by the board of insanity commissioners Monday forenoon. The cause of the insanity in both instances was religious excitement, produced by attendance upon the recent revival meetings in the Swedish chapel. The evidences of insanity became apparent in Mrs. Swegan's instance about three weeks ago, and so thoroughly was she impressed with the idea of her soul's salvation that she neglected her household duties, maintained constant reading, praying, and singing, and became sick. Swegan was out of town, but when he came home and found his wife ill he devoted himself assiduously to her care, and scarcely left her bedside. He did not become imbued with the religious frenzy until last week, but when it took hold of him he became the crazier of the two and imagined that the destruction of the world by fire and eternal damnation were events of the near future. He prayed and preached all day Saturday until the residents near the house, which is near the old ice-house, became tired of the entertainment and entered complaint against the excited couple. When the officers went to the house on Sunday they found it barred and bolted, and no response could be elicited from those inside. The doors were broken in and in a bed-room both Swegan and his wife were found on their knees praying. They were taken to the county jail and their case was disposed of by the commissioners yesterday forenoon.

The vagaries of the insane mind were especially noticeable in the man's instance. He became partly aware that he was going insane, and went out into the country on Thursday last to walk it off. He stated that he traveled six miles away from the city and then walked back. The exercise failed to steady his mental balance, however, and after returning he was worse than before. He saw the transfer steamers on the river yesterday morning and declared that the fires which caused the smoke from their pipes were kindled by the Adversary of man, and were the forerunners of destruction of all things on the earth. As the Illinois Central train on which the insane couple were taken away was ready to pull out, Swegan seemed to partly recover his reason and desired to be taken back home. Dr. Knott, the physician who examined the unfortunate people, considers the woman's case hopeless and that she is probably incurable. In Swegan's instance he thinks quiet and rest will restore him.

Signal Failure.

Among the many futil attempts of self-styled orthodoxy to recommend it to the willing obedience of the masses has been its oft-repeated assertion that God was just and loving, continually exercising his providential care for our general well-being, and especially guarding as a loving parent those who claim, by church and faith relations, to be his devoted followers and loving admirers.

As long as reason was held in abeyance, and fear usurped control over every mental tendency that sought escape from their superstitious prison-house, "the prophets were at liberty to prophesy falsely, and the priests to bear rule by their means."

Governments, however corrupt, were ordained of God. Institutions arbitrary and cruel, destructiv of social happiness and individual liberty, were esteemed divine means to an end, in God's method of governing the world, and to murmur against which was to excite the divine displeasure and endanger the soul's eternal welfare.

With almost universal ignorance regarding the conclusions of science, and very limited education in general, it was not surprising that the common mind, born and nurtured, as it were, under the influence of ecclesiastical domination, and gorged with theological pabulum, should giv its assent to the absurd affirmations of the church and clergy. Very different, however, was the case when the human mind began to break its fetters, and vastly more difficult has been the task of those who hav ever sought, and still seek, to stifle the voice of reason with a "thus saith the Lord."

Every manifestation of nature in the physical and organic domain was and is attributed to God, or permitted by him: the tidal wave and tiniest ripple; the gentle zephyr and most terrific cyclone; the whispering wind and deafening thunder; the redundant fertility of the earth in certain seasons, and sterility in others; the lavish display of sunshine and bright life, with the means to encourage and sustain it, running parallel with shadows, famin, plague, and pestilence. In addition to this, all the good and evil of society that springs from social, political, and religious relations.

We hav been told, and led to believe, that God was cognizant of every trivial thought and action, and that he would make no allowance for ignorant and wilful violation of his laws, unless a certain phase of repentance, consisting of a compound of ignorance, superstition, selfishness, and cowardice, were offered and accepted as a legal tender for the debt.

These unspeakable absurdities would not bear the light. The least attempt at investigation was an ample refutation of their claims. The declaration of God's omnipotence, with the prevalence of suffering and discord, destroyed to a great extent any high opinions of his love or power.

The lack of good judgment on his part in making mankind as a whole more unjust to their species than any other class of his created animals reflects sadly on the character of his omniscience. The belligerent disposition that is ever on the rampage in the different sects and clans of his pious army is not complimentary to his omnipresence, or if so, to say the least, the "bummer" elements that rule our great cities must be very God-like.

The many declamations of pious cant in seasons of great public calamity, and individual affliction, hav grown nauseating in the extreme.

To be told that the long-suffering and painful taking away, in the spring and summer of life, of those we loved and idolized, and whose aid, presence, and support were a great essential to make our lives sweet and profitable, was part of God's method of divine government, to make us better and more willing to serve him, was to inculcate an idea abhorrent to every conception of right and affection; and it is no surprise that the revolt of reason assumes such gigantic proportions. Just as fast as the shackles of superstition fall off do doctors of divinity find it more difficult to reconcile their teachings regarding the character and actions of deity with the growth of human conceptions as to what is, in the very nature of things, the essential elements of right.

The great mass of creed-worshipers are beginning to feel, as Whittier expresses it:

> "That surely is not good in Him
> That evil is in us."

Even the timid ask questions to which the most profound divines are at a loss for a reply, being driven to the old and dernier resort that such things belong to the realm of holy mystery that God in his divine providence has as yet not seen fit to disclose.

It is a strange commentary on the claims of the church for exemption from taxation on the score of its usefulness as a moral educator of the people and a power for the safety and security of society, when every advance step in human culture and practical knowledge finds it a stumbling-block and an enemy to the true progress and liberty of mankind.

With the aid of science, unfettered reason, and a more healthy condition of the emotions, we are learning our relations to the worlds of matter and mind.

A better knowledge of the physical and organic laws givs us a partial explanation of the causes that produce harmony and discord in us and our surroundings. The great and seeming inharmonies in the domain of the physical hav their counterpart in the diversity in the realm of mind, and discords and accords are equally natural, unavoidable, and inevitable under the circumstances.

It is the mission of liberated mind and body to correct and overcome the causes that work injury to human well-being.

Theology is ruled out. What it owns in the names of God and creed should be made to bear its just share of taxation to help support a form of society the age demands, and which it would fain destroy while clinging to it as a useless and expensiv appendage.

Theology under its present form is becoming effete, the people are growing away from it; instead of leading, it follows; and yet it has the brazen effrontery (born of ages of misrule) to still seek to establish its tyranny of days and its inquisitorial censorship, as in the time of its palmiest superstition.

With the passing away of the old and the incoming of the new the popular conceptions of God are well-nigh obsolete. From henceforth Christianity, like other systems of religion, must stand or fall on its own merits. With what it has already lost, and with its old weapons of barbaric warfare to contest the field with its scientific enemy, 'tis easy to perceive how the battle will terminate. GEORGE LYNN.

All About the Devil.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was called to sit as juror some time ago in which a rather frivolous case came up for trial, upon which we could not agree, and the court having adjourned we had no remedy but to agree to disagree and remain out all night, with no beds to lie down upon, or other means of rest or comfort; for be it known that in our glorious commonwealth the juror is considered and treated equally with the criminal in whose case he is sworn to giv a true and faithful verdict. By some fortuitous circumstance, one of the twelve (legal) apostles made use of the term "devil," and I suggested, in a rather mild way, that it would be well to be sure there was such a personage in existence, and called upon the gentleman for his idea of the devil, upon which he sprang to the floor and entertained us in a half-hour's speech, giving the old brimstone and hell-fire definition in glowing style, and then called upon me to say "What is the devil?"—if I knew or dared to define him. To this I replied that the case was so large that it would occupy a long time to discuss it, but if the gentleman would agree to giv me an equal hearing, I would discuss it if it took all night. We appointed the foreman as our chairman, and started in at half-past eight; and we talked until four o'clock the following morning, and if ever "Old Nick" got a raking up he got it then.

What is the devil?

As some of my points may be of interest to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, who may be called upon to answer this important question, I hav here outlined my position taken upon that occasion.

The devil in nature is that principle which opposes the direction of any acting force, and has no reference to the question of good or bad only as its action interferes with that which either benefits or injures man. To see this truth clearly we hav only to observe that the fact of force in nature implies an exact equal opposition to force—that is, there could be no force if there was nothing to move or to overcome. It is important to hav the mind grasp this idea firmly and clearly at the start, which will enable us to proceed with more certainty. The idea of force implies opposition to force; and, if this is a truth, it follows that the one must be a counterpart of the other—a necessity of the other. If I attempt to raise a stone from the earth which weighs one hundred pounds I must exert a force equal to one hundred pounds to do so. Now, there is no question of good or evil in this fact. But, if by some peculiar situation, a stone of a hundred or a thousand pounds should slide upon my leg, which I had not the power to remove, it would then be an evil to me, because it might hold me until I starve to death, and all the appeals and prayers I could make would not remove a grain of that weight; to do so would be to annul the law or force of gravity.

This reduces the question to this: We must treat it as it applies to every department of life, and as it relates to man, to determin what it is. Hence the devil in mechanics is friction; to illustrate: We hav mountains more than a thousand feet high, over which we are compelled to raise our coal to reach a market. In order to overcome this we construct the axles of the carrying cars in such a way as to overcome as much of this friction as possible by lubrication and other means of light running; and at the same time we build our locomotivs as heavy as our rails will bear, so as to create as much friction in the "devil" that carries the load as possible. Thus we hav the devil overcoming the devil, or friction overcoming friction. We find that while friction is the great obstacle to all mechanical movements, we would be utterly helpless if it did not exist; as by using a greater amount of it we overcome a smaller amount of it. And as it is in the mechanical sense so it is in the moral world. The devil supports all of our clergy and churches, and without him they would be utterly ruined and their occupation gone. The only difference is this: in the mechanical world we hav learned to know how to use him and not abuse him, while the clergy can only abuse him and do not know how to use him.

The devil is neither good nor bad as a principle of force, but an exact counterpart and an absolute necessity, and primarily, as it relates to all materiality and all being, a positiv good, as there could be no motion or form without him. In matter he is gravity in its deepest form; he resides equally in every atom of matter of whatever nature; he opposes a reckless and lawless movement of atoms, and forces them into the lines of the most free motion; he givs direction to force, as the banks of the stream lead the current on and on; he is law and order among the revolving worlds, as well as that he regulates the motion of the tiny atoms.

Taking this view of the case, he, or it, is simply what philosophers call law; and as law prevents us from running astray, and punishes us for infractions, the devil is our best friend, as he tells us of our faults and punishes us gently or harshly as our several cases demand.

The idea of a personal devil is on a par with that of a personal God, a mere fancy of the mind. The truth is that the only devil in nature is matter, which constantly resists, and is as constantly overcome and changed by that counterpart. The life of matter, or the force that is moving it and shaping it into the various forms, we see; hence we speak of the laws of matter because the force of matter refuses to take on any but the most economical shapes, and moves in the easiest methods and in the most direct channels. The lightning runs down your conducting rod simply because it is the most free course and most direct way to establish an equilibrium. These facts in nature hav been observed by the sensitiv quality in man and the lesson taken to heart, so he tries to keep out of its way, and even prepares an easy passage to the earth as the great equalizer of this form of force.

We cannot do without lightning, storms, rains, floods, earthquakes, tornadoes, eruptions, nor any of the natural phenomena which hav been going on for these millions of years in developing and perfecting the globe we liv upon, and yet none of these has been the work of a personal devil; and only a child in the philosophy of nature will attempt to offer prayers to a personal God or fear a personal devil in observing these things. The idea that any human being could grow up so as to become able to govern or control any of these forces of nature from a mere mental effort seems quite absurd. The most developed being that ever existed upon this earth was but a man, and the least developed creature that held the form of a man was but a man and not a devil.

We hav these same things in our own being in the highest organized form—matter and the life of matter; hence we are parts of the same principles. Now, as we are a part of your good God and your bad devil, I offer a compromise. We find that the devil, or task-master of our bodies, is always ready to punish us for wrong, and only punishes us according to the degree of the infraction; hence we must giv him credit for both justice and mercy, while the healing quality of life and matter restores our bodies and givs renewed enjoyment to life. Now, since an honest man does not wish a debt of guilt discharged without suffering the consequences, and is thankful for his chastisment, we hav no right to charge these salutary things upon us as the work of a wicked devil, but as the operations of that universal principle of life, which is all the good and all the bad we ascribe to God and devil. As we cannot find or even imagin an outside to nature, and cannot imagin a place where matter in some form does not exist, it is equally impossible to find any place where the devil is not at home and doing his work of resistance.

Primarily, then, the god of nature is gravity, a universal force that tends to equilibrium. The devil is resistance to this force in the shape of matter, and thereby is made to assume the varied forms we find in nature. We are led to exclaim in the language of Sambo, "O good Lord and good devil, I don't know into whose hands I may fall."

If, as I stated at the outset, this resistance to force caused it to follow in the direction of the easiest channel, as the little rivulet was turned and guided around the pebbles which lay across its path, or as the mighty torrent of waters was caused to travel around the boulders that it was unable for the time to remove, or as the lightning's mighty force was compelled to find its most accessible channel of motion until a diffusion of its force found relief in a less restricted state, or as the expanded stream was by an excess of pressure at last able to burst asunder its metallic embrace, then it would seem to be a grand conception and a great truth that the devil of science is the father of evolution, and the mother of every form of animated life, and further that every form of life was brought about because it was at the time of its production the easiest and best form and in the most direct line of development.

This devil of resistance compelled the principle of force to travel in the easiest channel, and the pressure and energy of force compelled the devil to yield accordingly as its powers were brought to bear upon it. And as every new change in matter took place, so were new forces brought to bear, and so did new conditions come about, and new creatures make their appearance upon the stage of action, until man, the most perfected form of this energy, made his début, and who contains in his organization the most perfect blending of the life and matter in an organized form.

As nature produces hawks and buzzards in the flying kinds, some of which perch upon their lofty branches and watch the unsuspecting partridge, as it crouches beneath the tuft of grass, and then pounces upon it to make a murderous repast, or as the buzzard hovers over the decaying carcass and gorges his detestable appetite, so in the human kind we find the hawks and buzzards of society, who delve in filth, and prey (pray) upon their unsuspecting and confiding fellow-mortals by scaring them into an easy conquest over the idea of a mighty devil.

The devil, when rightly understood, is a good fellow, and cannot be dispensed with, either by church or state. I therefore advise everyone to study him in his true light, and in the light of science and philosophy. J. R. Perry.

Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Mr. Rowley Again in Elkhart, Ind.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Just about eighteen years ago I was in this city. The American flag was floating at half-mast, and the doors of the business places, as also many of the dwellings in this town and all over the country, were draped in mourning. The occasion was the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. The church bells were tolling a mournful requiem over the untimely death of a great and good man, a man who was an unbeliever in the traditions and mythologies of the church, and hence must be classed among the Spiritualistic Infidels.

It would be very appropriate now if the flag of the nation should again be placed at half-mast in view of the circumstance that three of England's noblest men—Foote, Ramsay, and Kemp, connected with the Freethought journal—hav been sentenced to a year's imprisonment upon the pueril charge of blasphemy. Those men had treated some of the gross idols and idolatries of the church with unwashed and ungloved hands.

All along through the past history of the barbarous and semi-civilized world the dark cloud of Christian persecution has had its victims, and usually those victims of religious hate and persecution hav been selected from among the noblest and the best of men and women, persons whose sense of truth and justice would not allow them to cater in a hypocritical and supercilious manner to the haughty and imperious demands of the church and its defenders.

Jesus Christ, if the story of his tragic death is not a legend, was crucified by the popular religion of the age in which he lived; Socrates drank the deadly poison under the dictum of a religious tyranny; Servetus burnt over a slow fire of green wood to appease the anger of a tyrannical priesthood; D. M. Bennett and many others in our own time hav suffered and are still suffering under the cruel and merciless lash of the church, its clergy, and its adherents in all departments of government and of civil enactments. When will the time come in which the flag of the nation may be fully unfurled and hoisted to the top of the mast under appropriate dignity and intelligence?

I am in Elkhart again in the interest of The Truth Seeker, and find many intelligent and resolute minds here who cannot be driven to the wall by the bigotry and superstition of the church. When I was here a few months ago, and while the true and devoted Mr. Bennett was yet living among us, one of the ministers of this city said to me in an indignant spirit that Mr. Bennett ought to be hung—yes, he repeated, he ought to be hung! he ought to be hung ten times over! And this same minister has the reputation of being the most liberal man among the clergymen of the town. The trouble was, if The Truth Seeker, which was Mr. Bennett's paper, was to be introduced in the place, to be sustained as a prominent journal among a large class of the most intelligent readers of the city, it would eventually bring about a new and improved order of things, and arrangements would be established under the auspices of the Liberal League, or other organizations, in which the people will call for teachers instead of preachers, and the old order of things will be superseded by conditions which shall be infinitly better. When the light of science, philosophy, and common sense, shall be scattered with a Liberal hand broadcast among the people all over the land, the great questions of life or of death, of liberty or of despotism, will be settled. The columns of The Truth Seeker hav always been fully open to free and fair investigation and discussion, and in those lines of the most vital and indispensable importance, this paper has differred from all religious and secular journals; and it is by far more in keeping with the spirit and original intent of the Constitution of the United States. All classes of men and women who love liberty and justice should rally to the support of The Truth Seeker, and encourage its circulation through all the towns, and among the people everywhere all through the country. C. S. Rowley.

P.S.—While I was in Elkhart, and in this vicinity, at Mishawaka and South Bend, eighteen years ago, at the time of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, and at the termination of the great war of the Rebellion, I wrote a lengthy poem under the title, "The Night is Past, the War is Over." I hav recited this poem and others in hundreds of the best schools in southern Michigan, professing to giv examples in elocution, and my efforts in those lines hav been uniformly commended by many of the ablest and the best teachers and professors in the schools of my own state. During a term of twenty years' travel in southern Michigan, my calls at the schools were well and favorably received, and if there hav been any exceptions more recently it has been solely because I hav been encouraging the circulation of The Truth Seeker. I think this circumstance has interfered with me in visiting the schools in Elkhart, but at some convenient time I may hav the opportunity of reciting some of my poems in a more public audience than the schools afford, and making such remarks as the vital issues of the times may inspire.

The Liberal Conventions for 283.

It will soon be time to agitate and plan for our summer gatherings and our autumn Congress. Mr. Green is moving for that of New York state already. There are several states now that hold regular annual Liberal Conventions, mostly of state Liberal Leagues. New York, Illinois, Kansas, and Iowa are organized, and express themselvs every year in convention. Then the National League winds up the whole with its Congress in September. These make five annual conventions already projected and established. Now would it not be a good idea to hold these conventions in some orderly sequence and relation to each other? Perhaps this year Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and Missouri might organize state conventions, and so enable the Liberals to institute a regular series of state gatherings from New York to Kansas. The conventions at Watkins, N. Y.; Tama, Iowa; Bloomington, Ill.; Bismarck, Kansas; and the League Congress at St. Louis were such successes last year, that it is every way encouraging to get up a regular series of state conventions, following each other immediately, or not more than a day or two of interval between them, this year. The advantage of this would be that some of our best speakers could attend all of them; also the same visitors. Tourists who are taking their annual vacations, and others, could attend as many of them as they like.

New York has appointed to meet this year from the 29th of August to the 2d of September. Suppose, now, Pennsylvania should call a convention, say at Pittsburgh, to meet September 4th, 5th, and 6th; Ohio to meet 7th, 8th, and 9th; Michigan 11th, 12th, and 13th; Illinois 14th, 15th, and 16th; Iowa 18th, 19th, and 20th; Kansas 21st, 22d, and 23d; Missouri 25th, 26th, and 27th; and wind up with the League Congress 28th, 29th, and 30th, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The towns or cities in each state which would offer the most encouragement, and do the most to make their state Convention a success, should be selected for the meeting places. All the best managing and speaking talent of each state should be brought out; but in addition, perhaps a few speakers whom the whole country delights to hear might be invited to attend all the conventions; and some of them ought to be paid. Such speakers as Geo. Chainey, Mrs. H. S. Lake, Mrs. Juliet H. Severance, Parker Pillsbury, T. B. Wakeman, S. P. Putnam, Courtlandt Palmer, W. S. Bell, J. E. Remsburg, H. L. Green, J. H. Burnham, and Babcock of Michigan are welcome anywhere, and should be asked to attend all the conventions. Very likely Mr. Chas. Watts, of England, may return in season, and he would be a trump card. Also a series of meetings projected on this scale might be worth the attention of Col. Ingersoll, and he ought to be invited and paid to attend all of them, if he will, or some of them anyhow. His favor and acceptance would insure an overwhelming success for every meeting.

I hav omitted Indiana in the above list because it is such a backward state in Liberal matters—especially in Liberal organization. One would suppose that a state with an Ironclad Age and an Iconoclast in it might be stirred up to some organized, united action. There, right alongside of Indiana, is Illinois, a state full of Leagues and a good state organization. But Illinois has had a Follet roaming over it, scattering Freethought literature and stirring up the Liberals, and especially the Illiberals, to do their duty and unite each with his fellow to carry on the good work. The same might be done in Indiana, if the right man, with the Follet kind of unselfish devotion, could be found for the place. It is possible that Indiana might be aroused this summer to come into the galaxy of gatherings, to exhibit her strengh and spread abroad the Liberal light. If so, she would be welcome, and would add one more to the series We see by Truth, the new League paper at Pittsburgh, that the Pennsylvania Liberals are moving to organize a state League. We are glad to see this, and they will be just in time. We hope to see the same movement started in Ohio, Michigan, and Missouri, also Wisconsin, to meet with the League Congress at Milwaukee.

Now what do the Liberals of these states say? Will they very soon meet, agitate, correspond, and in all ways find out whether this is not a good, practical, useful thing to do—one that will secure concerted, harmonious action with the most useful results. The convention at Watkins was such a success last year, will it not be a good idea to extend that success and influence this year? Let us begin with this state, and thunder Liberalism all along the line during the whole of next September, from New York to Kansas. The Liberal journals generally and the League will do everything possible to make such a state program a victorious march from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, under the banner of Freethought.

All who wish to move in the matter may address T. C. Leland, 744 Broadway, New York.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Permit me to say that I hav just closed a course of nine lectures at Ashland and seven at Jacksonville, southern Oregon. The audiences at both places hav been large and attentiv.

Our thanks are due to Messrs. Coolidge, J. D. Fountain, C. R. Klum, J. V. Latta, J. Houck, and many others for generous and activ support in helping to make the lectures a success; also we thank the ladies of Ashland for music and other expressions of kindness.

Our thanks are also due at Jacksonville to G. Naylor and Messrs. Mensor, Langell, Miller, Peter Britt, and many others for generous assistance during our stay in Jacksonville. We did not forget to present the claims of The Truth Seeker and Boston Investigator, which hav several warm supporters here.

Southern Oregon is a beautiful country, with a climate unsurpassed by any other part of the Pacific coast; and with the near prospect of rail communication with the outside world they are happy. Of our lectures and our reception there we submit the report of the Oregon Sentinel.

"Dr. J. L. York, the eminent Liberal lecturer, has, for the past week, been engaged in the delivery of a course of lectures in Holt's Hall. The scope of these lectures has embraced almost the whole field of the moral, mental, and material improvement of humanity. The eminent fairness and impartiality of the doctor's treatment of this wide range of subjects made a favorable impression upon all who heard him; while the masterly logic, supplemented by his earnestness of manner and set off by a wealth of illustration, led his large audience to a deeper and more careful study of the subject in hand, if it did not always result in convincing them of the truth of his teaching. We hav not the space to favor our readers with an extended criticism of these lectures. It would be unfair to the lecturer as well as to our readers to point out those parts of his lectures with which we find it impossible to agree without also giving equal attention to those parts which we indorse. But, whatever one may think of the ideas advanced by Dr. York, no one who has heard him can doubt the earnestness of his belief or the honesty of his purpose in every sentence that he utters. The field of Liberal thought is the broadest and most beautiful region yet explored by the human intellect; and if the philosophers who labor in it sometimes pluck flowers too rare and beautiful for this every-day life of ours, we are all the better for seeing and studying their beauty. Whenever human reason, extended in whatever direction, fetches forth a fact, it has done a great work in the elevation of the world and the advancement of humanity, no matter what system of government or religion it may unsettle or uproot. A man who shudders at the sight of fact, or who flinches from the utterance of what he believes, is a coward. Next to the man who discovers truth is the man who publishes it abroad to the world and thus sets to work the mental processes of the people with new impulses and purposes, and in new directions. This, to some extent at least, Dr. York has done by his course of lectures here. He has set people to thinking, and in this he has done a good work and we thank him for it."

We go from here to Oakland, Eugene, Forest Grove, Astoria, and Seattle, and thence to Victoria and estern Oregon. J. L. York.

Roseburg, Oregon.

Eli Perkins makes this contribution to religious anecdote: "Ethel's Sunday-school teacher asked her one day what the children of Israel did after they crossed the Red Sea.

"I know," said Ethel. 'I 'spects they dried themselvs.'" Thus, one by one, are the questions of biblical history answered.

Letters from Friends.

NORTH SYDNEY, April 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your card received yesterday. I intended to write yesterday before receiving it. I would not be without THE TRUTH SEEKER for $50 a year. I inclose $1 toward subscription, and will forward more in a few days. Yours faithfully,

PRYSE PROTHEROE.

DETROIT, April 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $4, which please apply on my subscription. I am very highly pleased to see how well the managers, forced by cruel and hard circumstances to assume the control, keep the paper up to promises of our lamented leader. Some think it has more than kept the promis. There is certainly no other like it. J. H. WOOD.

PUTNAM, April 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find stamps for 50 cents for a trial subscriber, as I promised you last week, and propose to send you many more. I am not long in this place and hav not found many Liberals as yet, although Putnam is of six thousand inhabitants. I was very much grieved at the loss of such a friend as Mr. Bennett to the Liberal cause. I met him at his office. Yours, a truth seeker,

JOHN HART.

DESDEMONA, April 4, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Inclosed fine 50 cents, balance on Paine.

Am well pleased with the lithographs; tell my Christian friends they are my holy trinity. Am having $3.50 frames put on. And I do appreciate Mrs. Lake's "The Complaint," of March 24th. Want to hear from Brother Peck again, and hav no objection to a call from T. Winter.

Wishing you and Eugene every possible good, and THE TRUTH SEEKER a long and prosperous voyage,

I remain your friend, A. C. MARTIN.

NOKOMIS, April 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see from the tab on my paper my renewal will be called for in May next. I take time by the forelock. Inclosed find money order for $2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER until May, 1884. I hope to be able to subscribe for it as long as I liv. It suits me better than any other I know of. But I am often made sorry that Freethinkers speak so unkindly to one another through its columns. Poor Mr. Walker is truly abused. None who claims to answer him seems to see the true inwardness of his position, which certainly is the only one a true Liberal can take. Yours truly, AUGUSTUS HASTINGS.

MARSHALL, April 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1, for which send me a copy of the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion." What the superstitious call Infidelity is making considerable headway in this part of the country. I am the first who advocated the doctrin in this county, and I now know of twenty who talk it boldly. They seem to hail it as a new revelation. The truth is, the people of this county hav never read anything but the Bible. Some few hav read a partisan newspaper. Last summer I bought some of Ingersoll's works, and I can't keep them home long enough to read them. They are now loaned to two Baptist preachers, one of whom is a neighbor, the other of Stone county. H. L. WATTS.

MORRISONVILLE, April 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to thank you for the weekly visits of your paper. I am more than delighted with it, though sorry to learn that there are so many of the Freethought family spending so much of their valuable time and talent wrangling over questions that amount to no good, such as whether Mr. Lincoln was an Infidel or not, or a Materialist or not, or a Spiritualist or not. It makes no difference so far as you and I are concerned what Mr. Lincoln was. But let us all be true and honest to ourselvs. To me my father and mother are as much of a guide as anyone else. My father was a Christian; I am an Infidel. I hav a brother who is a Christian, but what has that to do with us?

Please find inclosed $3, for which send me the books herein mentioned. M. S. GOWIN.

ELGIN, April 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little late with my draft to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883, as my subscription expired on Jan. 15th. But better late than never. I hav been watching the good old paper closely since our beloved Bennett left us, and I am pleased to say it keeps well to the mark. I don't see that it has lost any of its vim. Long may it continue to shed light on this benighted land, for as long as there is a white-chokered idler left so long do we need the noble TRUTH SEEKER.

I feel grieved to the heart for Foote and his companions, but I hope there will not be a day taken off their unjust imprisonment, for every hour they are kept in prison is adding laurels to Freethought.

Inclosed please find $5 –$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and the balance use as directed.

Yours truly, I. W. ARCHIBALD.

LANCASTER, April 3, 1883.

MRS. MARY BENNETT: Inclosed please find post office order for $4.—$2.50 of which is for THE TRUTH SEEKER next year; $1 for the monument of the late Mr. D. M. Bennett, and the remainder for the following pamphlets: "The Religion of Common Sense," "Ingersoll and Jesus," "Witchcraft in Christian Countries." I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since its first publication, and will continue to be so the rest of my life.

While in New York, five years ago, I visited Mr. Bennett in his office and was glad to meet a man who had done and would do so much for the enlightenment of the masses. I was pained to hear of his death and hav much sympathy for you in your loss. Hoping you will be spared many years to continue the good work commenced by your late husband, I am still a truth seeker, JACOB NATHAN.

CLEARWATER, April 4, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: So many people hav written such beautiful letters of consolation to you, I will not attempt anything of that kind at this late hour; though you must know there are tears in the heart of every true Liberal for your great loss, as well as for the martyred hero, D. M. Bennett. Though opposed to monuments on general principles, this is an extreme case, and it must be built at all hazards.

During the war a man in the South (where the people used the word "tote" instead of carry) saw two children who had in some manner become possessed of a dollar; and while the older one was hurrying along with it at the top of his speed, the younger one ran behind crying, "Let me tote the dollar! let me tote the dollar!" I hav been waiting for a long time to "tote the dollar," and here it is, though it is so late. I am almost ashamed, but I hope every truth seeker in the land will make haste and "tote the dollar" for the monument which is to perpetuate the memory of one of the world's greatest heroes. MARY B. FINCH.

EAST CHATHAM, April 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is now nearly two years since I visited my brother-in-law at Webster City, Josephus Seely, an early acquaintance and associate of D. M. Bennett, who was then receiving THE TRUTH SEEKER. I then expected long ere this to hav taken your paper, but I lost your address and hav just come across it again. But I find that Mr. Bennett has gone to that mysterious land about which we know so little and desire to know so much. I hav taken among others a local paper published at Hudson for the last twenty or thirty years, and a portion of that time hav acted as one of its correspondents. A short time since I sent them for publication a short obituary on the death of a very worthy friend of mine, simply setting forth his many brilliant and manly traits of character that met the approval and won the esteem of all who were acquainted with him, and that he lived and died outside of orthodox creeds and dogmas. The little notice was rejected on the ground that it was "extraordinary." Inclosed please find $1.25 for six months for THE TRUTH SEEKER to

JOHN M. BARNES.

EUREKA, March 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR; When I wrote to you last I promised twenty-five dollars to a grand monument for D. M. Bennett, to be erected on some conspicuous place, as a just tribute to his undaunted manly spirit, in battling for human rights, and fearlessly trampling under foot all wrong. I was opposed to a general contribution to a monument at the grave, thinking that sufficient funds could be collected for that purpose from his immediate friends. Yet it seems that a monument at the grave will be all that our departed friend will get at present. So I will inclose post-office order for $5.00 toward that object, with the assurance that at any time when Liberals will be liberal enough to erect a more fitting monument to our hero, who preferred to be shut up behind prison bars to swerving from the path of rectitude, I will giv seventy-five dollars toward it, or more if I am able.

It grieves me to see so much controversy in THE TRUTH SEEKER in regard to the temperance question since it proves that not all who are Liberals in name are liberal in spirit. Truly Liberal people hav but one opinion on that subject, and that is the opinion held by E. C. Walker. Juliet H. Severance, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 10th, expressed my opinion exactly, and without fear of contradiction I say, that those who think different are ill-Liberal bigots.

Yours for liberality and reform,

ROBERT GUNTHER.

BUSHNELL, April 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will please find $11, $5 of which—$1 each from Q C. Dantley, J. Denning, I. D. Rolston, and S. West, and 50 cents each from Dr. S. L. Babbitt and Dr. J. D. Murfey—are for the Monument Fund; the balance to be applied as per directions.

We are not indifferent to the loss of D. M. Bennett. He is justly acknowledged as one of the greatest men of modern times to assist the advancement of the right of men and women to follow their reason upon the subject of religion. Freethought is a right inalienable to everyone. It is the star of our glory in life—the very password to the use of our reason. Without this boon we are but mental slaves, for of what use is freedom of thought if we are not allowed to use it. It is one of the greatest enjoyments of our life to participate in so just a right. It prevents the priests from robbing us and then charging us their living for the robbery.

We regret the occasion of Mr. Bennett's death. We sorrowfully and reluctantly submit to the inevitable. We can now only contribute to a monument as a memento to the place of his burial. We can add nothing to his greatness; that has passed into history to benefit posterity. His services we hav had; but generations to come will equally enjoy them. The cause in which he labored will never grow less. We must acknowledge we hav lost a great worker; yet we are gratified to know that as long as there is intelligence in mankind, there will be great minds to maintain the right of religious liberty. Great minds may pass away, but the principles on which the independence of thought exists can never pass away. We may contribute to monuments to men, but to contribute to a monument to Freethought we will never hav occasion. Respectfully yours,

S. WEST.

LAKE CITY, April 6, 1883.

MARY W. BENNETT AND EUGENE MACDONALD: Dear friends, inclosed please find express order for $5, which is sent for Mr. Bennett's Monument Fund. I only wish I was able to make it ten times as much, or a gift worthy of the man.

I see a Mr. E. Vanbuskirk is much exercised over Mr. Herndon's papers written for publication in THE TRUTH SEEKER, giving Mr. Lincoln's religious views. Now, I cannot agree with Mr. Vanbuskirk by any means. I know of no man whose religious views could do more good to the world than Mr. Lincoln's. And I am sure Mr. Herndon's papers bore every mark of candor and honor. And I shall ever thank him kindly for the great good I think he has accomplished by his letters. And had he been publishing a paper, I would willingly hav paid the price of a common paper for a year for the Lincoln letters alone. It appears strange to me that any man should try to belittle a good intent. But it puts me in mind of the many squibs that hav from time to time been fired at our noble old Brother Winter, of Cincinnati, which hav all fallen short of the mark, lacking powder, I presume, in sufficient quantity behind the ball. Now, my noble old brother, on to the front, and "Damn'd be he who first cries enough." But let us hav respect for all; for I well remember how hard it was for me to get rid of the notion that their must be a great big Mumbo Jumbo of a something called God, that was running this universe; something after the style of an old man turning a coffee mill. But after much study, I hav come to the conclusion that I hav no use for a God or Christ, hell or heaven, except such a heaven as a good, pure upright life will bring. And I want no other. The place the church calls heaven, where all the thieves, murderers, cut-throats, and blood tubs occupy the front seats, I hav no liking for. I should rather risk the other place. along with such noble souls as Paine, Jefferson, Lincoln, Bennett, Ingersoll, and millions of other noble minds, that never were mean enough to damn a poor, weak, erring brother.

Our school election passed off here without any blood being shed. But many lies were told by the godly. The Bible in the schools was the trouble. But the devil and his people triumphed as usual, and the lamb's book of life will be left out in the cold. God, with all his hosts, could not prevail against us, and yet we had no chariots of iron. With best regards, and hoping THE TRUTH SEEKER will ever prosper,

I am respectfully yours, J. L. TOMPKINS.

BOULDER, March 21, 283.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER to me is a source of pleasure, the gratification of one of the needs of my nature; one of the things that make life more bearable, and when I opened my paper that contained the news of D. M. Bennett's death, my heart swelled with sadness, but after a few moments in despair something said, "Be not cast down, for now is the time for every true Liberal to unfold his banner to the breeze; let truth be proclaimed throughout the world."

Friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER, let us be up and doing. Some four weeks ago eight of us met and organized a Liberal and Freethought club, with the articles of the National Liberal League incorporated in its platform. Since then our number has increased to twenty, including some of the prominent men and women of the place—ex-mayor, city treasurer, doctors, and merchants. At our last meeting, having received a letter from W. S. Bell, of Kansas City, that he would deliver four lectures for $100, a friend rose up and said he would be one of four to raise the amount. Three others soon responded, so we are in a fair way to soon hav some lectures. We hav rented a hall well furnished with seats and tables and an organ. But we hav many Liberals here who are faint-hearted—don't like to show their colors. Their wives are members of churches, and must go where a new dress or bonnett will hav the most lookers-on.

A short time since we had a test of divine mercy. In one of our wind storms a fire broke out in the mountains. In less than two hours it went over eight miles. This was about four o'clock in the morning, when most people were asleep. It went from mountain to valley in its course, burnt several haystacks, and then reached a farm-house and a stable with twenty-three milch cows in it, three horses, and some hogs and fowls. All the owner's farming implements, the stable and contents, were burnt to ashes. Would it not hav been showing a little mercy to those dumb beasts that were fastened in that stable if he who is all power could hav loosed them and stopped their suffering?

Inclosed please find $8.50, which place to my account as follows: $2.50 for my subscription, $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," $1 for the Monument Fund, and the remainder use as directed. EPHRAIM POUND.

ALLEGAN, April 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: As T. Winter has been a truth seeker for over sixty-five years, I am sorry he has deceived himself into believing that he has found it. He has "sifted every known history, ancient and modern," too closely, for he has left himself only the bran, and the "attention that he has given to the movements of men in all parts of civilization" has been done narrow-mindedly, and warped to suit his fancy, and wherever he sought the development of honest truth, there he sought with prejudice, or squelched it before it could develop in all its beauty, else he never would hav been content with the shallow belief that he has settled into.

Nature is the best instructor that he or anyone else can hav, for it is really our only teacher; for if we go outside of nature or natural laws, what hav we? Simply nothing. And something cannot be produced from nothing. Most certainly man is a part of nature, begotten by natural laws, and possesses only one organic material system. But if something cannot be made from nothing, then he has always existed, and will ever exist. There is nothing lost in nature, not even the animal existences he speaks of, and the more elevating our training, the more aspiring our thoughts and feelings, so will our destiny be, bright and beautiful. I will readily agree with Mr. Winter, that a dual life is visionary, fanatical, and full of errors, for he refers to that life beyond the grave that he has no desire for, but which is a continuation of this life, not a repetition. What inducement does cold Materialism hold out to morality? Where is the truth in science that cannot prove itself? And where is the real humanity if you giv men only death for all the struggles of life? And now, in conclusion, I ask T. Winter to prove to me that one jot or tittle of this great universe can be annihilated, for if it cannot, then scientific Materialism is not, and science cannot avail herself of the proof, but jumps at conclusions, then givs them to the world as facts. Until he or some one can prove all these things to me in a clear, concise, and reasonable manner, I shall keep good my hold on immortality, and know that I hav something to liv by and die for. MRS. MARY H. BONFOEY.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find draft for $3, and the card of a couple of good honest Dutchmen, who possess too much good hard common sense to allow any preacher to bamboozle them into the belief that they should giv him of their hard, honestly-earned money to support him for simply telling them things about which he knows not one particle more than they do, which is just nothing at all. They prefer rather to assist in perpetuating something that we know has existed and while in existence did a vast amount of good, and they hereby authorize me to tender $5 toward the erection of a Bennett Hall as a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER, in which, I think, they would more fully realize the most ardent wish of our departed friend than by contributing toward the erection of a monument to his memory. While the monument is commemorativ of the man alone, the hall is a monument not only of D. M. Bennett, but a home for his dearly cherished offspring—THE TRUTH SEEKER—as well as an everlasting tribute to the principles so ably proclaimed and defended by him. Were he able to return and giv voice to his wishes in this matter, I feel well assured he would say, "I care not for myself or what becomes of my ashes; only see that our beloved TRUTH SEEKER is maintained, and the everlasting principles of truth and justice are fearlessly proclaimed through its pages as during my sojourn amongst you, and I shall be content."

No more ardent defender of the principles of Freethought exists within our ranks than is the senior member of the firm. His only trouble is a lack of a proper command of the English language that he may the more readily combat the arguments brought to bear against him. But "truth will prevail," and whether it comes in English or German the enemy has got to giv in vanquished—defeated upon whatever point they may see fit to make the assault. A pity we did not hav more such honest outspoken Liberals as Mott is.

I see our Liberal friends are still going it "hammer and tongs" for and against prohibition. Standing as I do with the positiv knowledge that intemperance is a "burning" curse to the country, I feel that I would be willing to take part in almost any movement in order to destroy it. I hav asked friend Walker to point out a better way than prohibition, but, as much as he says he is opposed to intemperance, he has not "given us anything better in place of it" (prohibition). Several years ago—before I ever heard it mentioned by others—I advocated the high license system, through which I thought the evil might be considerably abated, and now that some states hav demonstrated the idea and find it working well, very well, I feel like continuing where I left off and going forward, striking a blow here and there, until with the assistance of parties from both sides of this prohibition question we shall ultimately triumph and send gross intemperance, with religion accompanied with ignorance and superstition, into the shades of oblivion, where it belongs. They go hand in hand, and as we are rapidly dispensing with three of the number, why should we not as earnestly and determinedly strive to do away with the other in whatever way seems to us the most likely to succeed? I think with most Liberals the question is not whether it shall be destroyed, as much as it is how best can it be overcome.

D. D. LAKE.

BOSTON, March 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me to introduce myself to you as a reformed, translated Christian? From a fossilized, praying orthodox, who worshiped and praised God and with the same tongue cursed my fellow-brother whose soul was too broad to be bounded by my creed, I hav had the experience of a kitten—got my eyes open—hav become a Liberal, i.e., use my God-given reason. I now hear, read, and investigate, and submit it all to this tribunal, and award the same to all, differ as they will in their verdict, believing that all who hav open eyes are seeking the light.

Knowing as I do, by dear experience, that the recital of religious experiences is about as dry as brandy bottles after a club meeting, mine will be brief.

After trying more than twenty years to believe—to swallow orthodoxy and accept the Christian record, all written deep in blood—"the blood of the martyrs, the seed of the church;" after hearing George Chainey's eulogy of D. M. Bennett, listening to M. J. Savage, reading Parker's works, and finally THE TRUTH SEEKER, my faith faltered; I began to reason. And I found that reasoning set me further on the road to truth than years of fruitless praying unto the "great unknown."

It is the policy of the church to prevent incubation, but they lost on me, and I risk my reputation as a prophet that unless they slow down on their fires of the infernal region they will hav more chickens than they can tame and coop.

Like all new converts, I feel like making up for lost time in being a little radical. I hope to "be like the gods," eat of the tree of knowledge and learn to discriminate between good and evil. I used to believe in prayer; spent much time in prayer. Well, my faith in that devotion is not lessened, only changed to the prayer of action, which breaks and tills the soil. I hav exchanged my fear of God to love for man. I hope to progress, since I hav begun to be fledged. A chicken once out of the shell never can be got back; hence the chance to grow. By the kindness of a friend, I hav the reading of THE TRUTH SEEKER, so I can secure truth therefrom.

Your earnest pupil, AMOS BRACKET.

REPLY TO T. WINTER.

BROTHER WINTER: I am an Atheistic Spiritualist; hav no god, hence not afraid that he will damn me for going for you, for you deserve it. You hav been ridiculing Spiritualism and abusing Spiritualists until I hav concluded to see if I can find out how much you really know about it. One reading your article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 17th ult., would naturally infer that T. Winter knew it all, in T. Winter's estimation. Now, Brother Winter, I am not mad, but am after you, and propose to bring you right up to the scratch. Your article is made up largely of assertions, hence is hardly worth the ammunition, but I hav plenty of that article on hand (Spritualistic ammunition too). You say: "There is neither proof nor evidence that a specter, a spook, or disembodied spirit exists, or ever did, or ever will." Please tell me how much that assertion proves—a mere idle assertion; nothing more. Why did you not back up that assertion? Come down now like a man, and tell how you know. No guess-work, no belief about it, Brother Winter, but tell us how you know. You made the positiv assertion, and thousands of Spiritualists would like to hear how you came in possession of such a remarkable degree of wisdom.

Brother Winter, when you are asked to tell how you know, you see you are up a stump, and I know it. You called us "gudgeons, nibbling at every cunning bait." You ask, "What know any of these pious sharks about future states of existence?" Well, well; strange that a godless Spiritualist like me should be called a pious shark! Christians call me anything else but pious.

You ask me what I know about the future. I can tell you that after thirty-two years of investigation, at a cost of over $300 in money, I do know that friends that once lived in the grosser body and died, as it is called, do still liv, and can and do communicate. This I do know, Brother Winter, and I know it by investigation, and by having the fact demonstrated to me. Yes, Brother Winter, it is a demonstrated fact. Now I hav told you like a man how I know they liv beyond the grave; but when I ask you how you know they don't exist, you can't answer, and I know it. I say I hav had it demonstrated to me, and you say I hav not. Please tell me how you know that I never had it demonstrated. How do you know just what demonstrations I hav had? Can you disprove the existence of spirits? Hav you ever had this non-existence demonstrated to you? Did you ever hav a friend come and tell you after death that he didn't exist—that he had lost his identity, and was not there? I ask again, Hav you had their non-existence demonstrated? Pray tell me. Ah! you cannot, and I know it. You say we know "nothing about a future life—no more than a wild ass; it's all bosh; nothing more." Here it is again, another assertion. I suppose it must all be bosh, Brother Winter, if you say so. If you were in court, and should assert a thing, and on being asked how you knew, could tell no more about it than you can tell about the non-existence of spirits, your evidence wouldn't hang a katydid. A stupid dolt can scoff and sneer, an ass can bray, but what do they know about Spiritualism? A parrot can say, "Pretty Poll," but what does it know? I am satisfied, Brother Winter, writing as you did in your last article, that what you don't know about Spiritualism will make a much larger book than what you do know about it. However well Materialists may reason on other points, it seems to me that in regard to the Spiritual philosophy and a future state, they are the most unthinking, unreasoning, illogical set of negationists that I ever met.

I am not done with you yet, Brother Winter. You know there is something that moves your body, something that thinks, something that looks through the two windows each side of your nose. Now, we are after this something, and desire you to use your reason. Now the man is alive—he sees, hears, moves, and talks. Now he is dead, as it is called. What's the matter, Brother Winter? There is the body all intact. There is the brain, but it don't think; there are the limbs, but they don't move; there are the eyes, but they don't see; there is the tongue, but it talks not. What's gone? You say the life is gone, of course. You say life is the result of organization, and when the organization is dead, good-bye to all. Let us see about it. If life is the result of organization, it occurs to me that there must be an organization before there is life; but such is not the case. We find there is motion at four and a half months after conception. Now, Brother Winter, we are getting into deep water, and I propose to ask you three questions. If you can answer them, well and good. It seems to me that Materialists should answer the following questions, or forever hold their peace. To say that life is the result of organization is no more than any stupid dolt or ass can assert, and it won't do: 1. Is the life, or thing which animates the gross body, which goes out when the body dies, created from nothing? 2. If you answer no, please tell us where it does come from. 3. Tell us how and when it enters the partially developed fetus.

Brother Winter, come down like a man, and tell us something about the thing which animates the body and which you say does not exist after the death of the body. I pause for a reply.

Now, brother, I fancy I see the dilemma you are in. I challenge the whole Materialistic fraternity to disprove Spiritualism, or to demonstrate the non-existence of spirits. I challenge you to prove your assertion that death ends all. Brother Winter, you can't do anything with it, and you know it, and so do I. Now I insist that you are in the same boat with our Christian friends. They say God made the world out of nothing, that he wrote the Bible, and that the blood of Jesus will atone for the sins of those who believe. All this they say without one particle of evidence. You say that life is the result of organization; that death (so called) ends all; that there is no future existence; that our friends do not liv, and hence do not communicate. Where is the Christian's evidence for his assertions? He has none. Where is the proof for your assertions? You hav none. Now, sir, Brother Winter, you hav called us gudgeons, pious sharks; you hav compared us to wild asses. We stand between the Christians and Materialists with their assertions, and say we hav demonstrated facts; and, sir, you hav no right to say we hav not the demonstrated fact of a continued existence When such men as Prof. Varley, Crookes, Judge Edmonds, Prof. Hare, Robert Dale Owen, and thousands of others, among which are the greatest investigators, the deepest reasoners, the most profound thinkers of the age, say they hav this fact, it illy becomes you, and shows a wonderful degree of egotism, showing yourselvs to be the asses by sneering, scoffing, and making assertions without a particle of evidence to back them up. I conclude by asking you again to tell us what you know about death ending all. A. ALLEN NOE.

Poetry.

The Song of the Christian Creed.

From the Secular Review.

With cheeks that are pallid and thin,
Telling of fast and prayer,
A maiden sits where the sunbeams fall
On the wealth of her golden hair.
But in vain do the sunbeams shine—
In vain for her love they plead;
For her heart is sad, and she wearily sings
The song of the Christian creed.

"Steel and fagot and rack,
Rack and fagot and steel:
Oh, I read of your horrors with bated breath
Till all my senses reel!
O God! can it surely be
A part of thy 'noble' plan
To sow in the heart the seeds of lust
For the blood of our fellow-man?

"O God! what a cry of pain
Comes from the ages past!
'Tis a wail of sorrow that stuns the ear,
Like the sound of a thunder-blast,
Telling a tale of woe—
A tale of lust and shame.
Oh, was it to found a creed of blood
That Christ, 'the savior,' came?

"I am weary of fast and prayer,
Weary of priest and creed,
Weary of fagot and rack and steel,
And the terrors the churches breed.
I will rise to a nobler faith—
A faith in Humanity's claims;
Rise from the depths of a selfish fear
To wider and purer aims.

"Can I honor a tyrannous God,
Unmoved by his children's cry,
Blind to the orphan's burning tear,
Deaf to the widow's sigh?
No! no! I will yet be free
From the creed that is not from above;
And the grander faith of my life shall be Humanity, Friendship, Love!"

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer. 8m58

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

Are surer and quicker in action than any other Magnetic Garments.

They are made out of lace or netting which makes them the coolest and lightest appliance made.

Their magnets have on them an armature or keeper which makes them continuously curative. No others have this necessary addition. See any work on Natural Philosophy to see how necessary the Armature is.

The VICTORIA is so constructed that the patient can remove the magnets at pleasure and wash all the goods. This cannot be done with any others.

Paralysis, Asthma, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Female and Spinal Diseases, Rheumatism, Sick Headaches, Dyspepsia, General Debility and all diseases arising from deficient nerve force, there is no other treatment that is as successful as the wearing of VICTORIA MAGNETIC GOODS.

All other garments are slow in action.

VICTORIA is quick and sure. All other appliances oblige the patients to hope for to-morrow.

VICTORIA gives help to-day.

Send for circulars, price lists, etc., before you buy of others!

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol., 12 mo., 864 pp., cloth. Illustrated. Price $1.50.

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This history contains Gibbon's theological writings, separate from his historical and miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity.

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the origin of Christianity, is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, and other eminent Christian historians who have edited editions of Gibbon's works; and the pious but scholarly remarks of the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon, are also given in full.

Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

DR. FELLOWS

STARCHOPE

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

NOT a system of religion the world has yet believed in has been free from errors; not one has been true. All were based upon mistaken notions of gods and devils; all originated in fallacies and absurdities, or were copied and adopted by one system from another.—D. M. Bennett.

STRUGGLE, often baffled, sorely baffled, down as into entire wreck; yet a struggle never ended; ever will bear repentance, true, unconquerable purpose, begun anew. Poor human nature! Is not a man's walking, in truth, always that—"a succession of falls?" Man can do no other. In this wild element of a life he has to struggle onwards; now fallen, now deep-abased: and ever with tears and repentance, with bleeding heart, he has to rise again and struggle again still onward. That his struggle be a faithful, unconquerable one; that is the question of questions. We will put up with many sad details, if the soul of it be true.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

As to the question, What becomes of a man after death? we do not see that a highly educated European, left to his unassisted reason, is more likely to be in the right than a Blackfoot Indian. Not a single one of the many sciences throws the smallest light on the state of the soul after the animal life is extinct. In truth, all the philosophers, ancient and modern, who hav attempted, without the aid of revelation, to prove the immortality of man, from Plato down to Franklin, appear to us to hav failed deplorably.—Macaulay's Essays.

IT is now over sixty years since I was obliged to commit to memory Watts's Catechism, and I fear that a great part of the goodly instruction that I then got has evaporated, but some of the worthy doctor's words still sound in my ear, though they no longer satisfy the intellect. "How do you know that you hav a soul?" "Because I hav something in me that can desire and wish—that can rejoice and be sorry—that can know and believe—which my body cannot do." I suppose such instructions are still being poured into the infant mind. About the same time I was encouraged or compelled to commit to memory some of his "Divine Songs," such as:

"'Tis God that makes the sun to know
His proper hour to rise," etc.

The little glimpse that I hav got into astronomy slightly modifies my notions about the sun; but the ideas that I hav now arrived at about the soul are still more at variance with my youthful instructions. I shall not pursue the subject, but I recommend to my readers Bradlaugh's tract "Has Man a Soul?" and the following speculation from a book that I some time ago took occasion to recommend to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.—Hylax.

THE forms of nature are of infinit variety, man being the most complex known to us among those that we call living creatures; but there is no good reason for believing that when nature has produced this high form, man (possibly not the highest of her developments), she changes her law and eternizes him, any more than that she eternizes any of her preceding forms. There can be no elixir of eternity for a form, whatever its robe of beauty or dignity of name. What is called SOUL I see to be the phenomenal expression of known material conditions. To single it out from other phenomena and think of it as existing independently, I must regard as a superstition. If we are obliged to rest other forms of energy strictly upon matter and its functions, and cannot erect them into spiritual entities superior to the laws of matter, we are committed, by the logic of the case, to the same course with respect to soul or mind. We are bound, in short, to consider it one particular form of mind; a special formation of matter resulting from a special differentiation of it.—Waters's Through Rome On.

THE points of difference between Christianity and Judaism hav very much to do with a man's fitness to be a bishop or a rabbi. But they hav no more to do with his fitness to be a magistrate, a legislator, or a minister of finance, than with his fitness to be a cobbler. Nobody has ever thought of compelling cobblers to make any declaration "on the true faith of a Christian." Any man would rather hav his shoes mended by a heretical [or Infidel] cobbler than by a person who had subscribed to all the thirty-nine articles, but had never handled an awl. Men act thus, not because they are indifferent to religion, but because they do not see what religion has to do with the mending of their shoes. Yet religion has as much to do with the mending of shoes as with the budget and the army estimates.—Macaulay's Essays.

JESUS said that one of the twelve had a devil, but I am not prepared to say whether he meant the unfaithful and cowardly Peter, to whom he entrusted the keys of heaven, or Judas, who sold him for money—thirty pieces of silver, if my memory serves me right—just as would nearly any bishop of the present day. The bishops preach that it is as difficult for a rich man to get into heaven as for a camel to go through the eye of a needle; yet they enrich themselvs and their families as greedily as if they, at any rate, never expected to smell brimstone as a consequence.—Bradlaugh's Few Words About the Devil.

LANG SYNE, in Eden's bonny yard,
When youthfu' lovers first were paired,
And a' the soul of love they shared
The raptured hour,
Sweet on the fragrant, flowery sward
In shady bower;
Then you, ye auld sneck-drawin dog,
Ye cam' to paradise incog.,
And played on man a cursed bogue,
(Black be your fa'!)
And gied the infant world a shog,
Maist ruined a'.—Burns.

A DUNGEON horrible, on all sides round,
As one great furnace, flamed; yet from those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe;
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell; hope never comes,
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever burning sulphur unconsumed.
—Milton's Paradise Lost.

Odds and Ends.

FAST DAY was observed in Massachusetts. That meant no beans.

AN Irish explorer was telling of a virgin forest into whose recesses he had penetrated, when a dull-witted auditor interrupted him to ask what a virgin forest was. "A virgin forest, sor," said Hibernicus, eyeing the questioner with a glance of ineffable disdain; "a virgin forest is a stretch of timber where the hand of man has never set fut!"

"SEE here, sir," exclaimed a Philadelphia grocer, bristling up with a righteous indignation as the milkman made his morning call. "I should just like you to explain how the chalk and white clay that I found in my coffee cup this morning got there?" "Don't know, I'm sure," answered the milkman, "unless you sweetened your coffee with the same sugar you sold me yesterday."

2 LOVERS sat beneath the shade,
And 1 un2 the other said:
"How 14-8 that you b9
Hav smiled upon this suit of mine;
If 5 a heart, it palps for you—
Thy voice is music melody—
'Tis 7 to be thy loved 1, 2—
Say 0y nymph, wilt marry me?"
Then lisped she soft, "Why 13ly."
Times-Democrat.

A HARD-HEARTED landlord approached his tenant and demanded the rent, and informed him that unless it was paid him instantly, he would throw him out. "Vat?" said the tenant. "Unless you pay me at once, I will throw you out," said the landlord. "Vell," said the tenant, "I vill pay der day pehind yesterday." "It won't do, sir. You must pay now or I will take the necessary steps." "Oh! vell," said the tenant, "go und take der steps, und der front door or der necessary steps in der rear of your vants. Dat's all right."—The Independent.

TIMOTHY FLYNN was a tailor in the employ of Mr. Peters. Domestic affairs of Flynn and his wife were not conducted with harmony. Broken heads and dismembered articles of furniture frequently attested this fact. Last Monday Timothy did not come to work. On Tuesday Mr. Peters went to his house to see him. He met Mrs. Flynn at the door. A black eye, a bruised nose, and a triumphant smile were her most prominent features. "You seem to hav been having a devil of a time, Mrs. Flynn," said Mr. Peters; "you are all broken up. Has——"

"Don't talk, Mr. Pethers. Lord love ye, don' talk till ye see Flynn."—Texas Siftings.

A FRENCHMAN traveling by railway in England was very anxious to change his shirt in order to make a visit after the train had arrived at its destination, without taking the trouble to go to a hotel. His guide-book indicated a tunnel on the road, and he asked the guard how long the train would be in the tunnel. The guard mistook his question, and supposing he asked how long before the train would reach the tunnel, answered briefly, "Half an hour." The carriage in which the Frenchman was traveling contained several ladies and gentlemen. The traveler got down his valise and unlocked it, and made everything ready for a change of apparel while they were in the tunnel. As soon as they entered it he pulled off his shirt and prepared to put on a clean one, but imagin his surprise on discovering that the train remained only three minutes in the tunnel instead of thirty! As they came out into open daylight he was standing in their midst in a condition quite unfit for a mixed company of ladies and gentlemen.

A WELL-KNOWN bishop, eminent in his position and in personal dignity, during the exercise of his official duties was once quartered upon the wealthiest resident of a certain village, whose wife chanced to be away from home. The bishop, with grim humor, frequently complains at being put into the spare room, which is opened especially for him and the encouragement of rheumatism. He is withal a slim man, and on this occasion, when his host inquired how he had slept and hoped he had passed an agreeable night, he answered with some vehemence, "No, I did not; I passed a very disagreeable night indeed." The bishop departed, and when the wife of his host returned she naturally inquired who had been in the house in her absence. "Bishop P——," said the husband. "Bishop P——!" exclaimed the good woman. "And where did you put him to sleep?" "In the spare bed, of course." "In the spare bed!" shrieked the horrified matron. "Why, I put all the silverware under the mattress before I went away!"

A GENTLEMAN stopped his horse at a toll gate, and not seeing the gatekeeper, went into the house. Finding no one, he began a general search, and finally discovered the gatekeeper out in the field at work. Although the old man was quite a distance away, the gentleman went into the field to the old man, and said:

"You are the toll-gate keeper, I believe?"

"Yes, sir," the old man replied, turning and leaning on his hoe handle.

"Well, I want to go through the gate."

"Ain't the gate open?"

"Yes."

"Well, why don't you go through? It's my business to be there."

"Because I want to pay you."

"And you came all the way out here to pay me five cents?"

"Yes, sir," said the gentleman, proudly looking the old man in the eye."

"Couldn't you hav left the money on the table?"

"Yes, sir, but I wanted you to know that I paid you."

"You are an honest man."

"Yes, sir," replied the gentleman, while a pleased expression spread over his face.

"You would hav walked three times as far to hav paid me that five cents, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, sir, I would."

"Here, John," the old man called to a boy that lay in the shade, "call the dog, and go along and watch this feller till he gets away. Bet a hundred dollars he steals something 'fore he leaves the place.—Arkansas Traveler.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

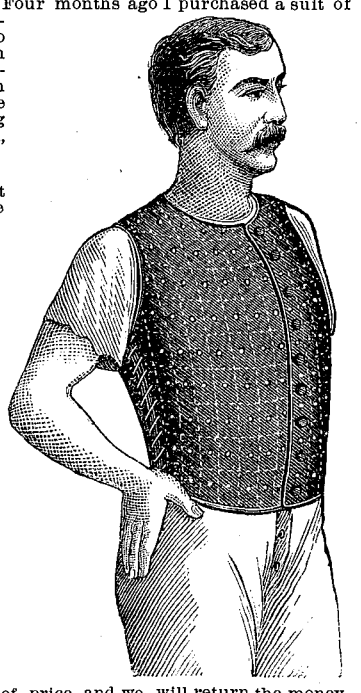
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Notes and Clippings.

As the time for the coronation of the czar approaches, every well-regulated daily newspaper is getting his obituary ready.

A MAN has invented a chair that can be adjusted to 800 different positions. It is designed for a boy to sit in when he goes to church.

MISS JENNIE CAMPBELL, who was "cured" at Quincy, in Michigan, of consumption by prayer and faith about two months ago, has just died of that disease.

AN English manufacturer was lately fined $350 for an infringement of the factory act. The inspector had found forty-five women in the mill seven minutes after the hour for closing.

AN Irishman named Foley, in Bradford, England, recently in a spirit of bravado drank thirty-six glasses of whisky in rapid succession. Of course he died after his thirty-sixth drink.

A MEMBER of the Massachusetts House of Representativs, a physician, too, has discovered that "small-pox is sent by the Almighty as a judgment upon land monopoly, money monopoly, and transportation monopoly."

ARABI does not believe unreservedly in the "faith cure." He told a reporter for the Ceylon Times that he preferred European medical advisers for himself, but as for the women and children—God was good, and they would get well by his mercy.

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Harvard, says that the "seminaries bid against each other for young mendicants, who think that the community owes them a theological education," and that "the clerical profession has been deeply injured by beneficial endowments."

THE Boston sheriff who made the annexed remark is level-headed: "Many women come to me at the jail and want to read and talk to the criminals, but I tell them to go and talk and read to the same class that are not as yet criminals, and keep them from being such."

A RECENT visitor in Maine, where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law, said he succeeded in getting a drink of whisky. The "bar" was the vest pocket of a hotel-keeper, and the liquor was poured out for him in a secret room. After drinking it he made a rush for the hotel pump to put out the fire.

THE pastor of a church in Yonkers recently received a lady one hundred years old on probation. Too much caution cannot be exercised when a century-old lady has announced an intention to reform. The giddy thing may be off to a fancy ball in three minutes after she solemnly promises to restrain herself.—Gazette.

THE Texas meteor story was so much overdone as to fail of its mischievous purpose to excite the minds of people interested in science. Meteors weighing a ton or two are now in museums; but the Texas monstrosity, alleged to "cover an acre," was spread over too much surface, and was too far run into the ground for credibility.

A WRITER in Leisure Hour says that "betel-nut chewing is universal among the inhabitants of the Malay Peninsula. The betel-nut seems as essential to a Malay as tobacco to a Japanese or opium to the confirmed Chinese opium-smoker. It is a revolting habit, and if a person speaks to you while he is chewing his 'quid' of betel his mouth looks as if it was full of blood. The practice stains the teeth black. I tasted the nut and found it pungent and astringent, not tempting. The Malays think that you look like a beast if you hav white teeth."

THE valuation of the property set apart for school purposes in Colorado is $35,000,000, which is exempt from taxation. The school population of this young state exceeds 15,000, and teachers are paid at an average as follows: Male teachers, graded schools, per month, $120; female teachers, $57; ungraded schools, male teachers, $57; female teachers, $46.

"MAMMA," said a little Sunday-school scholar, "do we all go to Abraham's bosom when we die if we are real good?" "Yes, my child, so we are taught." "All of us, mamma, all the little boys and the little girls, and the grown up people, too?" "Yes, darling, everybody." "My eyes, mamma, what a great big hotel sort of a bosom Abraham must hav, mustn't he?"

THE other day a bright little girl was listening to her mother, who was reading stories to her, in one of which the name of his satanic highness was given. "Mamma," she exclaimed, "who is the devil?" "Why, my child," the mother answered, hesitatingly. "I can't tell you exactly." "Oh, well! never mind," was the interruptiv exclamation of the little one; "I'll ask grandpa; I've heard him mention him."

A SPANISH magistrate has hit upon a highly original mode of dealing with adulteration. A French paper quotes the proclamation of a certain alcaide whom Dogberry himself might envy: "All articles," runs this document, "in the shape of wines, groceries, and provisions, which, upon examination and analysis, are proved to be injurious to health, will be confiscated forthwith and distributed to the different charitable institutions.

A RESIDENT of Spencer Brook, Minn., was strongly suspected of stealing from his neighbors. Learning of this, he confessed his guilt to his church, and was formally forgiven. But he did not reform. He had not intended to. Correctly calculating that confidence would be more or less restored by his pretended penitence, he devoted assiduous nightly attention to the portable property of his neighbors, and the next consideration of his deeds was in a criminal court.

THE editor of the Morning Journal of this city acknowledges himself obliged to giv up the following conundrums from a correspondent: "Sir: Can you explain how it is that all the murderers before expiating their crime on the gallows solemnly and publicly declare that they hav found Christ, whilst many thousands still liv who are not murderers, and hav not committed any crime whatever, and yet with all their searching and desire cannot say the same? Is it necessary to become a murderer to obtain this beatitude?"

BISHOP SCHOBEL, of Leitmeritz, Bohemia, has promulgated an edict directing that a census be taken of all females who act as housekeepers for the clergy, that their ages be obtained, and that all under fifty years old be immediately dismissed; also, that in future fifty years and upward shall be the standard for a housekeeper. A young Bohemian priest in New York says he don't exactly understand why the prelate has taken this action; but he seems to attach considerable significance to the fact that the bishop himself is over eighty years of age.

THE work of unofficial spies in the cause of prohibition has received a blow in Vermont. Barney Barker, express agent at Rutland, was arrested on a complaint made by one Love as a common informer, Love claiming that packages of liquor sent C. O. D. from out of the state and delivered by Barker, as express agent, to the consignees upon payment of the price constituted a sale by Barker contrary to Vermont laws. Similar warrants were issued against other express agents. The National Express Company tested the legality of prosecutions of this kind. The court held that inasmuch as liquor selling was not a crime at common law, but was made one by a statue of Vermont, prosecutions could only be instituted by public officials in the method provided by the law. A spy could not prosecute for alleged violation of law.

PARSON WHANGDOODLE BAXTER noticed at the last prayer-meeting in the Austin Blue Light Tabernacle that Gabe Snodgrass, who was working his lips like the rollers of a patent clothes-wringer as he read his Bible, actually had the book upside down. THE English Sunday Society has resolved to press upon the House of Lords the question of opening the public galleries and museums on Sundays. Early in May a resolution will be offered in that august body reciting that, whereas success has attended the action of the government in opening on Sundays the national museums and galleries in the suburban districts of London and in Dublin, and whereas no opposition to Sunday opening has come before the house, the house "is of opinion that the time has arrived for extending the policy of Sunday opening to all museums and galleries supported by national funds."

A REMARKABLE story was recently printed in the London Times regarding a young curate who was induced to visit a lady in his parish. At their first interview she impulsivly confessed her love, and besought him to kiss her just once ere they parted forever. Touched with pity, though not without some timidity, the innocent curate complied. They parted, she with tears in her eyes. A few days later the bashful dominie received a neat parcel by the post. He opened it to find an instantaneous photograph of himself in the act of kissing the mysterious woman. A note accompanied the picture conveying the cheerful intelligence that eleven other copies might be secured at £20 each. The fair creature said that if the curate did not desire the pictures she hoped to dispose of them elsewhere. It is said that negotiations are in progress between the parties.

THE Rev. John Snyder, of St. Louis, says of the book called Songs of Solomon: "There is no evidence to show that the book is the work of Solomon. It was probably written by a Northern poet who had no great regard for Solomon. Of course, 'the great king' mentioned in it is Solomon. The North was always restless under Solomon's reign, and if it had not been for his great executiv ability, rebellion would hav broken out before his death. The people there had no fancy for paying taxes for a capital which they never saw, and when he died and his son came to the throne they said: 'We'll hav no more of this sort of thing,' and as he would not make them the concessions they asked, they seceded. All this talk about mystical or allegorical interpretation is nonsense. It is as though you were to say of 'Hamlet,' or any other work, that the author did not intend to describe actualities, but to set forth certain philosophical or other principles under the guise of a play, poem, or other writing."

THEEE is war in Mexico—a village in Missouri—and the combatants are the two factions in a colored Baptist church, the weapons being the torch and the pistol. The Rev. Silas Smith, the pastor, has been arrested in St. Louis on a charge of conspiring with others, and some of the sisters of the flock hav been locked up. One has confessed that she burnt the church at the request of her pastor, who, having been ousted from the pulpit, was determined to hav no successor. The torch was applied not only to the regular church, but also to the house where the rival faction worshiped. Smith tells a story of persecution from his cell, and claims that his enemies, who were put out of the church for stealing "de church money," followed him, and one night, after he got home, "fiahed foah shots frew de window." At another time he was shot in the thigh, and he says it was while he was suffering from this wound that the church was burnt. Revenge seems sweet, even to the Ethiopian in Missouri.—Sun.

The Sabbath.

IS THERE ANY AUTHORITY FOR SUNDAY KEEPING? STATEMENTS OF THE BIBLE, CHRIST, AND THE BEST ACCREDITED CHURCH HISTORIANS.

It is not less strange than true that in this age of bibles very few know what the Bible does contain. It is revered for good that exists only in the imagination of its admirers. Reverence for the Bible is greatest on the part of those who hav but slight acquaintance with it. Intimate acquaintance dispels all reverence and its supposed sanctity. Just as we hav reverenced priest or minister, our awe and admiration were really for virtues, goodness, and sanctity with which our imagination clothed him; once we become intimately acquainted with the man, know him as he really is, and our awe and reverence vanish; we no longer respect, and we wonder we could ever hav been so blind and foolish as to regard such a man with reverence. And it is just so when we become really well acquainted with the Bible.

It is generally believed the Bible teaches Sunday observance; that if the Old Testament taught the observance of Saturday, the seventh day, the New Testament teaches the observance of Sunday or the first day.

There is no text, no word in the Bible, in regard to any change of the Sabbath from the seventh day to the first day, or Sunday—no shadow of authority for keeping Sunday holy. There is no intimation, not one word condemning the doing of secular work on Sunday or first day. We will pay $100 in gold for any and every such text. No such word as Sunday can be found in the Bible, Old or New Testament.

With the ending of the first chapter of Genesis, the work of creation is declared finished, although the first week of time was not yet completed. The second chapter should begin with the fourth verse; the first three verses self-evidently belong to the first chapter.

The division of the books of the Bible into chapters and verses is of comparativ recent date. Hugo de Santo Caro, a Dominican monk (afterward Cardinal Hugo Cardinalis), in 1240 A.D., made a concordance of the Latin Bible, but without any division of verses, but a b c d e f g placed in the margin at equal distances. He died in 1262. Rabbi Mordica (Isaac Nathan), about 1430, made a concordance of the Hebrew Bible, finishing the work in 1445. He numbered the divisions as verses.

Vatalibius soon after published a Latin Bible with both chapters and verses.

So the Jews got the division into chapters from the Christians, and Christians got the division into verses from the Jews.

There was no punctuation until the sixteenth century. Punctuation was the invention of one Mantius, a printer of Venice. Before his time there was not alone no punctuation, but there was no space between words. Letterswereallequallyclosetoeachothertoend oftheline.

The festival of Sunday is more ancient than the Christian religion; its origin is lost in remote antiquity. It did not originate, however, from any divine command, nor from piety toward the Christian God. On the contrary, it was set apart as a sacred day by the heathen world in honor of their chief god, the sun. The claim that we owe our Sunday to the Bible, that but for the Bible and Christianity we should hav no weekly day of rest from toil and labor, is utterly false, in direct contradiction of the facts of history.

Let us examin the Bible and learn what it does teach in regard to Sabbath and enforcing Sunday keeping:

"Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them.

"And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made, and rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.

"And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made" (Gen. ii, 1, 3).

How perfect is the harmony of the Bible! We read:

"Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the Lord, the creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" (Isaiah xl, 28.)

"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed" (Exodus xxxi, 17).

The Bible says that the blessing and sanctification of the seventh day were because, although God was never weary, he enjoyed resting; although never tired, he was refreshed by unneeded rest on the seventh day.

The second act of the creator was blessing the day upon which he had rested. Thenceforth the seventh day was blessed above all others, and it became the rest-day or Sabbath of the Lord.

The third act of the creator, according to the Bible, was to sanctify it—that is, to set it apart for all future time to holy and religious use.

That it was not alone the one first seventh day of time that was blessed and set apart is proved by the time when these three acts were performed. The first act was that of rest; this took place on the seventh day. The second and third acts took place when the seventh day was past; hence it was on the first day of the second week God blessed the seventh day and set it apart for holy use. The blessing and sanctification of the seventh day therefore relate not to the first seventh day of time, but to the seventh day of the week for all time to come, to commemorate God's rest on that day from the work of creation.

"Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant.

"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed" (Exodus xxxi, 16, 17).

So long as there are any children of Israel God declares the observance of the seventh day (Saturday) shall continue throughout their generations. Just so long it is a sign of God's people. All are not Israel that are of Israel (Rom. ix, 6). Any people can claim to be God's people. But here is the Bible test: Those only who are keeping the seventh day holy are God's people. This shall be the sign so long as there is an Israel of God on earth. It is a perpetual covenant, not made for Old Testament times only, not for old or new dispensation. So long as there is a Jew on earth, an Israelite by blood or adoption, in faith or fact, this shall be a perpetual covenant.

Good Christians of all denominations insist that a "thus saith the Lord" should settle all controversy.

"And God spake all these words, saying: Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates.

"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it" (Exodus xx, 1 and 8 to 11).

The term "Sabbath" is transferred from the Hebrew language and signifies rest. The command, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, is therefore exactly equivalent to saying, "Remember the rest day to keep it holy."

We read: "The Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." The Hebrew verb kadash, here rendered hallowed, and in Gen. ii, 3, rendered sanctified, is defined by Gesenius: "To pronounce holy, to sanctify; to institute any holy thing; to appoint."

According to the Bible, God instituted, appointed, set apart, the seventh day to be kept holy as his Sabbath.

If the Bible account of creation is not true in every particular there cannot be any such thing as a sacred or holy Sabbath. Unless God did work just six literal days, creating the world precisely as described in the first chapter of Genesis, then he did not rest, bless and sanctify the seventh day. According to the Bible, if he did not rest on the seventh day—a literal day of evening and morning (i. e., twenty-four hours)—then there is no obligation to keep it, because that is the especial and only reason given why we should observe it.

Talmage, D.D., in the Christian at Work, says: "The Bible account of creation of the world from a Sunday to Friday, the totality of the deluge, the utter mobility of the sun (at the time Joshua commanded it to stand still), are no longer preached from the pulpit."

The learned D.D.'s, in their anxiety to harmonize the irreconcilable, tell us it is not the definit seventh day, but the seventh part of time God commands us to keep. The six days of creation were not literal days, but six indefinit periods of a thousand or more years—six long geological periods.

These "servants of the Lord" deny the plainest declarations of the Bible, contradict God, Christ, the apostles, and each other whenever it seems necessary to do so to sustain their own pet notions. But if any truth seeker only ventures to infer a doubt of the truth of any statement in the Bible, how fiercely they are denounced as infamous blasphemers, wretched Infidels, contaminators of youth, impious wretches, God-accursed heretics, and such sweet, loving appellations!

That God (according to the Bible) requires the strict observance of the definit seventh day, and not any other, we hav proof for, for forty years, he daily performed a triple miracle—in supplying the children of Israel with manna—for the express purpose of impressing on them exact and literal obedience to his law; more especially the sacred observance of the definit seventh day.

The doctors of divinity tell us God knows all things. God says he does not. The Bible says God did not know whether the children of Israel would obey him or not. So to prove them, to find out for sure, he rained down bread from heaven.

"Then said the Lord unto Moses, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them whether they will walk in my law or no" (Ex. xvi, 4).

Learned doctors of divinity persist in assuring us when we die we shall be angels—that there is no food in heaven. Angels hav no need to eat or drink. But the Bible says just the reverse of this—that angels do hav food in heaven. Which are we to believe? We are assured if we do not believe God's chosen servants we shall certainly be damned. But if we believe them we must disbelieve the Bible, and we are assured if we disbelieve the Bible we shall be damned. The only safe way is simply not to believe either.

But do angels eat in heaven? Read just what the Bible says:

"Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven,

"And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

"Man did eat angel's food: he sent them meat to the full" (Psalms lxxviii, 23–25).

Manna that fed the children of Israel for forty years in the wilderness, the corn of heaven, is angel's food. The Bible says it looks like hoar frost, and tastes like oil. What a diet for forty years! No wonder the Israelites wept over it and cried in their misery.

"But now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all besides this manna before our eyes" (Num. xi, 6).

We are too much of a simpleton to appreciate the Bible heaven. We hav lost all our ambition to "be an angel and with the angels dwell." We might get so we could endure the incessant rain, but to hav to liv for all eternity on hoar frost that tastes like oil, ugh! No wonder the angels who visited Abraham enjoyed their meal of roast veal and bread and butter. We are warned that for simply suggesting these simple truths we shall never get to heaven; we can not regret it, for if admitted and endowed with crown, harp, and wings, we never could be content to remain there. We should very speedily flap our angel wings and fly back to our dear old Mother Earth in search of comfort and a good square meal, even if sure of being sent to hades for desertion.

We read in the sixteenth chapter of Exodus that God sent the manna every morning, and the people gathered enough to last them through the day; when the sun waxed hot it melted. If any gathered more than enough and kept it over until next day it bred worms and stank. "Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none" (verse 26). But on the sixth day they were commanded to gather twice as much, and on the seventh day it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein.

These miracles were repeated daily and weekly for forty years. Suppose one of the old patriarchs should hav conceived the modern minister's subterfuge, and decided God did not require observance of the exact, definit seventh day, but only desired one-seventh part of time should be kept holy. Suppose he proceeds to test the matter. On a Sabbath afternoon he informs his good wife of his decision. He will prove Moses is wrong, that it is just as pleasing to God to keep the first day as the seventh for the Sabbath. Sunday comes, and with it hunger and need of breakfast. But the usual prompt and punctual wife fails to call them to the much needed repast. The impatient patriarch at length in anger demands the reason of the delay. The good wife informs him he had ordered that day should be kept as the Sabbath—they dare not gather manna on the Sabbath day. Why had she not gathered it yesterday when she knew his wishes? Yesterday was the true Sabbath, or seventh day, and no manna fell; there was none to gather. The patriarch yells to his sons to accompany him and they go out and gather manna, more than enough for two days. At sundown, with a calm smile of triumph, he orders the observance of the commencement of the Sabbath. "From even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath" (Lev. xxiii, 22). In the morning he gathers with his family around the table to partake of their morning meal. No lack of manna this morning. He gathered more than a double allowance. He asks the Lord to bless the food, and raises the cover from the dish of manna. But why do they all quit so suddenly? Why does the venerable patriarch so tightly pinch his nasal protuberance as he rushes so wildly from his tent? Because the dish of manna on being uncovered proved to be a mass of putrid, stinking worms. He might try it the next day, and the next, and so on until the seventh day, by which time he would be well convinced the definit seventh day was the Sabbath, and that first day observance was a delusion and a folly.

We now turn to the evidence of the New Testament. We find eight hundred and thirty-one quotations in the New Testament from the Old. Christ says, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye hav eternal life; and they are they which testify of me" (John v, 39). At this time no word of the New Testament was in existence. So, then, the Old and New Testaments, Moses, God, Christ, and the apostles, must all stand or fall together.

Matthew (by none claimed to hav been written earlier than six years after Christ) describes Christ as tempted of the devil in the wilderness. After a fast of forty days his satanic majesty, on whom fasting seemed to hav no effect, suggested that Jesus prove his miracle power and supply himself with food by turning some stones into bread.

"But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not liv by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. iv, 4).

Christ here quotes from the Pentateuch (Deut. iii), thus indorsing the so-called books of Moses, and especially the commandments, the journey for forty years in the wilderness, the clothes and shoes in all that time not wearing out, of which the Bible does giv account, and the more wonderful miracle that clothes and shoes of the little children, instead of wearing out, grew larger and larger as the children grew from infancy to full man and womanhood, which the Bible does not account for. It is very hard to believe, but there is no help—got to simply swallow the whole story. It is Bible truth and Christ indorses it.

"And I hav led you forty years in the wilderness: your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot" (Deut. xxix, 5).

Much stress is laid by Christians on the Sermon on the Mount as embodying the principles of Christianity expounded by Christ himself, and that this affords us especial instruction and knowledge of God's requirements in this present time, under the gospel dispensation.

And now we would solemnly entreat the learned doctors of divinity, and all our Christian friends, to heed the declarations of their own elected authorities. Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, under especial inspiration, said:

"For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

"And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts iii, 22, 23).

"This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him" (Matt. xvii, 5).

Let us hear Christ. Let us at least make sure just what Christ does teach:

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your father which is in heaven" (Matt. v, 16).

Doctors of divinity tell us the seventh day was to glorify the father, the creator. But we, under the latter or gospel dispensation, keep the first day—Christ's resurrection day, the Lord's day—to glorify the son, our savior Jesus Christ.

But this is to repudiate the instructions of Christ himself. "Your good works," says Christ, "should glorify the creator, not me, but my father in heaven."

Doctors of divinity say: "Christ destroyed the old law. The old law with its old Jewish seventh-day Sabbath has passed away. We are living under the changed or new law. Christ destroyed the old law; changed the keeping of Saturday to keeping Sunday the Lord's day."

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matt. v, 17).

Come to fulfil. Doctors of divinity say, "He did fulfil, and so did away with the law." In Matthew iii, 15, Christ desired to be baptized, saying: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." Did Christ's baptism do away with all righteousness? The word fulfil is in both texts in the Greek pleeroo, to teach, to preach, to inculcate fully.

"For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled" (Matt. v. 18).

A jot is the smallest letter of the Hebrew alphabet; a tittle is the tiny mark over a consonant. It is equal to the declaration, no dotting of an i or crossing of a t shall be changed in the law until heaven and earth cease to exist.

Why will the learned doctors of divinity, the priests, and the ministers be so Infidelistic? Why do they deny the teaching of the Bible and scorn the words of Jesus?

"Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v, 19).

Wesley, who was a profound Greek scholar, renders this, "shall hav no part in the kingdom of heaven."

"Break one of these least commandments." All are agreed Jesus here refers to the moral law of Ten Commandments. Christians may say, "Oh! Saturday or Sunday, it is a small matter; don't believe God is so dreadful particular. I shall not be kept out of heaven for such a little violation of the law! I will trust in Jesus!" But what does Jesus himself say? You may call this or that great or small, but if you break one of these least commandments you shall not enter heaven.

James, the inspired apostle, in his epistle declares:

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James ii, 10).

To show beyond all question that Christ was speaking of the Ten Commandments, he continues:

"For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v, 20).

What was, in what consisted, the righteousness of the Jews? Obedience to the Ten Commandments.

"And it shall be our righteousness if we observe to do all these commandments before the Lord our God as he hath commanded us" (Deut. vi, 25).

Again, in this same sermon on the mount, Christ says:

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven" (Matt. vii, 21).

It is easy to say, Lord, Lord! It is possible to even do penance by visiting the slums of a city (a la Talmage), to suffer the "ragged edge" in seeking to obey the first great command "to be fruitful and multiply" (a la Beecher), to sear the conscience and utter malicious defamation of the good and noble dead (a la Joe Cook)—to do all these wonderful works for Jesus, and yet, failing to do the will of the father by keeping his holy memorial of creation, be disowned, cast out, and forfeit heaven at last. The Bible says so. Hear Christ:

"Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, hav we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name hav cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

"And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii, 22, 23).

Christ is on our side, and we shall yet prove, beyond possibility of refutation, that the pope's Sunday keepers are God's Sabbath breakers.

We read in Matthew, fifteenth chapter, that certain Jews came to Christ and asked why his disciples did not obey the tradition of the elders in regard to washing their hands before meals. Christ reproves them: "Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition" (Matt. xv, 3). It appears they had a tradition that if they went into the temple and dedicated their all to God, although they did not hav to part with any of their possessions (it was "corban"), they were released from all claims, even to supply needs of their parents—they refused to help then, pleading all they had was God's. Thus by their tradition they made void the fifth commandment, as to-day Christians make void the fourth, finding it more profitable to obey the tradition and keep Sunday than obey God's commandment and keep the seventh day. Says Christ:

"Thus hav ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

"Ye hypocrits, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me.

"But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrins the commandments of men" (Matt. xv, 7, 9).

It was Christ's custom to keep the seventh-day Sabbath. Luke, the most learned of all evangelists, declares:

"And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagog on the Sabbath day and stood up for to read" (Luke iv, 16).

Matthew (written six years after Christ) declares:

"In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week" (Matt. xxviii, 1).

So there was a Sabbath recognized and observed by the apostles six years after Christ. What day was that? The day before Sunday or first day, for the seventh day the Sabbath ended ere the first day began to dawn?

It is then proved beyond all question the Christian Sunday is not the New Testament Sabbath; for the Sabbath of the New Testament—the Sabbath of Christ—the Sabbath of the apostles—ends before Sunday begins.

Mark (written not less than twelve years after Christ) declares:

"And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James and Salome had bought sweet spices that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun" (Mark xvi, 1, 2).

Mark on this subject is in exact harmony with Matthew. When Sabbath was past—that is, after sundown on the seventh day—the women who loved Jesus went out and bought spices to anoint or embalm him. If Sunday or first day had been the new Sabbath, would these holy women hav gone out shopping on it?

Luke (not written until twenty-three years after Christ) declares:

"And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also which came with him from Galilee followed after and beheld the sepulcher, and how his body was laid. And they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment" (Luke xxiii, 54, 56).

Twenty-three years after Christ, Luke, the most learned of all the evangelists, declares the women rested on the Sabbath day. What day? The day according to the commandment—the day preceding Sunday, or first day?

"Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared and certain others with them" (Luke xxiv, 1).

The gospel of John was not written until 96 A.D.; or sixty-three years after Christ. John was the beloved disciple, learned of Jesus leaning on his breast. Surely if there was any change in the law, any new Sabbath for Christians, John would speak of it, would venerate it. He speaks of the first day of the week, but instead of terming it the Sabbath, he simply calls it first day of the week. He knew nothing of any change of Sabbath.

"The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early when it was yet dark" (John xx, 1).

We hav proved from testimony of Jesus and the evangelists there was no change of Sabbath known to them. We now call attention once more to the lack of belief, faith, and reverence for the Bible manifested by priests and preachers.

They declare God's law is altered, the Sabbath changed. God says:

"My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips" (Psalms lxxxix, 34).

"He spake the Ten Commandments with his own lips" (Exodus xx, 1).

Christ says:

"For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled" (Matt. v, 18).

Well might Christ say to his pretended followers:

"Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke vi, 46.)

God says the seventh day is the Sabbath, and must be kept holy. He will not alter it.

Christ says, "The law shall not be changed so much as dotting an i or crossing a t."

Why then with pretended piety do these ministers and doctors of divinity seek to coerce all people to disobey God, despise Christ, and trample on the Bible by making laws to enforce Sunday observance? Let them get right themselvs before they seek to compel others to come to their standard.

One more text and we will turn to the evidence of church historians.

The doctors of divinity make much of the text, Rev. i, 10:

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice as a trumpet."

They declare this text givs authority for Sunday keeping. The Lord's day, they claim, is Sunday.

Even allowing the Lord's day to be Sunday—which we are prepared to prove it is not—would the fact of John being in the spirit on that day justify changing the law of God that he declares he will not alter? We are willing to rest the Bible argument on this text. We admit, the term Lord's day refers to the Sabbath—more, that the Lord's day is the day we should keep—that the text does prove there is one day more sacred than all others—one day that should, according to the Bible, be regarded as holy. Now, having admitted all that is claimed by Sunday keepers, we ask, What day does John refer to? And whatever day it may prove to be we will agree to observe just as faithfully as any of our orthodox Christian friends.

We will take no creed or catechism, no man's say-so; in so important a matter we will not ask the word of apostle or evangelist, priest or king, but take the plain word of God himself.

What day is the Lord's day, the Lord's Sabbath?

"And God spake all these words, saying, But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God" (Ex. xx).

But they claim we do not mean God's day; we mean the Lord Jesus Christ's day! So then they would hav us understand there is a rivalry between God and his son. Well, God says he is a jealous God, we admit, but in this instance God and his son are united. For we will turn to the New Testament, to the words of Christ himself, for answer to our question, What day is the Lord's day—the Lord Jesus Christ's day?

"And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

"Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath" (Mark ii, 27, 28).

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

A Minister's Crime.

From the Post Express.

A sad story of wrong and wickedness by a minister of the gospel has just come to light at Saratoga. Rev. George T. Spencer has been pastor of the Methodist church at South Corinth, a village near that place, since May last. His wife was an estimable lady of a neighboring town, and she had a sister, sixteen years of age. A few days ago this mere girl gave birth to a child, the father being the Rev. Spencer. On the day after the birth of the child, a brother of the unfortunate girl confronted the minister with the evidences of his guilt. While on the way to the house the brother met the minister and his wife on the road, when a sad scene was had. The husband admitted his guilt then and there, and made no effort to conceal or excuse it. The wife left his side and returned to the house, where she gathered up a few trinkets as keepsakes, and turned her back on home and husband forever. She went to her father's house, already darkened by the cloud of shame. The matter was laid before the presiding elder of the district, and a trial promptly held. The rascal pleaded guilty and was expelled from the ministry. He remained about his house for a few days. A night or two ago a band of determined men, armed with a bag of feathers and a pail of hot tar, visited the house, but the bird had flown. He learned of the preparations that were making for his benefit and left for other climes. The wronged girl is motherless, and has the sympathy of the community.

Editorial.

We hav this week begun mailing the fourth volume of "Around the World" to those subscribers who hav paid the $1.50 for it. We are glad to say these embrace a good portion of the original subscribers to the fund, and we hope the rest will come forward now that the volume is complete. As we mail the books from our alphabetical list, those whose initial letters occur early in the alphabet will get the book first, but the difference will be a few days only. We also hav plenty of complete sets on hand, and shall be pleased to sell them to our friends. In cloth the sets are $6.50; in leather and red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Notes.

About twenty-nine millions of dollars are wasted on rum and religion in this city every year.

In England the pious newsvenders and printers are allowed to caricature the holy virgin, the pope, and all the saints of the Catholic church, but if some sarcastic Freethinker givs rein to his wit he is incarcerated in jail for a year or so. It makes all the difference in the world to the average Protestant whose ox is gored.

The Melbourne, Australia, Bulletin fires this well-aimed shot at the Salvationists: "An English paper declares that about half the time of the police and three-fourths of the time of the magistrates is occupied in dealing with cases arising out of the proceedings of the Salvation Army. In fact, we suppose General Booth is almost as demoralizing as a low drinking booth."

In the Russian army it is proposed to substitute for the present regimental flags banners bearing as emblems the patron saints of the respectiv regiments. This is to be done by special order of the czar. It is a significant fact that the worst governed empire on the globe is the most Christian, and the ruler most hated and detested by his people is the most pious.

The Agnostic, of Dallas, has these pleasant words to say of us:

"The Truth Seeker has won such a reputation for itself that it needs no commendation from us. Since the death of D. M. Bennett it has been edited with marked ability by Mr. E. M. Macdonald. Besides being ably conducted, and filled with choice contributions on progressiv subjects, it is the largest weekly periodical devoted exclusivly to the promulgation of the principles of Freethought in the world."

Charles Bright, whose brilliant lectures in this country in behalf of Liberalism will long be remembered by those who heard him, has arrived safely at his home in Australia, looking, the Sydney Liberal says, at least ten years younger. He has immediately gone to work, and we hear of him lecturing acceptably to large audiences. We congratulate him on his new lease of life, which is equally fortunate for the Liberals of Australia and unfortunate for the Christians of that province.

We learn that the Rochester Liberals hav pledged $100 toward defraying the expenses of the next meeting of the N. Y. State Freethinkers' Association if it should be held in that place. At last summer's convention it was voted to hold the next at Saratoga, but on consideration that place appears to be unavailable, as there are no resident Liberals there, and the hotel prices are ruinously high. The executiv committee will do well to substitute for Saratoga either Rochester or Port Jervis, in both of which cities there are many activ friends of Liberalism.

George Chainey's This World has been consolidated with the Radical Review. Owing to the irregularity of the publication of the former journal, Mr. Chainey concludes that his subscribers hav lost confidence in it, and when recently he sent out bills amounting, as he informs us, to nearly four thousand dollars, so few responded that he has been forced to consolidate or suspend. The worry, too, has made him sick, and the last number was edited from a bed of pain. We we regret Mr. Chainey has been forced to this step. His sermons are brilliant and solid, and will be missed by his many friends all over the country. The next best thing will be to get him to make a lecturing tour occasionally.

For advertising purposes there is nothing like getting the preachers to denounce a play. If Mr. Morse should produce the Passion Play now, no theater in this city could accommodate the crowd that would flock to see it. Recently the priests and parsons of Sherman, Texas, united to denounce as immoral the spectacular drama of the Black Crook, which was to appear in that city, warning all their flocks to keep away, as the play was naughty. They also published their denunciation of it in the daily papers. The result was, as might hav been expected, "there was not a vacant seat from pit to dome." The Sherman Courier says: "No play has been better received since the curtain first rose in our Opera House, and no play has been witnessed by so many people. The Black Crook may not be a moral entertainment, but moral people see and enjoy it." And some heretical fellow, without the fear of the Lord before his eyes, asks concerning the ministers' card, "Was it a fossilized ecclesiastical pronunciamento of Pope Innocent's inquisition, resurrected and printed by mistake?" Whatever the motiv, the showmen ought to hav sent the ministers tickets for a place among the bald heads in the front row.

Last week Thursday Mr. Gladstone made a long and brilliant address to Parliament in support of the Affirmation bill, which, we are informed, will probably pass the lower House by about thirty majority, but will be defeated by the House of Lords. It is one of Mr. Bradlaugh's cherished schemes to abolish the House of Lords, and if they are the the means of preventing the passage of this just bill it will appear to the world that he ought to hav succeeded long ago. The clergy are working hard on this bill, all the church dignitaries having presented to their flocks petitions remonstrating against its passage. It is noticeable that the sects hav buried their animosities and united in the effort to keep the Atheist out of Parliament. When this question is settled they will resume their pious little fights.

The Auckland Star has been crowing over having the largest church attendance in Auckland of any province in New Zealand. But it has been effectually silenced by Mr. R. Stout, a lawyer, who shows from official statistics that though the church attendance is more than twelve per cent greater in Auckland than in Otago, the attendance in schools is two per cent less, and the number of educated people two per cent less, while the number of criminals is thirty per cent greater. Which showing leads the Sydney Liberal to inquire, "Is this cause and effect, or what is it?" And it is an interesting question whether the church-going produces the ignorance and crime, or the ignorance and crime the church-going. We hope the church council which tries Mr. Heber Newton will wrestle with this conundrum also.

The Italian authorities do not regard the pope with so much veneration as they did a few centuries ago. He is now asked to pay his taxes like a man. The notice of his indebtedness to the government was addressed to Citizen Joachim Pecci, which is the proper name of his popiness Leo XIII. His trade or profession was at the same time described as "pope, conducting business at the Vatican palace, Rome." When the taxes were paid the receipt was made out to Citizen Joachim Pecci. Mr. Pecci may regard it as lowering his dignity to address him as "citizen," but that is a mistake. The psychologic philosopher of Madison Square refers to himself as "Citizen George Francis Train," and what is good enough for a Train is no disgrace to a pope. It is the duty of Mr. Pecci while bearing the title of a citizen to look to that he be always a good one.

Professor Sattler, of Munich, Germany, in a recent essay presents evidence and testimony from the evangelists that the present year of grace is not 1883, but 1888. Accordin o the popular method of reckoning, Christ was born in the ear 754, counting from the foundation of Rome. By Profes r Sattler's method he was born in the year 749 of that era, ma ing a difference of five years. The arithmetical operation by which this conclusion is reached by the distinguished professor is complicated, and some of his data are not perfectly reliable, as many of them rest on the figures given by the evangelists, which fact is in itself sufficient reason for considering them open to doubt. The instances are very few in which an evangelist or other biblical writer has been detected in making an accurate statement regarding the things of this world. Their strong point was in setting forth the things of the next, and if the information they furnish appertaining to that mysterious realm is equal in reliability to what they say about the present, it is valuable indeed! The question raised by Professor Sattler is one upon which the researches of the scholarly "Antichrist" might throw considerable light.

We print on another page an address to the Land League Convention, just closed in Philadelphia, from the National Land Reform Association, which has its headquarters in New York. The address touches upon a question of great and growing interest—that of land monopoly. The Land Refomers hold it to be a self-evident truth that by virtue of man's existence he has a right to a place to exist. This unquestionably sounds reasonable. Nature has spread the table for us all, and certainly no man has a right to more seats at it than he can occupy while a part remain standing. The National Land Reform Association is an old and time-honored institution. It has wrought many important reforms in land tenure in the past. Its measures are peaceful, and while, as stated in the address, it does not criticise the advocates of violent revolution, when justifiable, it relies mainly upon the triumph of right ideas for the accomplishment of the ends in view. The dynamite method may hav many sympathizers in this country, but it is a credit to the United States that it has few activ and practical supporters. Violence is not excusable in a land of popular suffrage, however necessary it may be under a despotism. If the reforms sought to be inaugurated by this Association are, as they appear to be, calculated to effect a better adjustment than now exists between the claims of the wealthy and the poor, they certainly deserve the approval and support of all.

A correspondent of the New York Sun calls upon Colonel Ingersoll to test the truth of Christianity in a most remarkable manner. Bishop Warburton claims that "the truth of Christianity must stand or fall with the ruin or restoration of the temple at Jerusalem, for, if that temple should be rebuilt for the purpose of Jewish worship, Christianity would not support its pretensions, nor the prophets, nor Jesus the truth of their predictions." Cardinal Newman indorses this view of Bishop Warburton. Therefore to establish the falsity of prophecy and Christianity, the writer in the Sun would hav Colonel Ingersoll attempt the restoration of the temple at Jerusalem. Nothing more idiotic could be thought of. When it is considered that Christianity has already been shown in ten thousand ways to be a delusion and prophecy a humbug, and when there is not one Christian in a million who would accept the test as conclusiv, the addition of this evidence to that already possessed would not weigh so much as a hair. The temple at Jerusalem could be rebuilt, if money enough were raised, as easily as any other temple of the same size; and the prospects are that if the emigration of Jews to Palestine continues as it has been going on for a year or two, the temple may yet be restored to the worship of Jehovah; but whether such a restoration takes place or not, Christianity is still the religion of superstition, the prophecy of Christ is no more reliable than that of Wiggins, and the arguments already brought forward by Colonel Ingersoll cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world.

In discussing the condition of Catholicism in France, a Catholic priest in the Modern Review makes some startling admissions regarding his brethren of the cloth and his church. He considers the religious warfare of the time as between Roman Catholicism and Rationalism, and does not even allude to Protestantism as a power to be either feared, or a force to be considered. Protestantism in France is evidently of little account. The priests, he says, hav no influence on respectable society, because they hav not the respect of society. The majority of them liv in absolute ignorance of the system of the universe. Some are not even convinced of the rotation of the earth round the sun. For an intelligent priest to write about astronomy is to subject himself to suspicion as heretical. The "teaching in the theological schools is shamefully poor." Half of the priests "hav never read the Bible once through," and many cannot even explain the scripture they are compelled to be familiar with. One confessed that he never opened any book except his breviary. They are very generally ignorant of church history. "Kept apart from their fellow-citizens, to begin with, by their garb as much as by their way of life, they hold themselvs still more aloof by reason of the aversion of which they feel themselvs to be the object. Thus they remain strangers to the most legitimate aspirations of modern society, no less than to the scientific truths of which it is in full possession. They hav scarcely any influence except over the minds of women and children. Women listen to them because their own intellectual culture is, in France, so imperfect that they are less disquieted by the want of harmony between the scientific spirit and the ideas of sacerdotalism; indeed, they are hardly conscious of the discord; while children are as yet at an age when instruction is not obliged to submit to the dictates of good sense. These children, however, as they grow up almost inevitably get beyond the reach of the priest's influence. The catechisms in use are an indication of the intellectual caliber of the cures and vicaires appointed at the Episcopal discretion. They can hardly teach anything of dogma or morals without mixing it up with errors of principle and false representations of fact, which they themselvs accept as true." Of course this priest is bound to assume that he thinks Romanism will gain the victory over Secularism, but how he reconciles this belief with his presentation of facts he does not condescend to explain. It would be a riumph of ignorance over intelligence, which we cannot conve to be a permanent possibility in this century.

Book Notes.

A new and handsome edition of Susan H. Wixon's "Apples of Gold" has been issued and the price reduced to $1.25. This is a story book without superstition, and every Freethinking parent should get it for the children to read. We hope the encouragment of a second edition will cause Miss Wixon to persevere in writing books of this character.

Victor Hugo's oration on Voltaire has been brought out in a neat pamphlet by the managers of Man, in both French and English, to which they hav added Goethe's poem on "The Lodge," George Eliot's "Choir Invisible," and Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," which Mr. Wakeman terms the three world poems. The translation of Hugo's oration is by James Parton, the most competent man in the world to do it, because he loves both the subject and the orator. We hope this pamphlet may hav the wide circulation to which its merit and low price entitle it. Send T. C. Leland, 744 Broadway, 10 cents for one, or $1 for fifteen of them, and hand them around.

Of the collection of Gibbon's writings on Christianity recently brought out by Mr. Peter Eckler, the Investigator appreciatingly says:

"This is indeed a great work by one of the most learned and eloquent writers of the English language, and a Liberal besides. It comprises all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in 'The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,' and a vindication of some passages in its 15th and 16th chapters; together with a life of the author, preface and notes by the editor, including remarks by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, 'An English Churchman,' and other scholars. The great ability of Gibbon as a historian and an opponent of Christianity is well known to Liberals, and this very valuable volume of nearly 800 pages will be a most instructiv and important acquisition to their libraries. It is profusely ornamented with pictures of the gods and goddesses of the ancient mythology, and every page bears evidence of profound learning and the most exhaustiv research."

Those desiring to order the book can do so through us. The price is $1.50, which is very low. We hav recently investigated the various editions of Gibbon's works, and find the Bohn edition to be the best. It is in seven volumes, and sells for $9.80.

A Valuable Book.—"Golden Throne" is the title of a radical romance of life in the far West, written by Samuel P. Putnam, of New York. We hav read it carefully and with much pleasure. The plot is one of great originality and interest, and the culmination is excellent. Aside from its beauty as a story in which love, constancy, perfidy, deceit, cruelty, humanity, and Christianity are faithfully depicted and portrayed, it contains more valuable lessons in morality, science, and progressiv ideas, and more genuin poetry than any other book of fiction we hav ever read. We know of no other writer whose works show their author to hav the well-being of his fellow-man more at heart than Mr. Putnam. "Golden Throne" must be read in order that anything like an idea of its value can be formed; and no one can read it without being the better for having done so. It is a book of 156 pages, nicely printed on heavy paper and substantially bound in cloth. It is sold at the low price of $1.00, and is worth many times its cost.—Daviess County Democrat.

The Liberal Club.

Reported for The Truth Seeker by a Young Man whose Veracity we hav hitherto had no Occasion to Doubt.

Mr. Wakeman lectured before the Manhattan Liberal Club on Friday night of last week. His subject was "Positivism the Higher Integration." The remarks were called out by a lecture delivered before the club three weeks previously by Mr. Shook, a member of the club who describes himself as a Christian. Mr. Wakeman showed how the religious progress of mankind had been made by its gods getting gradually farther and farther away from the worshiper. Deities were at first embodied in the various phenomena of nature on earth, such as trees, rivers, and waterfalls. This was fetichism. Astrolatry or star-worship was the next step. Polytheism followed astrolatry, monotheism followed polytheism; and each step, the speaker said, was a "higher integration." The next and last integration which the world would be called upon to make was that of Positivism—the devotion of life and purpose to mankind—Humanity, this being the higher integration.

In the course of his lecture Mr. Wakeman alluded somewhat humorously to Mr. Shook, and at the close the latter gentleman was called for. It is the custom at the Liberal Club for members to follow the lecturer of the evening with ten-minute speeches, and Mr. Shook was expected to improve the opportunity thus afforded to defend himself. No one was disappointed in this regard. Mr. Shook was present in full force, and arose promptly. He is a rather small man, but is willing to be considered a large one, which speaks well for him. As he faced the platform the audience perceived a bald spot on his crown, which, shining brightly in the gaslight, gave his head the appearance of being illuminated. Gracefully placing his left hand beneath his coat-tails and extending his right, he said, "Mr. Chairman." The chairman acknowledged the salutation. Mr. Shook reversed his attitude and continued, "If I am to be limited to the usual ten minutes I decline to speak." The audience sighed, and Mr. Shook was accorded twenty minutes to express his views. He conducted himself to the platform, threw out his arms to shorten his sleeves, rested the forefinger of one hand in the palm of the other, and, facing the audience, bowed affably. But he had considerable difficulty in getting under way. He said: "Ladies and gentlemen: If any of you to-night hav come here [long pause] to-night with the expectation of hearing Mr. Wakeman answer to-night the lecture I delivered here three weeks ago to-night, you were doomed to be disappointed to-night. Mr. Wakeman has not to-night answered the lecture which I delivered here three weeks ago to-night, and any one to-night who thinks he has answered that lecture to-night has made a mistake about my lecture being answered to-night." These preliminary remarks and a few others having been got along with, the chairman announced that the speaker had five minutes left. Mr. Shook denied that he had spoken more than fourteen minutes and a half. The chairman did not contest the point. A gentleman in the audience went to the news-stand at the door, purchased a Truth Seeker, and began to read an article by Zenas Kent on "The Animal versus the Moral World;" a young lady dropped asleep and her umbrella fell to the floor with a loud rattle; and the chairman held his watch to his ear to assure himself that that timepiece had not stopped. The audience looked tired. Mr. Shook went on and on, making stern-way rapidly most of the time. At the end of twenty minutes he said he believed in progress, but wished to repeat that Mr. Wakeman had not answered his lecture. Being assured of that fact, several people strolled out of the hall. Mr. Shook now addressed himself to the pitcher on the stand, and assumed toward it an attitude of offense. The pitcher did not move. Fears were entertained by those in the back part of the hall that Mr. Shook was about to assault the utensil before him. "I tell you," he went on, "when I see one glittering philosophy after another arise and flame for a day like a meteor athwart the sky, and then go down in darkness, while the Christian religion remains unchanged forever, I say with the poet:

There is a Power in earth and Skies
That holds the Things together,
To superintend and supervise
And regulate the Weather.
(Salvation! O Salvation!)

We see it in the Brooklet Gay,
That Warbles out its song,
And when the Water stops to Play
He pushes it Along.
(Salvation! O Salvation!)

It shrieketh in the Wind that Blows,
And Simmereth in the Fire;
It thawed the Alleghany Snows,
And flooded all Ohier.
(Salvation! O Salvation!)

It sends with us wherever we go,
In sunshine or in shiver,
A Joy for every earthly Woe,
A Pad for every Liver.
(Salvation! O Salvation!)

This poem was delivered with great effect. The pitcher yawned and held its nose up. The chairman called the speaker to order. The gentleman who was reading The Truth Seeker put it away carefully in his pocket. The young lady awoke in considerable confusion, and picked up her umbrella. Mr. Shook resumed his seat. Other speakers followed. Mr. King said there were still Trinitarians. Some of them were alive. Mr. Blissert said the Bible was a sort of "police gazette" of its day. Mr. Vaughan attempted to lessen the effect of Mr. Shook's poem by repeating one of his own, but without success. Mr. Roosevelt said the church advised people not to lay up treasure where moth and rust doth corrupt—put it in the contribution box. Mr. Wakeman answered everything in Mr. Shook's speech, except the poem, and the meeting adjourned. The Liberal Club meets every Friday night

Notes from the Field.—Etna Green and Creston.

Friday evening, Feb. 9th, I closed my engagements at Coloma and at midnight took the train for Etna Green, Ind., a town on the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne, and Chicago R. R., fifty miles west of Ft. Wayne. At day-break we reached Hanna at the junction of the P. F. W. and C. R. R. A fellow-traveler conducted me to the village hotel. A glance revealed that its proprietor was not a follower of Jesus; for on the wall hung the portrait of Col Ingersoll, while on the table lay a copy of the The Truth Seeker. While here I met another stanch Liberal in the person of Prof. Cline, principal of the public schools.

Noon found me at Etna Green, where on the following day I commenced a course of lectures to a full house. An "Opera House" with seats for six hundred had been improvised for the occasion, a mammoth store-room being used for the purpose. The seating capacity was exhausted at the first lecture. On Sunday evening many were compelled to stand. My discourse at this meeting was of a very radical nature, and some of the more timorous Liberals feared that it would hav a tendency to diminish the size of our audience on the next evening. But I knew better. Observation and experience had long since taught me that in this age a speaker cannot be too radical to draw full houses, and that the exponent of milk-and-water Liberalism must almost invariably address empty benches. I knew that even my Christians auditors liked these radical utterances, and that instead of remaining away, they would return again and bring their friends along. And so it proved; at our last meeting every inch of standing-room was taken up, and had the people been flies, walls and ceiling would hav been occupied. The attendance at this meeting exceeded in numbers the entire population of the town, for the farmers had heard of it and came for miles around.

There is a large Liberal element in and surrounding Etna Green. Henry Rockhill and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Brosins, are activ Liberals who reside in the country. My young friend, Thomas A. Smailes, is the leading Liberal as well as the most successful merchant of the town. His success as a buisness man emphasizes a fact that I wish could be impressed upon the mind of every Liberal in the land; and that is, that a frank and fearless avowal of a man's opinions does not tend to work a permanent injury to his business or professional interests. A hundred times has some timid Liberal said to me, "If my views were generally known, it would ruin me." This has led me, wherever I hav met a fearless, outspoken Liberal, to ask him whether his espousal of Liberalism has injured him financially or not. I cannot recall a single instance where one has told me he believed it did. There may be cases where worthy men are suffering financial loss for opinion's sake, but they are rare. As a rule, I am convinced that the road to success is broad enough for policy and honesty to walk hand in hand. The most bigoted sectarian respects candor and courage and detests hypocrisy.

From Etna Green I went to Creston, Ill., stopping a day at Chicago. At Creston I gave a course of lectures which were well attended. Both here and at Etna Green "opposition meetings" were held. But they were conspicuous failures. At the latter place on Sunday evening their attendants are said to hav numbered eleven, while we had more than half as many hundred. At Creston on the the second evening they could rally but six. This so discouraged them that they decided to giv it up and let the "devil" hav a clear field for the rest of his work.

H. Dunning, David Roberts, wife and mother, Wm. Mettler, Mr. Gibson, and Dr. Woodward are a few of the Creston Liberals. That able writer and friend of The Truth Seeker, Otto Wettstein, of Rochelle, attended my lectures. Mr. Wettstein owns one of the largest and finest jewelry establishments to be found outside of Chicago. His trade is not confined to Rochelle; he numbers among his customers Liberal friends from nearly every part of the Union.

Among those who signed the call inviting me to come to Creston was Willis Roberts, one of the most respected citizens and intelligent Liberals of northern Illinois. When I reached Creston he was dead, having died a few days before at the ripe age seventy-two. He was conscious to the last, and requested his friends to bear witness that he died as he had lived, a disbeliever in gods, ghosts, and immortality. No Christian ever died more tranquilly. Said the old man, "I feel as if I were upon a bed of roses." And he was, for a thousand noble deeds had blossomed into fragrant flowers to deck his couch and fill his parting hours with gladness.

Address

TO THE GENERAL CONVENTION OF THE LAND LEAGUE HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, APRIL 25TH.

The National Land Reform Association sends greeting:

We deem it a matter of congratulation that the subject of the tenure of the land, involving the right of each human being to a place upon this earth, has now become the great rallying question for all who wish well to their country and to mankind. Tyrannical governments are enabled to maintain their sway and work their barbarous purposes only as they depend on and become subservient to the landlord, the land speculator, or gigantic corporations built from the operation of the British system of land-holding, which sanctions unlimited extent to private domination. This system, whether under the form of hereditary ownership or that of mere commercial ownership and monopoly, has all the potentiality of absolute dominion over the lives and labor of those who, by it, are deprived of access to the soil, and the opportunities and resources to which they are rightfully entitled by the very virtue of their existence. It has long been the conviction of the members of our association that the land system of this country is not essentially different from that of Great Britain and Ireland. What was once our national domain, our fertil valleys and extensiv prairies, our coal fields and mineral ranges, are now mainly in the hands of private owners, soulless corporations, or unscrupulous monopolists, among whom are conspicuous many of the nobility of Europe, who think they see the opportunity of prolonging their rule here, under the protection of republican government, which their expiring monarchies cannot much longer afford them. Already the condition of the wealth producers in this country is approaching that of the tax and rent despoiled labor of Europe.

In the struggle, which cannot long be postponed, even in our republic, all persons must ultimately take sides, either for the reign of monopoly or the right of the whole people. This is more than a national question; it concerns all civilized people.

Our aim cannot be less than the establishment of the right of every citizen to a foothold upon the land. The measures and means may be the subject of some difference of opinion. So far as instrumentalities are concerned, we advocate the peaceful spread of the light, with complete reliance upon the force of ideas, and the patient and persistent teaching of the people in questions of natural right to land, while pointing out the disastrous and ruinous results attending unlimited private ownership.

But in saying this we do not intend any criticism of those who seek through political struggle or stormful revolution to change so glaring a wrong, especially those who are denied liberty of speech and of the press, and to whom despotic coercion leaves no alternativ but slavery or resistance. The violence and bloodshed under such rule will ultimately hav to be accounted for by those who wrest the power of government from its true sphere, the protection of human rights, to flagrantly aid in the undisguised destruction of those rights and the impoverishment and enslavement of the people.

History will hold such governments and the systems to serve which they are thus perverted responsible for all disorders and sufferings, rather than any persons who may be driven to desperation by unnatural rule.

As to measures, we conceive the true remedy to be the limitation of private property in land, so that no one shall be under obligation to another to pay tribute for its use to the extent of his need. Any system which does not embrace the principle of limitation must prove wholly inadequate to protect this natural right. Those who hav adopted the idea of nationalization of the land from the English land reformers do not seem to see how unpalatable a system of rental by government would be to the small farmers of this country, who own the acres which they till, and who are not, like the English and Irish farmers, accustomed to renting, but look upon it as little better than slavery.

To place the land now in the hands of landlords in the hands of the government, to be allotted in limited holdings, would be a beneficial change, but without such limitation, monopoly would soon be re-established by the control of leases, as now of title deeds. An idea suggested by Mr. Henry George we think far preferable, "the townshipization of the land" and its administration by the local government or in open town meeting.

We are of the opinion, however, that individualization of the land should be sought; and this can be secured whenever the people will undo the oppressiv legislation of the feudal ages, and refuse the protection of law to the ownership of any land by a person other than the one who must work upon or occupy it. This principle of limitation is not new or untried. It constitutes the basis of all that is valuable in every constitutional government. As applied to the ownership of the land, it was tried in Greece and Rome. Its subversion in the latter worked the subversion of the republic. Numerous modern states also attest its salutary effect. Even its partial application in the settlement of our public lands has proved of great value.

The individualization of the land would not, as some suppose, interfere with any intelligent and equitable system of co-operation, but facilitate it, and would not retard, but forward, any true social movement not based on forceful coercion. Land limitation appears to us the only effectiv measure to secure the right of land to all. It is the logic of the "No Rent Manifesto," the most consistent and effectiv weapon ever hurled against landlord rule.

Hoping that your convention may hav a prosperous issue, and secure the harmony of a well-conceived purpose, we tender you our best wishes, and the assurance of our cordial sympathy.

Paul at Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe.

More gentiles than Jews appear to hav accepted salvation at Antioch in Pisidia.

"And the word of the Lord was talked of in all that region. But the Jews stirred up the chiefs of the city and the opulent women who with them feared God, and set up a persecution against Paul and against Barnabas, and expelled them from their borders" (xiii, 49, 50).

Persecutors are almost always pious people. In this case not only the pious and wealthy women, but the city chiefs, "who with them feared God," were parties to the persecution.

Query: Were these God-fearing magistrates pagans? If so, how could the writer of Acts call them pious? But if they were Hebrews, would they hav been likely to hold office under Claudius (A.D. 41–54), who had to expel the riotous Jews from Rome? They were in far better favor under the first emperor, Augustus, in the early part of whose reign, if not a little prior, we apprehend this first missionary journey was made.

The stay of Paul and Barnabas at Antioch was very short. Shaking the dust off their feet as a testimony against their persecutors, they journeyed a hundred miles eastward to Iconium.

"And they came and entered into the synagog of the Jews, and so spoke with them that many of the Jews and of the Greeks believed" (xiv, 1).

We hav already expressed great doubt of the fact that many Greeks were converted by Paul anywhere. We think the Syriac text has been tampered with in this instance, as we know it has been in many others. The Syriac word for Greek is Ionath.

"But the Jews of the class of unbelievers [in the new doctrin?] excited the gentiles to maltreat the brethren. And they continued there a long time, and spoke openly concerning the Lord; and he gave testimony to the word of his grace by the signs and prodigies which he wrought by their hands. And the whole multitude of the city was divided; and a part were with the Jews, and a part adhered to the legates" (2–4).

Here observe that Paul and Barnabas are called legates, or apostles. How did they acquire that title? Was it conferred on Paul when he first went to Jerusalem and was introduced to the legates by Barnabas (ix, 27)? How, indeed, can we believe that Paul saw the legates at that time, when he himself says that he went to see Kepha and remained with him fifteen days, but saw no others of the legates except James, the Lord's brother (Gal. i, 18, 19), who never was a legate, according to the gospels?

Being threatened with stoning, Paul and Barnabas fled to Lystra and Derbe, about thirty and sixty miles southeast. At Lystra they met a cripple who had never walked. Seeing that he had faith, Paul said to him with a loud voice:

"In the name of our Lord Jesus Messiah, I say to thee, Rise upon thy feet."

The Greek version omits "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christos;" but not so in the case of the cripple that Simon Kepha healed (Acts iii, 6). The two miracles are strikingly alike, and Paul's words are a literal repetition of Simon's.

The cure of the cripple at Lystra caused such a commotion that the people said:

"The gods hav assumed the likeness of men. And they named Barnabas the Lord of the Gods [Greek Dia, 'Jupiter'] and Paul Hermes ['Mercury'], because he commenced the speaking. And the priest of the Lord of the Gods, who was without the city, brought oxen and garlands to the gate of the court where they lodged, and was disposed to offer sacrifices to them. But Barnabas and Paul, when they heard it, rent their garments, and sprang and went among the throng, and called out and said: Men, what do ye? We also are frail mortals like yourselvs" (11–15).

With difficulty the missionaries prevented the sacrifice. But their popularity did not last long. Jews came from Antioch and Iconium who succeeded in getting up another persecution, in which Paul was stoned and dragged out of the city. He was supposed to be dead, but the next day he was able to flee with Barnabas to Derbe. Here it is said they made many disciples, but they soon returned to Lystra, to Iconium, and to Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples and entreating them to persevere, as it was necessary through much affliction to enter the kingdom of God.

In the second epistle to Timothy we read:

"And thou knowest what I endured at Antioch, and at Iconium, and at Lystra; what persecution I endured" (iii, 11).

But if, as the rational and some of the orthodox critics believe, Paul did not write the epistles to Timothy, this passage goes for nothing.

In the "Acts of Paul and Thecla" an account is given of the conversion of the young maiden at Iconium, and her subsequent life (Apocryphal Acts and Gospels; Antenicene Library, vol. xvi). This story, though of great antiquity, is doubtless a forgery. Tertullian, about A.D. 200, says it was composed by an Asiatic presbyter who, after being convicted of the forgery, "confessed that he had done it from love of Paul, and was removed from his office" (On Baptism, xvi).

For a synopsis of this absurd story of Thecla, see our "Revelations," p. 274. But how much more credible are most of the stories in Acts?

PAUL RETURNS TO SYRIA.

Retracing their steps, the missionaries stopped again at Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming converts and establishing elders in each church. But the synagogs having rejected the new doctrin and excluded those who accepted it, the congregation of believers in each city was probably quite small. Reaching the coast, they stopped and preached at Perga, the chief city of Pamphylia, where perhaps they had to wait until a vessel sailed to Syria.

Arriving at Antioch in Syria, they called the church together and "narrated all that God had wrought with them, and that he had opened a door of faith to the gentiles."

But the writer of Acts has already told us that that open door was revealed to Simon several years before, and that the revelation was accepted by the apostles at Jerusalem. Was the church at Antioch unaware of those facts? It would seem so from what follows, unless we hav to discredit the story of Cornelius's conversion and its apostolic sanction at Jerusalem. For now, after an interval of ten years, according to the marginal chronology of Acts, we read:

"And certain men came down from Judea and taught the brethren that unless ye be circumcised in accordance with the rite of the law, ye cannot be saved. And Paul and Barnabas had much trouble and disputation with them. And it resulted that Paul and Barnabas, and others with them, went up to the legates and elders at Jerusalem, because of this matter. And the church [of Antioch] waited on them and sent them away; and they traveled through all Phenicia and the territory of the Samaritans, narrating the conversion of the gentiles, and causing great joy to all the brethren" (xv,1-3).

Cesarea where Cornelius lived, Joppa where Simon in a trance had had a heavenly vision, and Lydda where he had healed a paralytic and converted all the town—all three cities lay on the direct route to Jerusalem through Phenicia and Samaria. The question of gentile salvation had been settled ten years ago by the apostolic church at Jerusalem. But now Paul and Barnabas, having just settled it at Antioch, are on their way to Jerusalem to convince the original apostles that God meant to save the gentiles!

The story of the conversion of Cornelius, if in any degree true, must hav been a later occurrence than the return of Paul and Barnabas from their first missionary journey. But it is probably an invention—an imitation of a similar story in Matthew and Luke; for there is a striking resemblance between the centurian of Capernaum and the centurian of Cesarea. And if Jesus ever commanded his eleven disciples to "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," what need had Simon or the rest of the apostles of any further revelation? It is much safer to trust Paul's own repeated statements that he was the first apostle to the gentiles, and that he received his authority not from men, but from Jesus the Messiah.

Furthermore there are historical data which contradict the order of events in Acts, according to our standpoint. Cesarea was founded by Herod the Great about 22 B.C., and was not finished until 10 B.C. (Jos. Ant. xv, 9, § 6; xvi, 5, § 2). Therefore, whatever happened at Cesarea must hav been many years after Paul's return from his first missionary journey. But it is not at all probable that either Paul or Simon Kepha lived till the completion of that city.

ANTICHRIST.

What Is Science?

I find that, after all, the question, What is science? is the fundamental question of the day. I had supposed that this matter had been duly settled and that there would be no dispute hereafter among clear-headed men as to what constitutes science. But we liv to learn, and a spirited discussion in the last Colloquium concerning the definition of science convinces me that even the sharpest of minds disagree on this point. Science does not mean the same thing to Mr. Wakeman and Mr. Andrews; so that scientific certainty, it seems, is impossible—for if we cannot hav a conception of science to which all men assent, then at the very start we split into sects and forever go apart. Now I hope this question can be settled; that at least we can decide what science is, whatever may be our differences as to what it can do.

I hav no doubt the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be interested in the discussion of this question, and I will venture to giv my idea of science; and if I am wrong, then I hope to be set right.

The first definition that we giv to science is "classified knowledge." Mere knowledge is not science, but knowledge formulated, knowledge set in order.

The main question, then, is, What is knowledge?—what do we actually know? Here is the battle-ground; do we know anything before experience? Speaking for myself, I say that we do not. All knowledge comes from experience.

Well, then, what is experience?

To this I answer that it is the human mind in contact with the outer world. There can be no merely subjectiv experience. The origin of all experience is a sensation from something other than the mind itself.

The starting-point, therefore, of human knowledge, is a material sensation.

What does this sensation do? It makes the mind acquainted with objects. That is, we perceive them, and with them their relations.

Sensation and perception, then, are the origin of knowledge.

From this point we reason forward to all the accumulated knowledge of the race. We note agreements and differences; we find the order of phenomena; we arrange phenomena; but the source of knowledge is the sensation and the perception of things outside of the mind. In the objectiv world, not in the subjectiv soul of man, is the beginning, the initial point.

Granting this, there can be no a priori knowledge. The mind, simply as mind, cannot giv knowledge. The world of thought can never furnish one iota of actual matter-of-fact information. Let the mind dwell out of contact with matter, and it knows nothing, and can know nothing. Knowledge, therefore, in all its phases and accumulations, is entirely the result of sensation and perception. Nowhere along the whole line does the human intellect, merely as intellect, supply a particle of truth. Truth is in a well, and that well is the continuous contact of the mind of man with its environments. Reasoning in itself never provides man with truth. Pure reasoning has never given the world a bit of actual knowledge. We may imagin all sorts of reasonable things; but reasonable things are not necessarily true things. True things are those things that are proved to be true by the human mind in actual conjunction with the outer world.

The procedure of science, therefore, is this—first, the facts of the objectiv universe in connection with the mind of man, which takes in, compares, and correlates these facts, and builds up theories concerning these facts, which theories, however, must be constantly verified by an appeal to these facts. No theory is true simply because it explains facts. It must be able to predict concerning facts, to affirm without fear of mistake that in such and such conditions certain things will take place. Not until this prophecy can be made is there such a thing as scientific certainty. Before that all is more or less guess-work.

Now this strict definition of science removes metaphysics entirely out of the domain of science, and a thousand things that people hav been in the habit of calling knowledge, but which is, after all, only opinion, although it may be a very strong opinion, so strong that it may make one opinionativ. But the most vivid belief does not constitute knowledge. Theodore Parker said that he knew that he was immortal, but of course he did not know it. He only thought it. One cannot know that he is immortal until he has actually lived an immortality.

So with every item of knowledge on every possible subject; experience is the basis of all; and experience must be constantly referred to in all logical advances.

I suppose some think that there is in the human mind an original source of knowledge, an insight that at certain points transcends experience and givs what experience is unable to furnish. This is the attitude of the metaphysician. He believes in an intuitiv faculty that somehow knows without any experience of things; or at least he affirms that in and through experience something greater than what experience affords is given. Experience opens a door, when it itself must stop; but the human mind proceeds, and affirms something infinitly transcending experience.

I maintain that there is no such truth-faculty in the soul of man. What actual matter-of-fact experience cannot giv nothing can giv. We are bound with experience, and cannot fly beyond it. It must accompany us in our grandest processes of reasoning. Whatever hight we reach, we must still tread the firm earth. There is no royal road to knowledge—no eagle's flight. "Intuition" must be put upon the shelf along with "revelation." It is no part of science. It can add nothing to knowledge. It may formulate itself into the most magnificent system of thought; it may be "classified" until a most gorgeous temple is reared; but it shines only in the light of imagination. It is only, after all, a splendid opinion. It is not knowledge.

Our knowledge is limited. It must ever be. It is only by submission to these narrow bounds that any truth is gained. No truth has ever been acquired merely by a study of one's consciousness. The "subjectiv" method is entirely wrong, and there can be no such things as "subjectiv" science. It must be objectiv. It must be a study of facts.

Science, therefore, is simply this: it is a classification of the phenomena of the universe as they strike upon the senses of man. Only those phenomena which thus strike the senses can be known; all outside is forever unknown. There can be no knowledge of the so-called "neumena," for this can never be experienced. Pure being cannot be known, for it cannot be observed. There is no possible way of understanding being except by phenomena.

If there is any other definition of science than what I hav given, I should like to know it. I hope that Mr. Andrews's lucid pen will convey some light upon this matter. If there is any other way by which knowledge can come except by sensation and perception, let that way be revealed. Let us define our words and get at some starting-point. If we cannot decide what science is, how is it possible for any reconciliation ever to take place? If there are two sciences and two scientific methods, then we are as much at loggerheads as before. If knowledge can come by any other way than by experience of the material universe, I desire to know that way; but I can see no other way, and science to my mind can by no possibility transcend the results of this experience.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Not Annihilated or Vanquished.

In my last communication in reply to Mr. Sunderland, Mr. Wallis, and Ella E. Gibson, published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 20th, pages 42 and 43, I expressed a willingness to hav that be the last call upon me for replies to criticisms upon that subject; but at the same time I stated that I should not flinch if called upon to defend my position, if the call was worth noticing. And it should hav been the last had not Mr. M. O. Waggoner taken courage from that expression to come out on me in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 27th, page 53, in a scoffing, insulting manner, and intimating that, Jeff. Davis like, I would prefer being left alone, or as if I was vanquished and ready to make an ignominious retreat from the contest, and thus misrepresenting and placing me in a false position before the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Had Mr. Waggoner read my former articles published in THE TRUTH SEEKER on this subject, he would hav had no occasion to ask for any further information as to this God of mine, which he is pleased to call a "compound God," in derision, that can be called by so many names and yet is of neither the Jewish nor Christian persuasion, nor person, nor gender. Mr. Waggoner has caught hold of a term which I used in reply to Ella E. Gibson, who seemed to think that I could not find any term to designate a God without person or gender but the pronoun it, to show her that there were several other terms that could be used, much more expressiv than it, and at the same time devoid of what she considered the objectionable features of person and gender—or at least of gender—although I hav no such scruples myself about applying the masculin gender to God, for which I think I can giv good reasons. If any being in the universe has the right to that appellation, I think the supreme positiv force of the universe, and which I believe to be the only force and source of all power, the one and only one living and true God, is entitled to that apellation, Ella E. Gibson to the contrary notwithstanding. That is my God, if Mr. Waggoner wants to know, to whom all the titles named can be applied, and more if desired, and still remain the same one and only one God. Can Mr. Waggoner's befuddled brain comprehend that statement?

I think it unnecessary and entirely useless to say anything more in reply to Mr. Waggoner; nor would I hav considered his scoffing worth replying to at all, had he not misrepresented and endeavored to place me in a false position before the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, instead of presenting fair arguments in refutation of what I hav written. In fact his criticisms, the same as all the rest of the criticisms that hav been presented, hav had no reference whatever to the main question at issue in this discussion, viz: Materialism; but seem to be designed to raise side issues to divert attention from the main question—a kind of flanking strategy to cover a defeat and straggling retreat from the field of battle.

I hav not been writing these articles for notoriety nor for the sake of controversy, but simply for the truth's sake. Writing articles for publication in the papers is not the business of my life. I am a mechanic, and toil daily for an honest living; but I hav been in the habit of doing my own thinking, and hav arrived at the conclusions I hav from the conviction that they are the truth; and I would inform Mr. Waggoner and all other critics who hav already presented themselvs, or such as may hereafter make their appearance, that I had no idea when I commenced this discussion of leaving the field vanquished, unless by fair argument. I do not intend that tirades, sarcasm, mockery, or any other sham that my opponents may resort to shall drive me from my position. When I leave, it shall be as a victor or a dead man.

Mr. Ridenger, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 10th, page 157, under the heading of "Wrongs Righted," seems to be in just about the same muddled state of mind that Mr. Waggoner is. He says, referring to the same article that Mr. Waggoner refers to, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 20th, pages 42 and 43, that in reading it he was interested; and then goes on repeating what I had written, and commenting as he proceeds. He takes my statement, that we see evil in the world that cannot be denied, and that I think it can and will work out good, and says: "Mark! here is the old pernicious doctrin: let us do evil that good may come;" which is a false inference, unwarranted from any expression I had made, and directly contrary to the general sentiment of the whole article he refers to. And then he goes on again and says, in reference to my statement, that by the contrast between good and evil we can the better appreciate the good, as we never could without the evil. "According to Mr. Hale's logic, evil here is a good thing; and in the hereafter we may be able to overcome the evil with the good, and then it will be all right; and we shall then see that God designed everything for our greatest good, as a kind and loving father could hav done, and that every vicissitude that we hav had to pass through here was intended to add to our happiness there beyond all that we can conceive of here. 'This can be so for all that I can see, and God be just and true; and to my mind it must be so, or God cannot be a just God, for I can see that justice is not meted out here, that the wronged, the injured, the outraged, pass off the stage of life, and their wrongs are not and cannot be righted here—it is impossible; and if they cannot be and are not righted hereafter, then God cannot be a just God, and I wish to believe that the Eternal is just and true.'" Then Mr. Ridenger asks, "And this is one of your reasons for a belief in a future state of existence, is it, Mr. Hale?" and says, "Now I wish to state right here that the above is as good a reason as I could wish for to make me disbelieve in a future state of existence," etc.

Very well. If Mr. Ridenger chooses to make that a good reason for disbelieving in a future state of existence, he can do so. I hav not the least objection to his believing black to be white, or white black—which would be just as reasonable as to take that statement of mine as a reason for a disbelief in a future existence. Then Mr. Ridenger goes on and says, "I think, Brother Hale, you are deeply dyed in the old orthodox Calvinistic doctrin, and if I should giv you a few punches in a sore place, don't get angry at me, for I do it in friendship, as every true Liberal should when he finds a brother leaves his eggs before his brood is hatched out."

Mr. Ridenger thinks I am deeply dyed in the old Calvinistic doctrin, when every word I hav ever written on this subject has been directly the opposit of that doctrin—another shift of drawing false inferences, making false imputations, and "throwing mud," to get out of a difficulty, and truly characteristic of the old Calvinistic bigots and burners at the stake. I think Mr. Ridenger's symptoms of old Calvinistic self-conceit and dogmatism are stronger by far than anything he can gather from anything I hav written. I do not consider such practice any evidence of friendship, true Liberalism, or anything else that is decent.

He says according to my logic evil is a good thing in this life. I answer, Yes, in the sense in which I understand it, and in which I hav presented it. I hav thought sometimes that it was the best part of our inheritance in this life. For an illustration, we will take the life of Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, Andrew Jackson, or almost any one or all of the greatest men that hav ever lived in the world, and we shall see that from the lowest condition in life, surrounded by the most adverse circumstances, poverty, and all its attendant disadvantages and hindrances to their advancement, they advanced step by step, through the exercise of an indomitable will, that brought into exercise every power of mind and body in the struggle for the mastery over themselvs and the obstacles in the way of their progress, until at last they conquered and found themselvs established in the high and honored positions they hav occupied on the stage of life among their fellow-men. These very obstacles were necessary to bring into exercise and develop the innate capacities they possessed; and which without those circumstances to bring into requisition the use of those faculties would hav remained dormant and inactiv, and the individuals would hav passed off the stage of life and left no record or evidence of the contests and victorious achievements and final triumphs of the earnest and determined aspirants for those exalted and honored stations.

JAMES HALE.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

The Coming Man.

According to the present outlook, Mr. Frank James is liable to become a "shining light" in the Salvation Army or an annihilator of "Ingersoll and his dangerous doctrin," as he expressed himself to an interviewer some time ago. I hav seen notices of his conversion in different papers, one of which I clip from a December issue of the Semi-Weekly Drover's Journal, printed in Chicago, which I would ask you to republish if you see proper:

A NOTED CONVERT.

"It is announced that the Hon. Frank James, of Missouri, brother and former partner of the late Col. Jesse James, with whom he was for years engaged in the working of a modern device for stopping railroad trains, has 'espoused Christianity.' It may here be stated that though Mr. James is just now sojourning at Independence, he is not in the enjoyment of that degree of personal independence usually accorded to American citizens in this 'land of the free and home of the brave.' He is restrained of his liberty by the authorities, on the supposition that he may hav been implicated in a certain bank robbery and a certain murder which took place several years ago. Hence he deems this a good time to 'embrace Christianity.' While the sheriff's manacles embrace him, Mr. James is willing to embrace almost anything that offers a prospect of exciting a little more sympathy in his behalf.

"It is pretty thin, but if orthodox Christianity is true Mr. James is not to blame for availing himself by its saving terms. And should he happen to lose his valuable life by falling through an insecure platform, why may not he, as well as others who hav died in the same manner, go direct to glory and receive a golden 'whorp?'"

What a grand scheme this Christian plan of salvation is! With one simple act, one simple declaration, the vilest sinner may return and his sins be washed as white as wool. By this simple act Frank James is supposed to hav surpassed Ingersoll and Huxley, Paine and Darwin, and many other such men's worthiness, goodness, and usefulness. That is a better plan than evolution. It would take several generations under the best circumstances to attain that standard through his blood and hereditament. What a grand leader he would make in the Salvation Army or at the head of a Christian crusade!

Josh Billings says, "A bad reputation may be healed by an upright life, but you can't keep people from looking at the place where the old crack was." Now it is hoped, if the judge under whom Frank James may be tried believes in this miraculous healing which he claims to hav undergone, that he will not forget to keep his eye on the place where the old crack was.

Human Sacrifices of the Bible.

It is very plain to an unprejudiced reader of the Old Testament that the Jews while living under their theocracy were accustomed to make sacrifices of human victims. The law of such sacrifices is plainly expressed in the last chapter of Leviticus, verse 29: "None devoted which shall be devoted of men shall be redeemed, but shall surely be put to death."

That chapter of Leviticus preceding this last was evidently written by the very hand which penned a large part of Isaiah and Jeremiah. It is too ridiculous to ascribe to Moses in the desert the penning of this talk about "destroying your high places," "leaving the land to enjoy its Sabbaths," "and yet for all that will I not cast them away," etc. That chapter was of a later time, although cannibalism is suggested in verse 29 of the most horrible character. Imagin a God of love declaring to his chosen people that, as a punishment, "Ye shall eat the flesh of your sons and daughters." Chapter xxxi of Numbers shows very conclusivly what was done to the devoted persons. All the Midianites were devoted to death, yet Moses was wroth because the people had saved the women and children alive—"Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman." The virgins "keep alive for yourselvs."

"And the persons were sixteen thousand, of which the Lord's tribute was thirty and two persons." What was done with these? Let us see (Numbers xxxi, 25). "And the Lord spake (26): Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast (27), and divide the prey into two parts (28), and levy a tribute unto the Lord, both of persons and of beeves, and of the asses and of sheep (29). Take it of their half and giv it unto Eleazar, the priest, for a heave offering of the Lord."

What is the heave offering? This is clearly explained in Lev. xviii, 11, and from verse 26 to the end: "When ye hav heaved the best part from it;" "Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering of the Lord of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof out of it." Of a thing sacrificed the shoulder was offered as a heave offering; the breast for a wave offering because it was waved; the shoulder because it was heaved (or lifted) up. Of a large number devoted for a sweet savor of incense before the Lord the very best were taken out or selected for the heave offering.

That human sacrifices were familiar to this people we know from the story of Abraham and Isaac, also the case of Jephthah's daughter. Doubtless this Jephthah-daughter story originated among them when they were living somewhere between Egypt and Syria with those who came out with Danaus or Cecrops—those who later became known as Lacedemonians—for they claimed kinsphip and left Egypt about the same time. The Greeks hav the story about Jephthah-genia being sacrificed—genia meaning daughter.

In 2 Samuel, xxi, we hav a remarkable case of the sacrifice by David of seven men to stay a famin among the Gibeonites. They were hung up before the Lord, doubtless a wave offering. And the Lord heard the prayer or responded to the sacrifice by ending the famin. Just how he ended it we are not told—whether by manna gifts, quail falls, or miraculous multiplication, as in the days of the seven loaves and two fishes. However, there is no more doubt of the fact of human sacrifices having been ordained than there is that perpetual slavery and polygamy were under this sole instance on earth of direct government by Jehovah.

At this very time the Chinese were enjoying, under the devil's government, a condition of enlightenment, evinced by their great public works and their development of the science of political economy into a practical recognition of its most abstruse doctrins concerning land tenures, legal tender, and free trade. Eating the Crow Boiled by Joe Cook.

The recent death of Dr. George M. Beard will be remembered by all. He was one of New York's most eminent scientific men, a thorough and consistent Materialist. His treatment by the church was foreshowed by himself in a remark occasioned by the death of Emerson and made to his friend W.A. Croffut, a leading journalist of this city. Mr. Croffut had called his attention to an orthodox sermon claiming that Emerson had "repented" just before he died and become a "true Christian." "Oh, yes," said Dr. Beard, "it is the fate of leading minds. Whenever a man dies who has discarded Christianity, but has lived a reputable and valuable life and become distinguished, the church feels the logical necessity of making him out a true believer, and there is usually somebody present to testify to his change of heart. None of us," he added, with a laugh, "will be safe from this sort of thing."

After Dr. Beard's death, Cook seized upon the first opportunity to claim him as a Christian, and gave utterance, in one of his interminable and lying talks, to the following:

"When Dr. George M. Beard lay dying in New York city, a devout Moravian said to him: 'Trust in Jesus.' With unimpaired faculties, he answered: 'I DO. I AM.' Immediately after this he rose up in bed and lifted up his hand, his face brightened, and he said, with great emphasis: 'Higher! HIGHER!' and, in a few seconds, passed into that trance from which no man or angel could waken him."

Building upon this unsubstantial foundation, the Independent published a leading editorial alluding to the "Christian death" of this eminent Materialist, and saying: "We are glad that, if faith came late, yet it came to the soul of him who doubted whether he had a soul." Knowing Cook as well as the Independent editor ought to, we are surprised that he should base any remarks on his authority; but knowing Cook as well as we do, we are not surprised that the Independent editor should now be compelled to apologize, which it does in the last number. In that issue it prints a communication from Mr. Croffut, giving this account of Dr. Beard's death:

"None of Dr. Beard's intimate friends who were about him during his last illness believe that he ever uttered the words attributed to him in such a way as to justify the conclusion which you and Mr. Cook hav drawn. Mrs. Beard herself, who died of the same disease within a week, repeatedly said in the interval, 'George died as he had lived—a scientist.' Her brothers, both of whom I hav seen, repudiate the report of Dr. Beard's recantation. The last words Dr. Beard spoke to me are: 'You look upon a dying philosopher.' This, with a forced smile on his face, as he continued, 'I hav not much longer to liv. My sensations are blunted. I am racked with terrible pain. I can scarely breathe. My sight is failing, and I am stone deaf.' This was during the last day of his life. I tried to speak to him. He put an ear-trumpet to his ear, and in the interval of groaning, said: 'You must shout in it, or I shall not hear.' Such a conversation was, of course, brief.

"The appeal to him to 'trust in Jesus,' was made to him, Mr. Cook says, only a few minutes before he died—that is, 'immediately' before. And it must hav been made to him through the ear-trumpet in a high tone of voice. Several persons were about his bed at the time, carefully watching his condition; but nobody heard the words uttered to him or his response except the pious Moravian; so nobody else can testify. Is it fair and reasonable to suppose that he understood such an appeal through such a medium at such a time; that, in his physical torture, he was capable of thinking about it, and that he gave to it an answer intended as a recantation of the settled convictions of a life of the principles laid down in a hundred books and a thousand lectures?

"Mr. Henry Crell, who had the care of the doctor, says to me: 'I was with him almost continuously. During the last two or three hours I did not leave his side. He could not hear anything toward the last. I heard nothing about Jesus; but as he gasped for breath in the pressure on his lungs, he said, "Higher! higher!" I immediately lifted him. He still said "Higher!" And I lifted him to a sitting posture. "That'll do," he said. In that attitude he died. I am a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal church; but I hav no doubt the doctor died a Materialist, as he lived.'

"You say that Dr. Beard had 'almost lost faith in Christianity.' He had entirely lost that belief. 'Science,' he said, 'is the sum of what we do know. Religion is the sum of what we do not know. Concerning the problems whence we came, why we are here, and whither we are bound, I hav never been able to find out anything.'

"During that last hour his mind was wonderfully clear. He managed his affairs. He made preparations for his funeral. As his strength faded, he said, 'I wish I could place on record the experiences of a dying man for the benefit of science.' He appointed as his literary executor an Agnostic like himself, and directed him to finish his books in the spirit they had been begun in. Then he kissed his wife and little daughter, closed his eyes and directed the tying of a handkerchief tightly over them, and so he calmly died.

"If the late William E. Dodge had exclaimed in his dying agonies, 'It is all doubtful,' and some Atheistic hearer had denounced next morning that Mr. Dodge had repudiated Christianity, would it not hav been considered an outrage?

"If, at General Grant's death-bed, somebody should say to him, through all the obstacles of impaired hearing, 'Secession was right,' and he should respond incoherently, 'It is; I am,' and the assertion should thereupon be made that General Grant had stultified his whole life and become a Secessionist, the report would be scouted as preposterous.

"But when the same thing happens at the death-bed of a philosopher who has discarded the Christian scheme, the report seems to be felt to be reasonable, probably just, and matter for general congratulation. Five words in reply to an ear-trumpet salutation are thought to be more than enough to reverse all the teachings and show the futility of all the researches of a thoughtful life.

"To me and many others it seems cruelly unjust."

Editorially the Independent eats the crow prepared for it by Joseph Cook in this wise:

"It is not with pleasure, but from a sense of duty, that we publish on another page an article which seems completely to discredit the story told to Joseph Cook by a Moravian woman who acted as nurse about the death-bed conversion of Dr. George M. Beard. Having given currency in the Independent to the report, we can do no less than to publish its contradiction. It pleases us to hear that those who hav lived in unbelief hav accepted the Christian faith, and we are glad to publish their conversion, as an encouragement to others; but it is better that the church should let a hundred souls go down to their own destruction than that it should attempt to convert them by falsehood or force. We would rather hav an asserted conversion discredited than to hav the church's truthfulness discredited.

"From the fuller report now given us by Mr. Croffut we learn that, however honestly the nurse may hav reported the story about Dr. Beard's conversion, it is intrinsically improbable, and that no one else of those about him believes it. When she 'said to him, "Trust in Jesus," and, with unimpaired faculties, he answered: "I do. I am."' he was so deaf that he could hear only when shouted to through an ear-trumpet, and was in intense pain. Others who were with him heard nothing of the sort. He did say 'Higher, higher,' when gasping from the pressure on his lungs, and his attendant lifted him, as desired, to a sitting posture. His wife, his brothers, his attendants, all of them say that he died, 'a scientist,' 'a philosopher,' but not a Christian believer. Such seem to be the facts.

"Dr. Beard's case, then, cannot be cited as one in which the Andes hight of death gave a sudden vision of the glory of God such as gladly flooded the soul with light and salvation. There may be such cases—there perhaps are—but nothing is gained by making them seem frequent. The man who livs a Christian as a rule dies a Christian; the man who livs an unbeliever dies an unbeliever. It is best that this should be understood to be the rule. Fresh light in the article of death is not to be expected in the economy of God; and Mr. Cook no more teaches it than we do. He teaches that probation continues up to the very last connection of the soul with the body, and he makes more of the light that may come then than we do; but he holds as strongly as any one need to that it is the hight of folly to expect or wait for a supreme illumination of the conscience in that dread hour. If the collapse of this story of death-bed conversion shall do anything to prevent the abuse of the great truth, that so long as moral power exists there is the theoretical possibility of conversion and salvation, whether in health, or sickness, or death; whether on earth, or in purgatory, or in hell, we shall be glad.

This is about the most unpalatable morsel a Christian paper has been compelled to swallow since Col. Ingersoll forced the Observer to eat its own words and publish that it never said that Thomas Paine recanted. Of course it is not pleasant for the Independent to take this dose, but we imagin that its acute "sense of duty" arises from the fact that had the editor not made this retraction Mr. Croffut would hav published his reply in the great dailies, and the Independent would then be placed in the list of liars alongside Joseph Cook.

Nevertheless the Independent is sound in its orthodoxy, and with great Christian equanimity consigns Dr. Beard to the lower regions. No reason is given, and none needed, for this consignment, except that Dr. Beard was not a Christian. He lived blamelessly, was moral, honest, and kind, contributing to the advancement of scientific knowledge, leaving the world the wiser for his having lived, his last wish that he might contribute his experiences to those who must follow him to the tomb; and dying grandly like a philosopher—yet this man is to be tormented by a vengeful God in flames forever! Does the Independent really mean to teach this, that this man, whose whole life had been devoted to increasing knowledge, whose last thought was of others, with lips warm from affection's kisses, went directly to hell? Yet this is the doctrin of the church, and is true if Christianity be true. All the glory of a million gods, each grander than any conception ever breathed of Jehovah, can make of this nothing but a horrible, brutal superstition. Better a thousand times the Lethe of endless sleep than one moment of infinit torture.

What can it matter what Mr. Cook teaches about "probation?" What does he know of what occurs after death? It makes the blood tingle with scorn and hatred of religions to see these conceited bumpkins sit in holy judgment on their fellow-men and consign immortal souls to heaven or hell, according to belief or disbelief in a Jew who never lived, or, living, died the death of a seditious malefactor, without even the courage to enter the great unknown world he pretended he was master and owner of. The "economy of God" is barbarous waste of all good men and a wretched hoarding of all the bad. There is no justice, no mercy, no humanity in the divine economy. It is brutal revenge or selfish reward. For his lightest breath a man is condemned to hell; the commission of all the crimes in the world will not prejudice his claim to heaven if he believes.

But it is well to hav the testimony of this cornered Christian authority that "as a rule" Christians die Christian, and unbelievers unbelieving. We would rather die with such sins as Dr. Beard had than liv (unless reformation were possible) with such grace of God in the heart as is possessed by Christians of the stripe of Joe Cook and the Independent. But there are exceptions to all rules and this rule of the Independent has an illustrious exception. Christ was a Christian, if he lived, but he died distracted and torn by doubt of the goodness of God. History does not furnish any such prominent case as counter weight, and we will be content to let the Independent rule stand without further exception. It is probably as near the truth as a religious paper ever gets.

A Fight between Two Evils.

The "Freedom of Worship" bill, to which we hav previously called attention, bids fair to giv rise to a heated discussion at Albany before our legal thaumaturgists adjourn. The object of the bill is ostensibly to giv the inmates of the Reformatory a chance to choose their religion, but really is an endeavor on the part of the Catholics to erect their altars in this and other kindred institutions. The Protestants are now in and want to keep the Catholics out, while the latter of course wish to extend their sphere and take the little orphans under the protecting wing of the church.

The Evangelical Alliance has sent to Albany a protest against the passage of this bill. The argument in its favor by the Romish church is that most of the inmates of the Reformatory are Catholics, or children of Catholic parents, and that the present sectarian management is unfair. To this the Evangelical Alliance retorts: "Well, and if this is so, what does it show but that Catholic teaching and the Catholic schools are what produce pauperism and crime? Are you aware that in the state of New York the Roman Catholic parochial school system turns out 'three and a half times as many paupers as the public school system?'" This would come with better grace from the Secularist. For if the fact that the criminals are Catholics proves that Catholicism is no bar to crime, the equally patent fact that after the Catholic criminals are arrested and confined where they cannot escape from the Protestant teacher, they show no signs of reform and are released but to recommence their career of iniquity, is conclusiv evidence that Protestantism is no better as a moral restraint over vicious inclinations.

This being the case, would it not be well to debar all churches from teaching their peculiar tenets and giv the Secular moralists a chance to try their hands upon the youthful miscreants? Let Mr. Adler and his friends set up a school among them and teach virtue for virtue's sake, "without a promis or a threat," and see what will come of it.

On the Gridiron at Last.

After several contradictory statements regarding the trial of Heber Newton for heresy, the committee appointed has finally prepared papers against him and will present them to the bishop of the diocese. If the bishop declines to act, the matter will be laid before the church General Convention in the fall and Mr. Newton will be tried by that body.

The charges against Mr. Newton, as given by one of the committee, are that he has "violated the Episcopal church Constitution, which requires every candidate for the ministry to sign the declaration, 'I do believe the holy scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the word of God.'" This declaration of belief Mr. Newton, having twice signed, now rejects, affirming that the Bible is not the word of God, but only contains it, thereby opening the way for the wholesale rejection of various books of the Bible, and leaving every man to determim for himself how much of the Bible he shall accept, a position which is in direct conflict with the formularies and standards of the church.

"The second charge is, in the language of the canon, 'holding and teaching, publicly and advisedly, doctrin contrary to that held by the Protestant Episcopal church.' There are several specifications under this charge: First, that Mr. Newton has taught a doctrin subversiv of the supremacy of the holy scriptures as a rule of religious faith and moral duty. Second, that he has virtually denied the divinity of Christ and the incarnation by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary. Third, that he has discredited the miracles of the Old and New Testaments. Fourth, that he has erroneously stated the doctrin of the Holy Ghost. Fifth, that he has denied the second advent of Christ.

"The third charge is that Mr. Newton has been guilty of 'acts which involve a breach of his ordination vows.' First, in that, when ordained to the diaconate, he declared his, 'unfeigned belief' in 'all the canonical scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.' Second, in that he promised to instruct the people committed to his charge out of the canonical scriptures, and in that he promised 'always so to minister the doctrin of Christ as this church has received the same.' Third, in that he promised to be ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away from the church all erroneous and strange doctrins contrary to God's word.

"The fourth charge embraces several offenses committed under one or the other of the previous heads. First, representing the religion of the Jews as polytheistic and idolatrous—in fact, as a form of nature worship; second, false representation of the mission and teaching of the Old Testament prophets; third, representing Christianity as the outcome of natural historical evolution, and not as a direct revelation from God—in other words, rejecting its supernatural character, as always held in the church; fourth, rejecting the predictiv character of prophecy, and thus impeaching the authority and denying the testimony of our Lord Jesus Christ."

These doctrins, says the committee presenting the charges, are "destructiv of the foundation upon which the Protestant Episcopal church is built. They assail the citadel of the Christian faith. They reduce Christianity to a transient phase of natural religion. They enthrone the doctrin of evolution above that of Christ himself. The publication of such opinions by a clergyman of the church from pulpit and press, under circumstances of the greatest notoriety, has become a grave scandal throughout the church. To pass by such an offense, without rebuke or protest, would be to betray the faith 'once delivered to the saints,' to encourage in our ministry the most dangerous forms of belief, to put a stumbling-block in the way of thousands of the church's children, and to expose our standards and formularies to the scorn and derision of Christendom. The presenters disclaim all desire to narrow the recognized comprehensivness of the church. They are not acting in the interest of any party. They do not challenge the right of any party in the church, High or Low or Broad. But they insist that Mr. Newton's doctrins, taken as a whole, hav never been recognized as legitimate in the church. They are quite beyond the limits of any of its historical parities. They are destructiv of the basis common to them all."

Mr. Newton can congratulate himself that he livs in the nineteenth century and not one or two earlier. It is not such a great while since the church burnt men for words less destructiv of Christianity than these sermons of his.

The one thorn which rankles the most irritatingly in the bosoms of these churchmen is that Mr. Newton's criticisms are true, and that Christianity is nothing more than a transient phase of the religious feeling which dominates all peoples until education and civilization turn it into higher channels than the worship of myths and the following of superstitiously deified human beings.

It is the Protestant Episcopal church that is on trial more than Heber Newton. By the outcome of the trial will be decided whether that church is satisfied to be a fossil, to remain where the ignorance of its founders left it, or whether it will acknowledge the scientific advance of the day and accept the conclusions of rational scholarship regarding the Bible.

At all events, Mr. Newton cannot be burnt or imprisoned. That power the church has lost. It is only Atheists that are now confined in dungeons, and Mr. Newton is not an Atheist. He has only revised his god a little, not abrogated him altogether.

We congratulate Mr. Newton on his immunity from dungeon and stake.

Guess-work Figures.

MR. MACDONALD: Will you please giv the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER the other side of this very Baptist article, which was sent me a short time ago to prove that Christianity was progressing? MRS. G. W. PARKS.

"A general survey of Christian history shows that in every century there has been a steady forward movement of Christ's kingdom, but in none so wonderful an advance as in ours. Careful estimates indicate that in the first century 500,000 converts were rallied about the standard of the Nazarene. By the close of the third century they were 5,000,000; by the fourth century they had grown to 50,000,000. In 1500 the numbers had doubled, and there were 100,000,000. In 1800 they had doubled again, and there were 200,000,000. In 1880 they had more than doubled again, and there were 480,000,000. More converts hav been made, and more members added to Christian churches, in the last eighty years than in the eighteen centuries that preceded! And yet some people think that Christianity is losing its hold upon the world! Dr. Dorchester also calls attention to the fact that one-half of the earth's 1,400,000,000 are to-day controled by 'Christian government,' thus offering an open door for the gospel as never before.

"But some may say this great increase has been among the densely ignorant, while in civilized lands the church is really losing ground. Not so; more than ninety per cent of this increase has been made in civilized countries. It is a striking fact, too, that the census reports of countries supposed to be full of Infidelity show that the number who declare a disbelief in Christianity is comparativly small. In Canada there are but 5,500 avowed disbelievers out of 3,500,000. In Germany, supposed by some to be the very headquarters of Infidelity, the declared Atheists and Free Religionists were but 7,000 out of 24,500,000. In France, which ninety years ago obliterated religion by law, abolished the Sabbath, and exalted a courtesan to receive the homage due to God, there are now but 82,000 out of 36,000,000 who declare that they hav no religion. A blatant minority in these countries, as in our own, need not make us shrink from calling them Christian countries."

It would be sufficient to show the falsity of the above figures to simply state that it was Joseph Cook who first put them forth. But we hav published enough in THE TRUTH SEEKER in the past few weeks to show that Christianity is not progressing. It has been shown by eminent churchmen that both Protestantism and Catholicism are decaying, and if that be the case, and it is, how can Christianity be progressing?

There are in the United States over fifty millions of people, but only some sixteen millions are church communicants. It is true that a large proportion of the balance is dominated and controled by the church, but they cannot be counted as Christians except nominally. While legislation is unduly and unjustly controled by the church, the general drift of thought is scientific and toward Rationalism. This we hav on the authority of many churchmen who hav been forced to concede what they would hav liked to conceal.

Last week we published an extract from a Christian lady's correspondence which showed, unwillingly to the writer, that the thought of the common people of Germany was all Infidel, and that although the state provided churches it could not induce the people to visit them. Rationalism and Infidelity are to Germany what Catholicism is to Spain.

Canada is certainly ruled by Christians, for they confiscate—steal—by aid of the custom house a good share of the Freethought literature sent across the line. But as for the figures given of the number of Freethinkers in that benighted province, they might as well hav been ten or fifty thousand as five thousand, for there is no means of ascertaining.

And the figures purporting to be statistical information in France are of the same vague round-number character. The only means of knowing is through the papers and their correspondents, and these all make one report—Catholicism is the religion of the ignorant. The rulers, the literary and intellectual classes, are nearly all Freethinkers. Protestantism has no foot-hold to speak of in France.

The figures quoted by the Advance are utterly worthless as a guide, and were cooked up by a pious editor who had seen Cook's estimate, which he got from some Englishman.

Injustice Toward Spiritualists.

Evidently the Christians hav been at work in the Ohio legislature, which has just passed a law taxing all mediums three hundred dollars a year for practicing their healing gifts within the borders of Mrs. Hayes's state. This law will also reach the Spiritualist speakers, says the Banner of Light, "since medial power is manifested in all forms of the trance, whether public or private."

Without at all considering whether inspirational speakers are controled by spirits, or whether healing mediums receive their power through other sources than physical magnetism, there can be but one response on the part of Liberals to this exhibition of church spite, and that is condemnation and defiance. For several years the doctors of Connecticut hav been trying to drive magnetic healers out of the state, but their efforts hav been defeated, mainly through the sturdy persistence of our friend Byron Boardman, of Norwich. It is a great pity that Ohio had not such a worker.

If all professions were required to hav a license, perhaps the medical could stand it. But such a burden would be too onerous to be borne, and would be thrown off by the people. Trades like pawnbroking and liquor selling, in which there are enormous profits, are properly made a source of revenue to the state. But as well tax a lawyer as a doctor, and the law that should tax a Spiritualist speaker should tax the minister and the public lecturer. To discriminate against the Spiritualist healer and speaker is monstrously unjust, and we are much mistaken if the courts of Ohio do not declare the discriminating law unconstitutional.

The law is Christian and churchly in its origin and outcome, and whether regarded as an enormously high tax upon a legitimate calling or an outrageous interference with religious opinions and rights, the people of Ohio should lose no time in demanding of the legislature its unconditional repeal. Politicians nowadays are altogether too pliant tools in the hands of Christian ministers who desire some special legislation to either promote their own interests or injure those of their opponents. Though the politicians generally regard the clergy as a harmless or not altogether useless lot, comforting to the women and good to oversee the children's picnics, yet when these meek and unctuous priests ask for legislativ favors they grant them, expecting the votes of the clergy's parishioners in return. This log-rolling can only be stopped by the people who are injured turning upon the ostensible oppressors and voting them out of office. A few experiences of this sort would teach the law-makers a much needed lesson, and render them a good deal less pliant when ministers are urging legislation affecting an unpopular or heretical class. A politician's vulnerable point, the power he feels, is the polls. Remembering this, let the Ohio Spiritualists and their friends work to repeal as unjust a law as is likely to be enacted for many years to come.

Lectures and Meetings.

E. H. HEYWOOD will hold Labor Reform meetings at Clarendon Hall, New York, on Sunday and Monday, May 6th and 7th (not Monday and Tuesday as previously announced), three sessions daily.

W. F. JAMIESON may be addressed by Liberals of northern Wisconsin at Merillan, Wis., where he is engaged to deliver a course of lectures. Those who desire that he should visit their towns are invited to address him promptly.

MRS. LAKE, who has been lecturing at Alliance and Salem, Ohio, during April, begins a month's engagement with the Pittsburgh Liberal League May 6th. Parties wishing her services for June will address her at Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE program of the Liberal Club for this month is varied and interesting. Last night, the 4th, Albert Brisbane, the well-known Fourierite, lectured upon the "Scientific Speculations of the Day," and pointed out where he considered them superficial; on the 11th "The Function of Civil Law in Human Society" will be stated by Dr. Dio Lewis, whose fame as a medical reformer and writer is world-wide; on the 18th we shall be given some "Glimpses of the Microscopic World" by Prof. F. J. Fairfield, and on the 25th Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews will tell the club something about "The Liberal Club ITSELF." The meetings are held every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 220 E. 15th st.

Communications.

Mr. Nichols's Challenge Accepted.

MR. L. T. NICHOLS, OF MCMINNVILLE, OREGON, Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 31st, I see a challenge from you, which I accept, on the following conditions; namely: You are to pay my actual necessary expenses from Modesto to McMinnville and return, and my necessary expenses during my necessary stay at McMinnville. This will not cost you half of the $500 which you are said to hav offered. For my time I ask nothing. The satisfaction of dissecting so rash a gentleman as yourself, in a parliamentary manner, will be all the compensation I ask. Were I able to bear my own expenses, I would do this also. Yours truly, JOHN R. KELSO.

Modesto, Cal., April 11, 283.

IS IT NOTHING BUT BRAG AFTER ALL?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The ever-welcome TRUTH SEEKER came on yesterday, and I see one of my neighbors is looking for a foe worthy of his steel, to oppose superstition and the inspiration theory—Nichols of McMinnville. Mr. Nichols published a like challenge in the spring of 1880, and when made known to me by Mr. J. W. Martin, one of his devoted admirers, and with whom (Martin) I had a short discussion upon the same subject, I accepted Mr. Nichols's challenge and promised him accommodation and satisfaction nearer home, and Mr. Martin accepted the challenge for Mr. Nichols, and went to him to arrange for the discussion, and that is the last I heard of it until this issue, March 31st, of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Nichols can be accommodated any time without going so far for an opponent, and sufficient means can be raised and will be on hand to liberally compensate Dr. J. L. York for a contest with this man Nichols, without an outlay of $500 or any money at all except on his side of the question.

Oregon has more Liberals than any other state in the union, in proportion to the population, and as intelligent too. I shall notify this reverend gentleman that Dr. York will accommodate him, and hope he will be in a mood to take issue. JAMES K. SEARS.

McCoy, Oregon, April 10, 1883.

An Evening's Amusement.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A short time ago, a Campbellite preacher stopped with me overnight, and of course, preacher like, felt it his solemn duty to put me through a bit of a catechism. He boasted of laying out Infidels by the score, of holding a number of debates with clergymen of other denominations, and always coming off victorious. His name is S. B. Coryell.

Coryell: Doctor, to what denomination do you belong?

Brooks.—The Greenback, sir.

C.—Are you not a professor of religion?

B.—No, sir.

C.—Don't you believe in God's word?

B.—Never saw it, sir.

C.—You must be joking to-day, doctor, for you hav surely seen the Bible.

B.—Oh, yes. I hav seen a number of bibles—the Koran, Mormon, Buddhist, Jewish, and one or two others. But I saw nothing in either that would lead me to think that they were anything more than man's word, and if God has any word, I certainly hav never seen it.

C.—Doctor, you are in very great darkness, I assure you. Christ, who died to save, is able to giv you light.

B.—He is? Well, send him along.

C.—Christ says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Now what God requires of all is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and be baptized; then all things will be made plain. Then will they know that Christ is the son of the living God.

B.—Well, my friend, do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and hav you been baptized?

C.—Yes, indeed.

B.—Then you claim to be a true follower of Christ, or, in other words, you are a Christian.

C.—Most assuredly I do.

B.—Well, sir, I propose to put you to the test, and satisfy myself as to whether you are what you claim. Now in this wonderful "word" that you dote so much on, I read: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils, they shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." . . . "The things that I do ye shall do, yea, greater things shall ye do." Now, sir, sitting there in my case, among my medicins, are a number of bottles with deadly poison in them. I will giv one of them to you, and if it does not hurt you, then I will not only believe what you claim, but I will accept your religion and join your church. Here is the bottle, sir; take it down. If you are a Christian it will not hurt you. Will you do it? [The poor devil was as white as a corpse. I guess he thought I was going to pour it down his hypocritical throat anyway, and he stammers out, "I cannot do it."]

Now, my friend, do not be so ready next time to boast of laying out Infidels. And as for your Christ, let me say to you that his existence is only imaginary. So far as a Jesus Christ of Nazareth, crucified under Pontius Pilate, is concerned, there never was any such a character. If we take the historical account as given in the New Testament, there is not a shadow of evidence; we take Matthew's account, and we find not a scratch of a pen anywhere in the wide world to corroborate any of his statements concerning him. His account of the slaughter of the innocents is enough to brand him as a base falsifier. No historian has ever mentioned it. And suppose Herod had issued such an order. He could never hav executed it. Why! If the fathers had not been brave enough to hav defended their offspring, there would hav been mothers enough—before they would hav seen their little darlings cruelly murdered before their eyes—to hav marched up to Jerusalem, and hung the old tyrant Herod higher than Haman. 'Tis a wonder that seemingly intelligent people will believe anything so absurd.

As for Luke's account, he says nothing about all this trouble, nor does he take the young child and flee the country. But he allowes him to stay right there, and no harm comes to him. But then Luke brings him upon the stage some fifteen years later, and that may account for the difference. Perhaps there were two of them, and Kersey Graves can add another, making it seventeen.

The preacher now thought it was bed-time, so I bad him good-night, and he retired. He said nothing to me about Christ the next morning, and what he thought I perhaps will never know.

W. P. BROOKS, M.D.

Piteous Complaint of a Once Powerful God.

"ALBANY, April 9th.—The Senate took up Mr. Boyd's bill to prevent the personation of Jesus Christ in any theatrical performance in this state. The penalty for violation of the law is fine or imprisonment, or both, the limit of the fine being not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and of the imprisonment not less than six months nor more than one year."

O legislators, hear me, forsake your jobs and bills,
And save me from the storm of dread impending ills;
And while the lobby presses its schemes to rob the state
Rush through this act or I shall be a dead god sure as fate.
Oh, don't let any wicked men produce me in a play,
Or of all my old-time majesty 'twill be the farewell day,
For folks will soon discover I hav always played a part;
Enact this bill at once then, and so we'll get the start.
Just look across the water, see how strongly I am backed.
No god can stand these Liberals without a stringent act;
My present stock of miracles is so old and musty, too,
I wish my priests had brains enough to get up something new.
The fact is, legislators, the world is growing wise,
The dust of old commandments doesn't seem to blind their eyes.
I once could use the cry of "Thus saith the Mighty Lord,"
But books and printing made the folks a most rebellious horde—
The more they read my Bible the less is their belief;
I'm lost, dear legislators, unless I get relief.
If I should miss my little "cue," forget my lines some night,
"Oh, shoot the god," they all would cry, with manifest delight.
Just think, dear legislators, how much you need a lord—
And I am biggest boss of all in each Democratic ward;
There's many a one among you who no ghost of chance would stand
Without my priests and cardinals to lend a helping hand.
And so, good legislators, pray grind my ax a bit,
And pass this bill of Boyd's at once, and do the thing that's fit.
The state must lean upon me, and I upon the state,
Or else the both of us will meet a dire and dreadful fate;
So don't revoke my charter and let a rival show
Break up the "holy business" I founded long ago.
For we are all monopolists, and especially am I;
Two gods would ruin business—you see the reason why—
For two full soon would grow to three, and three would grow to more,
Just as Farina's family did in Cologne of yore.
So move the previous question, and hasten to enact
"That I'm the one and only god—omnipotent in fact."
"It's special legislation," of course the rads will cry,
"Against the Constitution," but what care you or I?
Work up the opposition, don't let them dodge a vote,
Or else the rads will board us, and down will go the boat.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The following is the bill establishing a Bureau of Labor Statistics, which has passed the legislature of this state:

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The governor shall, by and with the advice of the Senate, appoint within ten days after the passage of this act, and triennially thereafter on the first Wednesday in April, some suitable person, who shall be designated "Commissioner of Statistics of Labor," with headquarters in the new Capitol at Albany.

SEC. 2. The duties of such commissioner shall be to collect, assort, systematize, and present in annual reports to the legislature, within ten days after the convening thereof in each year, statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the state, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, and sanitary condition of workingmen, and to the productiv industries of the state.

SEC. 3. The commissioner shall hav power to employ such additional clerical force, not exceeding in number five persons, however, at salaries not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $5,000 per year, as he may find necessary for the purpose of preparing the reports required by the act, and of performing such other clerical duties as may be required of them by the commissioner; and said commissioner shall also hav power to send for persons and papers, to examin witnesses under oath, to take depositions, to cause them to b taken by others by law authorized to take depositions; and said commissioner may depute any uninterested person to serve subpenas upon witnesses, who shall be summoned in the same manner and paid the same as witnesses before a county court, but for this purpose persons are not required to leave the vicinity of their residence or place of business.

SEC. 4. The commissioner herein named shall receive a salary of $2,500 per year, and he shall hav a clerk at a salary of $1,200 per year, and there shall be allowed an additional sum above salaries of the clerical force, of $3,000 per year, for office, fixtures, blank books, printing, stationery, postage, expenses of witnesses' and deputies' depositions and traveling expenses.

SEC. 5. The expenses of such Bureau of Labor Statistics shall be paid quarterly, and the comptroller is hereby authorized to draw an order on the treasurer for the amount so found to be due, provided that the bill of expenses aforesaid be duly sworn to by the commissioner as correct and just, according to his best knowledge and belief.

SEC. 6. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provisions are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. This act shall take effect immediately.

Obituary.

Our friend and brother, Lemuel Smith, has passed away. Death, which is sure to come and call for us all, called for him April 9th, 1883, and found him ready and waiting. He peacefully went to sleep, surrounded by those whom he loved, and those who loved him. Without a murmur he sought that rest which perchance knows no waking. For many years he stood outside of all that is or could be called ecclesiastical. He was a Freethinker, a Liberalist in the best meaning of that word. No church superstition hung to his skirts. He found that the brightest duties of his existence related to the human and not the gods. To help the poor—to relieve the needy—true to wife, and children, and my country, were the brightest words in his creed. He had no benedictions to throw away upon the unknowable. Love those whom he knew, and aid the same, was more to him than streets paved with gold, white robes, and palms of victory. In him the cause of Frethought in Michigan has lost one of its best and warmest friends. In him the poor of his town hav lost one of their best helpers. The wife of his heart and bosom has lost a true and loving husband, and his children an indulgent and loving father, and he will be remembered by all of those as one well deserving of such memory. Brother Smith was a great sufferer for three months prior to his death, but in all of that suffering he saw no reason to change his record in the least, or his belief. He was willing to die in the faith in which he had lived. Come and see how reason can support in the hour of pain, how steady the light glows until the last. No night of despair here. J. H. BURNHAM.

MRS. ISABELLA C. ELIAS, of Gideon, Kan., died March 25th, 1883, aged 50 years. Mrs. Elias was confined to her bed only nine days. The disease was pleuro-pneumonia. She bore her sufferings with that patience and bravery characteristic of the woman. She was a Liberal in every sense of the word. She was reared a Christian, but became a believer in Rationalism and the religion of humanity, in which faith she left this world. She told her family she could not liv, that she did not want to, that death had no terrors for her. She passed away as peacefully and calmly as a babe going to sleep. She was a woman of strong, steadfast character, an exemplary citizen, neighbor, wife, and mother, and true friend. Truly a worthy woman has gone to her rest.

The Iowa Constitution.

From Chief Justice Day's opinion concerning the Iowa Prohibition Amendment Case.

We hav approached and discussed this grave question with a full appreciation of the responsibilities which it involves, and we hav given to its consideration the earnest attention which its importance demands. We hav sought to maintain the supremacy of the constitution at whatever hazards. It is for the protection of minorities that constitutions are framed. Sometimes constitutions must be interposed for the protection of marjorities, even against themselvs. Constitutions are adopted in times of public repose when sober reason holds her citadel, and are designed to check the surging passions in times of popular excitement; but if courts could be coerced by popular majorities into a disregard of their provisions, constitutions would become mere ropes of sand, and there would be an end of social security and constitutional freedom. The cause of temperance can sustain no injury from the loss of this amendment which would be at all comparable to the injury to republican institutions which a violation of the constitution would inflict. That large and respectable class of moral reformers which so justly demands observance and enforcement of law cannot afford to take its first reformatory step by violation of the constitution. How can it consistently demand of others obedience to a constitution which it violates itself? The people can in a short time re-enact the amendment. In a matter of great moral reform a few years are nothing.

[We respectfully commend the forgoing to the consideration of those who would make everybody good by law, and especially to those who see in Comstockian methods anything to indorse.—ED. T. S.]

CHAPTER XXXIII.

CONSIDERATIONS UPON JULIAN.

Julian, a stoic from practice, with a virtue superior to that of the sect itself, was a follower of Plato in theory; his lofty spirit embraced that sublime idea Plato took from the ancient Chaldeans, viz: that God existed from all eternity and was the creator of eternity itself. God, unchangeable, pure, immortal, could only create beings similar to himself, images of greatness, to which he had foreordained immortality. Thus the Divine Maker created the gods, and the gods in turn created men.

This magnificent system is not to be proved; but such product of the imagination is better, without doubt, than that stuff about a garden in which the sources of the Nile and Euphrates, some eight hundred leagues apart, are said to be placed; or that story about a tree which affords us a knowledge of good and evil; about a woman cut out of the ribs of a man; about a serpent that talks; a cherub who guards the gates, and all the other sickening reveries which the coarse Jews had crowded in that fable borrowed from the Phœnicians. We can see in Saint Cyril with what eloquence Julian exposed these absurdities. Cyril had enough pride to report the words of Julian, believing he could answer them.

Julian strove to show how repugnant it was to God's nature to put in the Garden of Eden fruits which gave one a knowledge of good and evil, and then forbid anyone to eat thereof. It was on the contrary very necessary that man should supply himself freely with this necessary fruit, as I have before remarked. The distinction between good and evil, justice and injustice, is the milk with which God should nourish the creatures of his hands. It would be far better for man to put out both eyes than to destroy the mind.

If the editor of that Asiatic romance, Genesis, had had the least spark of brightness he would have supposed two trees to be in paradise; the fruits of one to nourish the soul and teach man love for justice, the fruits of the other to inflame the heart with black passions. Then he could have imagined man to have neglected the tree of knowledge and attached himself to that of passion.

Here, then, is a just allegory, a figure of speech much abused even by reasonable men. I am astonished that Julian did not propose this; but then he disliked the book of Genesis too much to condescend to correct it.

It is with very good reason that Julian despised the famous decalogue which the Jews regarded as a divine code. It was, in fact, good legislation in comparison with the Roman laws which defended robbery, adultery, and homicide. Among what barbarous races has not Nature laid down these laws more forcibly? What a pity to have a god descend from the midst of thunder and lightning on the top of a small and bald mountain in order to teach a people that they must not steal! Still some one could suggest that it was this God who ordered the Jews to rob the Egyptians, who proposed that they should demand usury from strangers, and who rewarded that thief Jacob. Was not this the God who defended larceny?

It was with much sagacity that this worthy emperor destroyed these pretended prophecies of the Jews, upon which the followers of Christ had founded their ravings—the virgin of Judea who had never lost her chastity, the girl or woman who bore a child, and, above all, the words attributed to Moses relating to Joshua, and which were so inappropriately applied to Jesus: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet like unto me" (Deut. xvii, 15). It is certain that a prophet like Moses could not have meant God and the son of God. Nothing is so apparent, nothing is so mixed with the essence of coarseness.

But Julian believed, or feigned to believe for political reasons, in divinations, auguries, and the efficacy of sacrifice. The people were not philosophers. It was necessary to choose between the madness of the followers of Christ and that of the pagans.

I believe that if that great man had lived he would have had the time to disengage religion from its coarse superstitions, and that he would have accustomed the Romans to recognize a deity as the creator of gods and men, and to address to such all their homage.

But Cyril and Gregory and the other Christian priests profited by the necessity of Julian pretending to publicly prefer the pagan religion, to decry him among the fanatics like themselvs. The Arians and Athanasians united against him, and the greatest man perhaps who ever existed became useless to the world.

New Books.

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION FOUNDED UPON THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA. Transcribed by M. Faraday. Star Publishing Company, Springfield, Mass. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents, Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

Michael Faraday was born in Newington, Surrey, England, in 1791, and died some sixteen years ago. He was a chemist of considerable note, but chiefly distinguished himself as an electrician. In religion he was nominally a Christian, and at the age of thirty discharged the office of elder in the church of an isoloted sect called after Robert Sandeman, to which his parents belonged. He published various works on chemistry and electricity. He once delivered a lecture in opposition to Spiritualism. For the last few years the Star Publishing Company, of Springfield, Mass., hav been putting forth occasional alleged communications from the spirit of Faraday, in the form of pamphlets, on various philosophical and historical subjects; "The Origin of Life" is one, "The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe" is another. There are some half dozen in all. The present one is No. 5, the largest of the series, containing 204 pages. It seems that the spirit of Mr. Faraday comes in contact with those of numerous pagan philosophers and priests, long since defunct, and that through the instrumentality of a Spiritual medium employed by the Star Publishing Company, he is enabled to communicate to the inhabitants of earth the facts in regard to the life and death of Jesus Christ which the priests hav divulged to him. Mr. Faraday explains that the method of communication is akin to the operations of electricity. Our credulity is considerably taxed when we are asked to believe that the contents of these pampelets are exactly what they purport to be, and that their alleged origin is the real one; we hav, however, no reason to doubt the honesty of the publishers. Many people believe that the dead communicate with the living. Many do not so believe. To both classes these pamphlets are of interest; to the former they are additional proof that much is to be learned from the other world, and to the second they are an instance of how far the audacity of publishers may go in this world. If they are true, they are of great value; if they are not true, they must still hold a place in the front rank of the curiosities of literature.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE; or, How to Spend Sunday. By Susan H. Wixon. Published by the Liberal League. 23 pp. octavo. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Five years ago there was scarcely a book procurable upon the above subject, written from a Freethought point of view. To-day there are many. William McDonnell, of Lindsay, Ont., set the ball in motion by the publication of his "Day of Rest." Mr. Bennett followed this with his "Sunday Question;" a Western contributor presented a tract on "Sabbath Observance;" M. Farrington wrote and published a treatis on "The Sabbath," and George Brown, M.D., givs a historical and critical review of the same subject in his "Sunday Question." The last work in this line is the one at present under consideration, by Mrs. Wixon, of Fall River, Mass. Very little appertaining to the question is left unsaid in this pamphlet. The Christian Sabbath, it appears, is of so-called heathen origin. The Sabians, of Persia and Chaldea, had a class of wise men among them known as the Sabæ. The wise men met together on certain days to consult on matters relating to the state, government, and general affairs, and these came to be known as Saba days. From Saba to Sabbath was an easy transition, and the writer has no doubt that here will be found the origin of the Christian Sabbath.

About the year 321, under Constantine, observance of the Christian Sabbath first began to be enforced by law, but it was not regarded as especially sacred. Up to the time of the Puritans, less than three hundred years ago, Sunday was more a day of recreation and rest than of particular religious significance. With these people Sabbath enactments were enforced, like all their other ecclesiastical laws, regardless of right or reason. Men were fined for non-attendance at church, and punished for taking the name of the Lord in vain.

The most sensible way of observing the Sabbath, in Mrs. Wixon's estimation, would be for each person to spend the day as he or she may think proper. A man may sing or dance, pray or swear, on that day, as he chooses, so he takes care that he disturbs no one and does nothing to prevent others from enjoying themselvs. If this view could generally obtain, a great deal of useless worry might be spared those who now regard it as their special duty to see that each man conducts himself according to the provisions of the Penal Code.

One day in the week without work is admitted by most people to be reasonable and beneficent. But if we are not to be allowed to use that day as we may elect—either for work if necessary or for recreation if we can afford it—it loses its value, and may as well be abolished. Sunday as a religious institution should be legislated off from any statute book. As a day of rest and relief it should be recommended for observance, so as to become in the grandest sense "the golden clasp that binds together the volume of the week."

NATURE'S HARMONY. By Francis D. Lacy. 165 pp. Handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1. Published and for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

The author of this work has endeavored to present to the world a natural religion based upon moral principles and scientific facts. He believes that an infinit intellectuality pervades the universe and controls it. Nothing lacks the quality of sense. The earth is a living, sentient being, possessing, in common with all other planets, a realization of its own identity. Man is but a child in the lap of nature. The teleological design argument, or one very similar to it, still has some weight with Mr. Lacy. He brings forward a clock as an illustration. Even a clock, he contends, shows evidence of a designer; and if design is evident in so rough a piece of mechanism, then the universe, so wonderfully systematic and harmonious, indicates an infinitly grander designer. This argument is a theological banana peel upon which many sure-footed men before our author's time hav slipped.

Mr. Lacy possesses a good knowledge of evolution, astronomy, and of analytical chemistry, in which he has himself made some interesting experiments. He is also something of a poet, and once in a while drops pleasantly into the seven-footed iambic form of verse, which runs along very well. Much of his rhyme seems to hav been involuntary, as versification is not attempted. For an instance, here is one paragraph:

"Crowd on, thou restless forces of infinity sublime, and bear, from all eternity to never-ending time, the self-existent principles that never can astray, in all this endless ocean, while evolving on their way. To that which through development surrenders up and dies shall be applied new forces and the same again shall rise; nor smallest of identities be unto nature lost, for could the least be stricken out, so likewise might the most."

This does not look like poetry, but it has the ring of it. There are some twenty pages of verse in the book, most of it remarkably good. The information the reader may obtain on anatomy and other matters treated of is worth more than the volume costs. The style in which the work is written is agreeable and lucid; and if it does not carry with it a conviction of the author's soundness on all points, it certainly does of his fairness and sincerity. We doubt if as much poetry and science was ever blended in one book before. The arguments and theories it sets forth deserve nothing less than a fair consideration, and from the order which we hav received for a second edition, although but a few weeks before the public, we judge that it is destined to receive one.

The Coming Problem.

Many who are now living on the earth will liv to see the awakening of Asia. It is the problem which the early years of the coming century will hav to deal with. Already the first notes are sounded. The cry of "India for the Indians," taken up by the great nativ press of Hindostan, now read by millions of people, is recognized as the first gathering of a cloud destined to spread over the whole political heavens of the world inside the next fifty years, and probably within twenty-five.

Southern and eastern Asia, in one-eighth of the world's area, holds nearly one-half the population of the globe. Dormant for centuries, it is now wakened by the stimulus of Western civilization and activity. Once thoroughly roused to the full measure of its power, and the problem will be, Asia against the world. Not by force of arms—except possibly on her own soil—but like the steady inflowing of the waters, soon destined to become an irresistible flood.

The activ civilization of the West stands face to face with the long dormant civilization of the East. Years ago, conscious of its power, it demanded a foot-hold. To-day it holds the vantage ground, and partly closes its ports against those whose ports it forced open. To-morrow—who shall tell the next turn in the problem? The reaction draws near.

Fifty years ago, naked warriors dashed upon a naked foe in the Sandwich Islands. To-day the same warriors sit as educated gentlemen, presiding over a dignified parliament, while their chief city boasts three hundred telephones, and their sugar-cane is cut and crushed by the aid of electric lights. England took thirteen hundred years to progress from barbarism to the days of steam; but the Fiji Islands hav passed from universal cannibalism, in 1854, to the establishment of formal courts of justice and the possession of steam yachts in 1883—less than thirty years. But the Asiatic nations are not savages. They had a literature and profound education when our parents lived like beasts of prey. Their thirst for education has always amounted to a passion, and although misdirected the literary labors both of the Hindoos and the Chinese eclipse, in point of intense application, any Western parallels. The Chinese civil service has been founded on competitiv examinations for thousands of years. And now into this great mass of people enters the leaven of Western activity in life, thought, and theology. Already the common schools of Japan educate seventy per cent of her children, a proportion largely in excess of the United States. Everywhere progress moves with a rapid stride, and within the century the nativ press of Asia may number more readers than that of all the English-speaking nations combined.

The leaven is Anglo-Saxon. The language of the world will ultimately be English, for the varied and countless dialects of the world must eventually giv way before one medium of commercial intercourse. But the leaven is small in comparison with the mass. What will it all develop into? Will the quick intelligence of the men of Asia seize the better parts of Western thought with as much readiness as they will grasp the power which it teaches? May they not absorb into their present systems the strong currents of our later life and present us with a new and strange result? The problem will soon be moving too rapidly to be turned by the policy of the Western nations. Will it move them instead?

The press of India speaks of the coming change with clear intelligence. A writer in Progress, one of the nativ monthly magazines, says:

"You hav accomplished a revolution in India greater than you know. You hav overturned the usages and customs of centuries. You speak proudly of your administration, of your education, your rule, and your railroads. We value them mainly as aids to a consummation which, perchance, you neither dream of nor desire. They are uniting the nations of our country. Finally, then, speaking for the educated classes of my country, I declare we do know what we want, and we will never rest content until we get it. We want a free and united India, ruled by its nations. The time approaches when from the Himalayas to Cape Cormorin a free, educated, and united country will cease to be the plundering-ground of aliens, and take its rightful place—the very Kohinoor—among the nations. —Exchange.

STUART, April 9, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Inclosed find $2.75—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER this year and 25 cents for "An to Christian Questions," by D. M. Bennett. I can't see but THE TRUTH SEEKER is as good as ever under your and Mr. Macdonald's management. Still if Mr. Bennett, with his experience, could hav lived twenty years longer to shed light and truth upon humanity, it might hav been better; but the clergy and Comstockism rejoice over his untimely death; and that miserable Joe Cook—I hav not words at hand to express the contempt I hav for him. I say untimely death, because the hardship and deprivations that he underwent at the hands of Comstockism, and the work that he performed while on his round-the-world trip, were more than his physical strength could stand, but it may be for the best. At any rate, I hope the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, will liv until priestcraft and superstition are no more. W. H. DORRIS.

HIAWATHA, April 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I send $2.00 to apply on my subscription. I am forced to disbelieve the Bible, but don't you think it rather cold comfort to believe that death ends all, and that there is no life beyond this? I am sixty-six years old, and hav but a faint hope of another life. I am satisfied, however, that we will all fare alike, and I am willing to share the same as Newton, Franklin, and other such men. Success to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours, W. C. SMITH.

EUREKA SPRINGS, April 5, 283.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Inclosed you will find $1 to continue subscription on THE TRUTH SEEKER. I would now feel lost without it. I like the way it deals with supernaturalism. I can truly sympathize with you in your great bereavement. My wife parted this life on February 23d, and I know what it is to be bruised. When asked by some Christian believers if I would hav a funeral service or prayers, I told them no. For this I was abused, my wife lying a corpse at the same time. Surely Christians can be more cruel and hard than any sect on earth.

Yours for truth and knowledge, C. H. COLE.

ARRINGTON, April 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3—$2 50 for the renewal of my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for the present year, and for the 50 cents send a couple of Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason." Glad to see your paper is prospering, and that it has not lost any of its vim and ability, although we greatly regret the death of that sterling man, D. M. Bennett, by whose pen many an error has been exposed and man enlightened as to the pretensions of priests and priestcraft. May the paper he established liv and prosper, and continue to be a grand success.

Yours truly, HENRY SCHIFFBAUER.

PILOT GROVE, April 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your excellent paper has found its way into these parts, and is doing the good work of Liberalizing the minds of the people. Many of the most advanced scholars of the country are now outspoken Liberals, and we are proud to record among us the best men in the country. I will not weary you with a long letter, but would say, Go on with the good work, and may your shadow never grow less.

I inclose $4—$3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and $1 for "Essays and Lectures," by B. F. Underwood.

Yours in earnest, JOHN B. GRIFFIN.

VINELAND, April 23, 283.

MR. EDITOR: As you allow others to state their opinions in your paper, please admit mine. I am a Materialist of the T. Winter stamp, and hav an antipathy to every form of Spiritualism. As I know that some of the greatest of the so-called mediums are the greatest of humbugs, as well as the greatest scamps unhung, I hav no faith in any of their performances, and as little in many of their utterances; for instance, one of their number says that we store up nervous energy to old age, and that that is an argument. Now that is not so. Nervous energy decays with age, and when anyone dies from old age they show a lack of energy of any kind.

P. ROTHWELL.

NASBY, April 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad that I can inclose $8. Please giv me credit as per annexed list.

I hav been an Infidel only about ten years, having before believed in the universal salvation of mankind as taught by kind and loving parents who lived and died in that good faith—a belief with which I was well satisfied, and in its support could produce some strong arguments.

About twelve years ago I first read Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason." That settled the business with me—I became a confirmed and outspoken Infidel.

I hav read and re-read all the letters of condolence on the great and sad loss of Mr. Bennett. I mourn him as a brother. H. B. MILKS.

SENSIBLE AT LAST.

BUNKER HILL, April 283.

MR. EDITOR: It is with pleasure that I chronicle a fact which I hav for more than twenty years labored and prayed for. Our minister, Rev Jacob Fleming, has preached two funeral sermons this week in this place. In the one he very sensibly ignored the spending of time and money on the gods, and other unknowables, and said it was "our first and highest duty to take care of ourselvs, and do all we possibly can to make our fellow-creatures happy," and in the other sermon he said he "never expects to see God as a personality" (meaning the great Jewish Jehovah), but expects to see Christ, as the embodiment of all the fulness of the godhead, and also stated that there were some even in the church that were not the very best people. Now these ideas, coming from an old clergymen that has for the past forty years been a red-hot Methodist, are certainly a digression from the "orthodox faith," and should be set down to his credit, it being the first step (that we hav seen) from him in this direction. Only last fall, when I handed him the little book "Crimes of Preachers" he did not dare to take it before the eyes of his congregation, and handed it back, saying, "I don't want any more of your stuff," though he had said in his preaching, frequently, that he read THE TRUTH SEEKERS I gave him and then they made good kindling-wood. It seems to me that the flax is beginning to smoke a little, and it don't smell like brimstone either. So there may be salvation for us modern Ninevites yet. At all events we will sustain Brother Fleming while he tries to evolute out of his hardshell Methodism, though he may be unconscious of so doing.

A. H. WALKER.

PITTSBURGH, April 22, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I thank you for publishing Col. Ingersoll's oration at the funeral of John G. Mills in Washington, D. C. He died of pneumonia. He was suffering from it when he called on me, March 20th. I cannot bear to think he is dead. He was a young man of marked ability and much promis. We can ill afford to lose such from our ranks. Little did I think when I last saw him, in less than four weeks he would be cold and silent in death.

I hav closed my engagement of three Sundays with the Pittsburgh League, and shall be moving on toward New York and my home in Massachusetts, next month. Pittsburgh League is "tip-top," well managed. I will call no names; all work energetically. Yours for truth, ELLA E. GIBSON.

OREANA, April 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In my article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 14th my carelessness or the oversight of compositor has made my last affirmation somewhat ambiguous by misplacing the points. It should read: "As, la juré divine naturœ, there can be no mental crime, as thought or opinion cannot become criminal till crystallized by action. Universal mental liberty is the personal right of all created intelligence, and the attempt to identify prohibition of thought," etc.

W. H. GANTZ.

[Writers are not always careful in pointing their manuscript, and compositors (we may as well break it to the world now as at any other time) are not inspired. These two circumstances, taken together, account for the error.—ED. T. S]

STAR, March 22, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: My sympathetic feelings hav been very tardy in presenting themselvs, still I assure you they are heartfelt. The death of your noble companion when this world needed his gigantic efforts so imperativly was a shock which took me some time to comprehend and get resigned to. It was indeed a national calamity.

This also brings to memory that I am somewhat delinquent. Inclosed find $10—$3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the balance use as directed.

It is my intention to do some lively missionary work in this benighted neighborhood. Count me in on the Bennett Hall Fund, and believe me ever your friend and co-laborer, EVERARD E. MARTIN.

ST. IGNATIUS, April 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.50 for this year's TRUTH SEEKER.

Of the many scientific and theologic views in your interesting paper, I prefer those of Townsend. Brain alone cannot explain mind, no more than mind can sans brain. Of myself I feel intuitivly and by apprehension that there is a power at work that knows me better than I know it. This, I would say, is the vital everlasting, but I would not degrade it with the hackneyed name of a God. I would, as a certain evolutionist, as soon believe that the ape came from man, as that you or I came from him. Neither Darwin nor Beecher can giv any clue to the origin of things, and the essence of mind and space is as little known to both as it is to Sitting Bull. Probably the boasted progress in man and his further anticipations are in a great measure unfounded. Our orb has been measured and bounded long ago. Resistance and aggression is the order of nature. Tyranny and love are old as day and night. Knowledge, honor, and charity are what we want, leaving religion, with all its trumpeted fanfaronade, to its own dreamers. At best, it is only a second or third edition of the red medicin man.

A. MCDONALD.

WALLA WALLA, April 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $3.25, for which please send me books as directed. We like THE TRUTH SEEKER as well as ever, if not more so. It is now the best and cheapest paper in America.

I wish to ask a few questions with your permission. Why does not some Freethought work be arranged with suitable accommodations for a family record? Is there any passage in the Bible that says Saturday is the Sabbath? I will giv you the address of a few Liberals who do not take "our" paper; perhaps some of them will become subscribers. You can count on Mr. Lewis and myself as long as we liv. Yours most respectfully, WILLIS MCDANNALD.

[1. "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers" contains a family record. It is a valuable work, giving the lives of some of the world's best men.

2. The Bible says the seventh day was sanctified by God's resting on it. The seventh day was, and with the Jews now is, Saturday. The Christians changed the day of rest from the seventh to the first day. There is not the slightest Biblical authority for this change. Sabbath means rest. The word "Saturday" is not in the Bible, we believe.

We are obliged to Mr. McDannald for his good opinion, and trust we may always deserve it.—Ed. T. S.]

Mr. Editor: The eight dollars and thirty cents you find inclosed is to pay for thirteen books and The Truth Seeker for six months. I was raised a Presbyterian, and it might be I could not stand The Truth Seeker more than six months at a time. I hav one before me now. I like it well. A neighbor handed it to me. It has been passed round until it is worn to pieces. At the same time the neighbor gave me a copy of the Boston Investigator and the Age. They are all worn out. I wish to start a few new ones on the circuit. I think they ought to follow the preachers to keep the people's minds balanced and thereby prevent lunacy.

I am what the church people call an Infidel. I am proud of the name. I turned Infidel before I read any Infidel works. Reading and studying the Bible make an Infidel of me.

We contemplate organizing a Bible class for the purpose of studying the Bible in a fair and impartial manner. What books should we hav for helps?

M. Brown.

[We should recommend for the purpose Taylor's "Diegesis" (price $2 00), Cooper's "Inquirers' Text Book" (price $1.00), Keeler's "Short History of the Bible" (price 50 cts. and 75 cts), Westbrook's "Bible; Whence and What" (price $1.00), Waite's "History Christian Religion" (price $2.25), and Paine's "Age of Reason" and "Examination of the Prophecies" (price 75 cts).—Ed. T. S.]

Waynesville, April 23, 1883.

Mr. Editor: We are having at the present time in our town a series of meetings going on—what you might call a religious revival—at the Orthodox Friends' Meeting (Quaker). As the saying is, a number hav embraced religion. Nathan and Esther Frame are the evangelists and lights that are leading the meeting. I hav not attended as yet, but some of my friends are in daily and nightly attendance, and are kept up in the good cause till 4 A.M., laboring hard for the backsliders and wayward sinners who ar trying to be saved. Many say they are saved and never experienced a change of heart before. I am in hopes it will be lasting. If there is no other way to reform men and women and bring them to a knowledge of what is right it may be better than none. Mrs. Esther Frame lectured one night last week on "Hell," and in her discourse she gave Thomas Paine a round, and depicted him in the bad place, and brought up his dying words, "If ever the devil had an agent on earth, I've been that one." I hav read Paine. I cannot believe that he ever uttered such words on his death-bed. If you hav his last words, which I had at one time in an entirely different form or meaning given as quotations in one of Ingersoll's lecture's, I should be obliged if you would send them, if they are in print in any of the tracts you hav published, Voltaire, or any of those so-called Infidels who hav passed away. As to Paine's being intemperate and a drunkard, I never hav heard of it till the last week, and hardly believe it, and think it a wrong accusation, to say the least, even if it is so. It is also stated that he died an object of charity among his friends. I do not think the less of him on that account if he came to want honorably. I would like to be enlightened. I heard none of these charges myself, but was told by those who were present, and hav no reason to doubt they were made. I was raised by the old-fashioned Friends of former days, but hav not been a member since the year 1866, and now attend, when the spirit moves me, any church I feel disposed to go to. I hav been reading a number of the tracts of The Truth Seeker for the last ten years, and find many good and rational thoughts expressed in regard to the Bible and religions of the world, and am open for more and more investigation if it can be found. Excuse me if I hav made any intrusion on your time unnecessarily by writing so long a letter.

James Pierce.

[For a refutation of the slanders concerning the life and death of Paine we would advise our correspondent to read "Paine Vindicated," by Colonel Ingersoll, and "A Roman Catholic Canard," recently published in The Truth Seeker. Both pamphlets are for sale at this office. The price of each is 10 cents.—Ed. T. S.]

East Rodman, April 10, 283.

Mr. Editor: I hav never been so impressed with the great work inaugurated by Thomas Paine as I am to-day. I will not say accomplished, for the work has only just begun, and it will proceed with accelerated speed as time goes on, because it is right and just. I believe few greater men ever lived than he. He has done more to enlighten the human race than any man I know of. He it was who sowed the seed which germinated into our free government, and nursed the plant until its roots struck deep into the soil of the American mind. He foresaw that it would be impossible for the tree to mature unless the power of the bigoted church was broken. In dealing with tyrannies he realized the greater one of the church, and then grappled the monster with so firm a hold that it has only struggled and squirmed since, unable to strike its poisonous fangs into the tree of liberty. The falsehoods and slanders of the church, which they continue to heap upon him, show plainly they consider his works the most damaging to their aims and designs of any yet produced. There is one infallible method of judging a man who is accused of everything bad, i. e., examin his works and deeds; if they are found to be outpourings of a vile, immoral nature, of course he can be set down as receiving his just deserts. On the contrary, when every sentence shows an unselfish nature devoted to the good of his fellow-man, calculated to enlighten and instruct, demonstrating facts and exposing falsehoods, where will his calumniators and detractors stand? Their position is not to be coveted; their nature is shown up in their own utterances. Their cause must hav received a terrible blow that their only course is to blacken the character of their opponent by slander and lies after his death, and even upon his death-bed. Would that every man and woman could read his works, and the truths therein sink deep into their minds (even here in this free country they could be studied to great profit), and there would be inaugurated such a reform in the affairs of mankind as it needs sadly to-day. The reform in governments to be successful demanded the downfall of ecclesiastical influence, and he loosened the very foundations of their power. They feel they can never repair the breaches he has made in their dogmatic walls, so turn upon him with the poisonous fangs of a serpent. Its fangs are being drawn and the slimy monster becoming harmless. It will wiggle and twist, as the operation is not altogether painless. Think you when it has been able to so poison the mind that it believed a man had the power to send another to hell or heaven, and even hav the assurance to issue a bull against a comet, that it is not painful to deprive the church of such a prerogativ? In place of such a blighting, mind-destroying bigotry we will reinstate reason and intelligence, the twin reformers of every age and clime. We say with our hero, "The laying a country desolate with fire and sword, declaring war against the natural rights of all mankind and extirpating the defenders thereof from the face of the earth is the concern of every man to whom nature hath given the power of feeling, of which class, regardless of party censure, is Thomas Paine." And so say we all. M. E. Rose.

Poughkeepsie, April 25, 1883.

Mr. Editor: Our city is charmingly located. The classic Hudson has been styled the river of mountains, and the Rhine of America. The scenery from its source to its outlet is beautiful and sublime, unsurpassed by any of the idolized streams of the Old World. Its silvery waters move peacefully yet majestically through varied scenes of mountains and dales, now winding around palisades and highlands, and then among leafy groves and meadows. There deep mountain glens, wild, rugged, and lonely; there cities, villages, schoolhouses, and farms, beautifully penciled by crossroads and rivulets. Besides its beauties, the Hudson is consecrated by hallowed memories of some of the most heroic and touching deeds in the history of our war for independence, adding much that is of deep interest and attraction to the student or tourist. Its waters are vocal with reminiscences of our Revolutionary struggle, and along the banks linger memories of the noble and heroic deeds of our forefathers, while its rocks and valleys hold cities populated by intelligent, refined, and wealthy people, who hav sought its fertil banks to dwell in the garden spot of America.

Among the most noted of the cities is Poughkeepsie. It is charmingly situated on the eastern bank of the river, and is midway, and the most populous and flourishing city, between the commercial metropolis of the country, New York, and the capital of the state, Albany. It is chiefly built on a high level, overlooking the Hudson river country. The situation is romantic and picturesque, and commands the enthusiastic admiration of all who visit it.

Mr. Editor, I am one of the many who read The Truth Seeker. I find others in this city who read it also. There are a great many Liberals in this city, and a great many who would become Liberals with very little urging. I hav had experience, and know how it is myself. I hav sailed in the orthodox ship in the deep waters, and sailed in toward the shore when the breakers were washing the decks. The closer I came to the shore the greater the storm was, but at last I gained the shore of liberty to think for myself. How happy I am to think that I hav got rid of all that kind of doctrin.

Mr. Editor, I was taught the Roman Catholic doctrin, taught to believe in a hell and all its torments. All I want is my personal liberty, to think for myself, and that right I am willing to giv every man, woman, and child. When we look at the great enlightenment of this country, and then go to the churches on Sunday and hear the clergymen telling their congregations how they must do to be saved, we marvel at the state of things. The minister and priest say every other one is wrong and they are right. As Col. R. G. Ingersoll says, they are all right by saying they are all wrong. Just so long as this doctrin is taught to the people, just so long will we hav discord among the people of all countries. Giv me the liberty that belongs to man, the liberty to think for myself. They tell us that God is everywhere; if you go to the extreme north, God is there; to the extreme south, God is there; on the seas, God is there; to heaven, God is there; to hell, God is there. Now, if this doctrin is true—if God is in heaven, I am with him; if God is in hell, I am with him. I am willing to liv where God is; what more do we want? If God is everywhere, we cannot miss him.

J. G. O. Thore.

THE VOICE OF HONEST TRUTH SHOULD BE HEARD.

Cincinnati, O., April 15th.

Mr. Editor: Once more I must lift my voice against this very tricky ism, known by the name of Spiritism. I hav been closely watching, and deeply investigating, this unblushing deceit for some time, and I now fearlessly denounce the whole thing as a first-class fraud—sometimes second-class, but a fraud any way. If departed spirits do the absurd and nonsensical tricks and shams that I hav witnessed they must be the most demented idiots imaginable.

But what puzzles me most is, how it is so many are duped by this senseless system. Surely mankind must be largely on the road to lunacy, otherwise it would be impossible either to believe or practice these unmeaning, useless, and stupid frauds upon them. I hav witnessed nothing but what any truly intellectual person would turn from with scorn and contempt as an insult to a rational mind; in short, it is, without exception, the boldest deception extant. If ever a real intelligent person displayed their superior power during life, the same individual most assuredly lost it all in this so-called and trumped-up spirit life. But I find that in accordance with the grade of ignorance, or vice versa, of the so-called medium, so is the sense, or nonsense, of the spirit, clearly showing that the medium and spirit are one and the same thing. Sir, I thought we were already cursed with religious frauds enough without an increase of that stripe, which is so much adapted to the entire destruction of the mental organism, leaving the poor infatuated dupe a perfect wreck. Sir, I am down on religious frauds and pious tyrannies of every shade and description. Our bright and beautiful world is begrimed and beclouded with these dirty, mean humbugs, which demoralize the great masses of the world; and where knowledge, happiness, and prosperity should prevail, there is ignorance, poverty, and misery, clearly showing that religions are the perpetrators of man's general discomforts, both in body and mind.

What, I ask, do the people want with the swarms of idle drones of priests, parsons, mediums, etc.? What good are they, anyhow? They are an incubus on the people, and ever seeking to crush out the freedom and pleasures of life. If mankind was well instructed how to liv and be honest, good, and true in this life and world, it would be a thousand times better than prating and babbling about some life and world of which nobody knows anything, and never will know when stone dead. Anything to the contrary is full of error and gross delusion, and don't you forget it.

Now, sir, why, I ask, do not our relativs who hav died, and whom we dearly loved in their lifetime, if still alive in some portion of the universe, communicate direct with us—why through a third party, called a medium? Sir, it won't do; it's too thin, and smacks to much of dark tricks, and requires the faith of fools to swallow that dose of knavish deceit. I claim to be an honest character, and demand proof of these strange and unnatural antics. Statements without proof are worthless, and up to this date I hav had no proof in the smallest degree. Some tell me the reason I hav had no proof is because my faith is not strong enough. Well, sir, if that is the reason, I shall never hav any proof, for I will never hav the least faith in any such impossible and unnatural trash. What they call earth life is good enough for me, and it looks as if they liked it also, as I do not see any of them in a hurry to quit. They do not like to take their own medicin and migrate to the summer-land. When sick they will send for a doctor, and will swallow the nastiest drug rather than die. Ha, ha! that don't look brave or honest—what say you, brother reader? I know if I had such strong faith in this fancy land I would leave by the lightning express, and be ready to take a breakfast on ambrosial nectar and all the grub of the gods.

Sir, all religions are inventions—priestly ones. Such being the case, I do not believe in them, do not support them, but speak openly against them, and fear no consequences; no, sir.

Brother Peck believes that no mental power can exist without a living material organism. Why, then, does he side with those who believe to the contrary? I understand him to be a one-entity man. Stick to that. Peace is a nice thing to hav, but not at the expense of principle.

Brother Huggins is solid, and is a large plum in the Materialistic pudding. The hand of fellowship is ever ready to grasp the outspoken Infidel who knows no cowardice, and utters his honest thoughts regardless of all cranky religionists.

Thos. Winter,

An Appreciating View of Lewis Masquerier's Sociology.

TO THE READER: The first of the subjoined letters is an inquiry from a young man in mental difficulties, and the second is the reply from a relativ and an old reformer, after reading the octavo edition of Masquerier's "Sociology; or, the Reconstruction of Society, Government, and Property." Since the senior writer is a fearless thinker and an old journalist (the founder and for some years sole editor of the Brooklyn Argus), his opinion of the work may be regarded as carrying some weight. Were it only as an indication of the groove in which thoughtful minds are moving, and the readiness with which absolute and positiv truths are accepted by unprejudiced intellects, the letters form

AN INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR UNCLE: In your former letters you make frequent mention of "human rights," and in your last favor you say, with an emphasis which arrested my special attention, "The most important rights attaching to humanity, so far from being possessed by any, are not even understood by one in a million of the race." This sweeping assertion, I confess, staggered me. I thought that education —especially political education—had so far progressed as to leave very few members of any community ignorant of their most important rights. But I was mistaken, it seems, and must therefore trespass once more upon the indulgence of the kindest of uncles by requesting a definition of this much-hackneyed word right, with a statement of its basis and elements, and, if it be not asking too much, an enumeration of those cardinal or radical rights of which you say the benighted and superstitious world is so ignorant. I know that mankind are, and ever hav been, looking beyond the moon for that happiness which should be enjoyed here on earth, and which I think would be so enjoyed but for the cunning of the priest, and that indifference to substantial things which he has contrived to produce in nearly all but himself. Surely, the priest is the arch-pest of this anomalous world—in which shrieking pain and wanton passion, plethoric wealth and bitter poverty, a religion of peace and a practice of slaughter, a profession of honesty and the meanest chicanery, a brutal and blind ignorance, and a blaze of scientific light flaunt their grim contrasts to perplex the mind and to almost paralyze the very heart of hope. Surely, if man's devotion had been enlisted in behalf of the only world he can ever know, instead of—well! Dear uncle, please instruct me, and let me see if consolation will come with knowledge. Your affectionate nephew, J. G.

THE REPLY.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: Though I hav just now but little leisure, yet such is my desire to encourage your intellectual tendencies, I will devote a short time, which had been bespoken in another direction, to answer the query in your last letter in relation to the word right, of which you require a definition, "with a statement of its basis and elements, and an enumeration of cardinal or radical rights," etc. As I hav intimated, I hav not the time just now to do justice to so wide a field of exegesis, but at my first leisure I may treat the subject more exhaustivly. Meanwhile, after my definition or illustration of a right, you may read the book I send you with great profit and instruction. But more of the book presently.

First, then, as to the definition: In this connection I would observe that we can define one word only by the use of others with examples. If I tell you that a right is a claim, in a substantiv sense, I know that you will understand me. Well, then, a right is a claim, inherent in the person in whose behalf it is asserted — conditioned upon his circumstances, his services, his sufferings (as the case may be), or on his simple existence only as an organized and sentient being. Let one giv a familiar illustration or two from social relations as they stand. First, then, we will take circumstances as the basis of a right. By the operation of a vicious social system, under which all the wealth, power, and influence of the world are being so rapidly absorbed by scheming, bloated, and remorseless monopolies, a worthy individual is reduced to destitution; in which case, should the man quiescently pine to death, or seek his quietus at the point of "a bare bodkin?" No! He is entitled, he has a right, to such help as will enable him, without degradation, to continue that existence which the social law has allowed to commence. How society can and ought to recognize that right the book forwarded herewith will inform you.

Next, as to services as the basis of a right: The worker has labored for his employer; the soldier has been maimed in the service and defense of his country. Will the respectiv rights of these men be denied—the one to his wages and the other to his pension? No! the right in each case is admitted. But the book will inform you as to the means of converting the hireling into a self-employer, and dispensing with professional fighters altogether. I advise you to read that part of the book most carefully.

Then, as to suffering as the basis of a right: If a man be disabled physically, or, through misfortune or congenital tendency, mentally; if he be the victim of assault and battery, of defamation, of the arts and acts of the larcener—has he no claim to reparation? Of course, the instinct and universal voice of mankind would assert his right to justice. The book, however, will reveal to you a future form of society in which the possibility of such violence and wrong would be reduced to a minimum scarcely appreciable.

Lastly, as to the rights of a man simply and only as an organized being: As such, the Declaration of Independence proclaims that he has certain rights which it pronounces "inalienable," viz: "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." So far so good. Nothing, however, is said about the true means of making that life secure, that liberty virtual, or that pursuit practicable. The assertion is a mere vague and "glittering generality." But bear in mind my definition as you read the book, and you will find the author leaving the Declaration out of sight; opening to you such a vista of thought, and revealing such a series of rights as amply to justify my assertion that not one in a million understands, much less possesses, them.

"Sociology; or, the Reconstruction of Society, Government, and Property," by Lewis Masquerier, was published in its present form in 1877. Its main contents originally appeared as a series of articles in the Boston Investigator, and in my opinion the columns of that able and venerable champion of mental freedom were never graced by analysis more acute, by reasoning more profound, by conclusions more irrefragable, or, in brief, by matter more important to mankind than the contents of this book. The proprietor and editor of that old but still stalwart exponent and defender of Rationalism hav put the friends of Freethought so deeply in their debt that adequate payment can be inspired only by a very large, sincere, and generous gratitude.

I ask your special attention, John, to the starting-point or basis of Mr. Masquerier's reasoning. To prove to you that he stands on the very bed-rock of the argument, I refer you to page 39, wherein you will find that he bases human rights on the constitution or nature of man himself, and the wants therefrom arising, instead of regarding them as the gift of a deity, the concession of a king, or the allotment of a formal "social compact." Thus, the human being has a vascular, a nervous, a muscular, and an osseous system, which in their operativ condition and conjoint action constitute vitality or life. If, then, the right to that life, or the sum of our organic functions, be inalienable, it follows that every other right and requirement growing out of that vitality must be equally inalienable. This is the basis of our author's system. He sees in mankind a number of beings equal in their need of food, clothing, shelter, and education, and practically equal in their ability to supply those needs. He therefore proclaims, as clearly deducible from those premises, the universal law of EQUALITY among human beings as the corner-stone of his social system—that is, equal rights based on equal needs.

Next, the author, finding the presence and pressure of these wants constant through life, deduces the law of INALIENABLENESS, or that quality of the primal right, and of all other rights treated of in the book, which secures them intact to and during the life in which they inhere. Then this truly radical reformer, seeing that Nature has stamped upon all her products a distinct character or set of properties, not one of which can act the part of any other, he would discrete, after her example, all the adult members of the human family. Instead of a social fusion of rights and property—communism—he would establish them in the integral and sovereign personality of each unit of the social mass, thereby producing a more perfect INDIVIDUALITY, or separate personal independence, than has ever yet existed. Under this rule each adult would be absolutely sovereign. He would exercise his own volitions perfectly untrammeled and free. He would be the owner of a homestead which could not under any circumstances be diverted from his possession and control. He would, in proper person, vote in such legislation as his township needed. He would be the owner of the entire product of his labor, and would be free to exchange equitably the surplus of his own products for what he did not himself produce. In such a position—as his own employer, his own lawmaker, the possessor of all the fruits of his own industry—he would escape from an idle swarm of aristocrats, priests, delegates, and other officers, middlemen, bosses, and overseers, who now absorb four-fifths of the fruits of his toil. Thus, in the EQUALITY, INALIENABLENESS, and INDIVIDUALITY of rights, we hav the complete trinity of principles on which the Masquerierian system is built. By a perusal of the work you will discover how well the author has fortified this his main citadel, and how thoroughly he has elaborated and applied his postulates. As you read you will find his root principles gradually expanding and finally efflorescing into a world-wide garden peopled by intelligent and happy freemen. This may sound utopian to some, but I hope not to you.

The book in which these principles are enforced is a very principia of human rights on which conventions and individual reformers may, and doubtless will, draw forever, as an all-sufficing and inexhaustible well-spring of philosophy. Yet many readers will probably conclude, as the author had already concluded, that generations must pass—perhaps many—before the rights and principles explained in this book receive universal recognition, or the form of society prefigured by the author shall generally prevail. But what of that? Is it not so much more to the honor of the projector, in this mercenary age, that he has labored for half a century without the least hope of that reward which seems to be the only inspiration of modern effort? Do you, my beloved boy, believe that the system which produces the terrible contrasts enumerated in your last note is destined to last forever? That would be to set too beggarly a limit to human progress, and to sadly under-estimate the resources of the thoughtful and resolute social reformer—to say nothing of that tendency upward and onward which is supposed to be an instinctiv quality of the human mind. You hav it as your uncle's opinion that the law which decides the contest between two species or races, in their struggle for existence, will prevail in the conflict between two systems, and that the fittest will surely survive. Thus, among a multitude of other changes, astrology had to giv place to astronomy, alchemy to chemistry, while the conception of a pure and spiritual god has driven the grosser fetich from all civilized regions.

There is another natural law of the physical universe, which I hold to be equally potential in the moral and intellectual worlds, "the law of falling bodies." Under appropriate conditions, mainly consisting of a good vacuum, you know that a body will fall sixteen feet during the first second of its descent. This speed, however, is greatly accelerated during every subsequent second, till it would reach at the end of the first hour could the conditions of such an experiment or demonstration be supplied, a velocity which would not only exhaust, but defy, all known terms of statement or comparison. Now, in the moral and social world, the conditions required for a like accelerativ progress of the reforms proposed by Mr. Masquerier are an absence of superstition, political party spirit, and the grosser forms of unenlightened selfishness. But the space, so to speak, through which Mr. Masquerier's principles will hav to pass in the coming generations, before reaching the goal of universal adoption, is, and will be, so cumbered with obstructions—gods and devils, heavens and hells, priests and politicians, war and ruin, lust and greed, and the blind and brutal ignorance of a priest-crazed mob —that the register of progress will hardly strain arithmetic at once. Yet the consolation remains, that as the line of progress is cleared of those impediments, so will be not only the velocity of the movement, but its acceleration. Let us, then, my dear John, while acquiring and spreading a knowledge of these principles, do all in your power to irradiate the human mind, and drive out the devils of ignorance and bigotry by which it is now possessed, assured that that is the speediest means of securing human rights and making earth a paradise. In the mean time let the thought console you that the grand outcome is a mere question of time; that the fittest will surely survive, whether of races or systems; that justice will ultimately triumph and truth prevail. Your affectionate uncle,

JAMES P. KENYON.

P. S.—While analyzing and classifying human rights, and devising and describing a system of society which appears to be their natural outgrowth, Mr. Masquerier has carried forward in even progress the principles of another reform, hardly secondary to that of which I hav given you a very insufficient epitome, viz., a reform of language. In the present alphabet, the letters which do duty as our symbols of vowel sounds are most barbarously deficient, both as to number, arrangement, and use, while among the consonants there is at once a suplusage and lack of letters. Mr. Masquerier rectifies all this by providing a representativ symbol for every sound possible in vocal articulation. You cannot read without interest the opening chapters of his "Phonology," and you will experience, no doubt, what was my own feeling, a great admiration of his inductiv and highly original way of demonstrating the actual number of vowels, and their proper order of succession in a complete and natural alphabet. I say nothing at present of the many advantages of Mr. Masquerier's discoveries and system—they are all duly set forth in the latter end of the book. I urge upon you, particularly, a careful and repeated perusal of this part, till you become quite familiar with the fundamental principles of this admirable phonetic system, which at once brings an immense easement to the work of education, tends to the unification of all human tongues, and which will, therefore, largely contribute to that result for which all good men hav for ages yearned, viz., a sympathetic confraternity of nations—the universal brotherhood of mankind. Your fittest amen to such aspirations will be a careful perusal of this book, and a thorough digestion and assimilation of its contents. I hav a motiv in this injunction, my boy. You are young, and I think I detect some promis in you. I would fain secure that promis in the service of mankind, for truth, justice, and common sense.

I recommend also for your instruction the specimen number with the preface on phonotype, showing that the barbarous spelling of languages is discreditable to the original perception of the so-called literary men of all ages. There you will see that with a distinctly different shaped letter for each element of the voice, he has re-spelled the words of a small school dictionary according to the sound of the vowels or sonants and modifying power of the consonants, marked the accented syllable, and made them point out the pronunciation of the present barbarously-spelled words of our language more plainly than Walker has done by his tiny figures, or Webster by his points on the vowels, merely by assigning a different letter to each element of the voice.

In conclusion, my dear nephew, I must tell you that in addition to these developments of Mr. Masquerier, I hav been astounded by his explanation of his new science in music. He has found that its alphabet or notation is in as barbarous a state as that of speech; that the mathematics of it is entirely overlooked; that it is the prime or odd numbers divided up to as many even number of parts as are needed for notes, and which avoids semitones. Instead of the staff lines and bungling sharps and flats, he represents the pitch, tune, and accent of notes by degrees of expressed, bold, common-faced figures, and thus writes music in a single line along with the words, while the number of the figures measure the pitch far more simply than the present ones in use. Without exaggeration, I pronounce Mr. Masquerier one of the most advanced geniuses of the age, and yet he is too little known. J. P. K.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions. Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament myths and miracles, with those of heathen nations of antiquity. Considering also their origin and meaning. With numerous illustrations. Cloth, $4.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol., 12 mo., 864 pp., cloth. Illustrated. Price $1.50.

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This history contains Gibbon's theological writings, separate from his historical and miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity.

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the origin of Christianity, is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, and other eminent Christian historians who have edited editions of Gibbon's works; and the pious but scholarly remarks of the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon, are also given in full.

Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

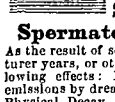
MANHOOD!



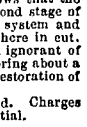
KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

DR. FELLOWS



A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Gems of Thought.

THE religious creeds of the world hav doubtless held it back in the regions of darkness and imperfection for thousands of years; and they hav not been the benefit to mankind which many imagin. The advance of the race would hav been much more rapid, could truth always hav been the guiding star, and not falsehood. It is, however, useless to mourn over the mistakes of the past; "Let bygones be bygones." Our duty and our labor to-day is to come to the truth, direct, and to rid ourselvs of the mistakes of the past with all possible and practicable speed, cultivating, under all circumstances, a spirit of fraternity and a desire to add as much to the welfare and happiness of humanity as in our power.—D. M. Bennett.

WE cannot dispense with ceremonial. After the religion of the early Christians had extirpated the pagan beliefs and pushed old Jupiter off his pedestal, all that was grand and pleasing and suitable in the ancient pagan ceremonial was gradually re-appropriated—the splendid robes, the lofty and magnificent temples, the imposing ritual, the priestly order, the solemn and regularly recurring sacrifice, the feasts and festivals. The old Saturnalia was turned into rollicking Christmas, and Minerva was called the Blessed Virgin. The happy substitution of the clean, inexpensiv wafer for the bleeding lamb and the bleeding bull was the chief external change.—James Parton's Coming Man's Religion.

DOTH any man doubt that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition and unpleasing to themselvs? . . . Howsoever these things are in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it; and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature.—Bacon's Essays.

IT is in his essays alone that the mind of Bacon is brought into immediate contact with the minds of ordinary readers. Then he opens an exoteric school and talks to plain men, in language which everybody understands, about things in which everbody is interested. He has thus enabled those, who otherwise must hav taken his merits on trust, to judge for themselvs; and the great body of readers hav, during several generations, acknowledged that the man who has treated with such consummate ability questions with which they are familiar may well be supposed to deserve all the praise bestowed on him by those who sat in his inner school.—Lord Macaulay's Lord Bacon.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. —Shakspere.

IS it not melancholy, nay ludicrous, to think that men who cry over an attack of rheumatism, who will not permit a woman to be injured, who remonstrate against the execution of a criminal, who raise an outcry against the practice of vivisection whereby surgeons make studies in anatomy by cutting up frogs and cats, are standing out vigorously for a doctrin that condemns millions of their fellow-creatures to agonies unspeakable and endless, and are defending the opinion in the name of the supreme goodness? Could there be a better illustration of the ease with which people allow themselvs to use words without meaning? Could there be a better proof of hollowness and insincerity? Could there be a sharper admonition to the duty of making belief correspond with feelings, and of substituting for the gaudy houses of rhetoric the solid mansions of conviction? To talk about eternal torment is not difficult; to profess belief in it may be possible even for good-natured people, but to think it, to bring it home to reason or heart, is what the stoutest cannot do.—Frothingham's Radical Pulpit.

THE late Rev. F. D. Maurice, at the conclusion of a Bible-class talk, in which Jacob and Esau were declared to be types of the spiritual and natural man, remarked: "As for that matter of the mess of pottage, it only illustrates what has been observed in all ages—the tendency of the spiritual man to become a sneak." Here Maurice has, for once, hit the nail on the head. Jacob was a sneak and a fit type of the sneaks and hypocrits that hav abounded, both in Jewish and Christian churches, in all ages, and that yet swarm in the churches of America and England. Jacob's trick on his poor, old, blind father is unique in the history of the world. I know not how it stands in the calendar, but, in my opinion, Jacob ought to take the place of Mercury and be canonized as the Patron Saint of thieves.—Hylax.

NOBODY loves discrepancy for the sake of discrepancy. But persons who conscientiously believe that free inquiry is, on the whole, beneficial to the interests of truth, and that, from the imperfection of the human faculties, wherever there is much free inquiry, there will be some discrepancy, may, without impropriety, consider such discrepancy, though in itself an evil, as a sign of good. That there are ten thousand thieves in London [1839] is a very melancholy fact. But, looked at in one point of view, it is a reason for exultation. For what other city could maintain ten thousand thieves? What must be the mass of wealth, when the fragments gleaned by lawless pilfering rise to so large an amount? St. Kilda [among the Hebrides] would not support a single pickpocket. The quantity of theft is, to a certain extent, an index of the quantity of useful industry and judicious speculation. And just as we may, from the great number of rogues in a town, infer that much honest gain is made there; so may we often, from the quantity of error in a community, draw a cheering inference as to the degree in which the public mind is turned to those inquiries which can alone lead to rational convictions of truth.—Macaulay's Essays.

Odds and Ends.

AN Elmira man claims to hav buried twenty wives. He was a grave digger, and they were not his own.

"WHY is a young man like a kernel of corn?" asked a young lady. "Because," said another," he turns white when he pops."

IN view of the fact that Solomon had seven hundred wives, the minister of the church he attended must hav had a sort of picnic.

ANANIAS had a bad reputation for truthfulness, but it is to his credit that he never wrote the reports of foreign missionary societies.

IT is not a little curious that when a young man is bent on seeing the world he labors under the hallucination that he can see it better after dark than during the daytime.

A YOUNG man married against the wishes of his parents, and, in telling a friend how to break the news to them, said: "Tell them, first, that I am dead and gently work up the climax."

AN English servant-girl, who had returned from the United States to visit her friends at home, was told that she "looked really aristocratic." To which she responded, "Yes, in America all of us domestics belong to the hire class."

"WHERE are your kids?" a society man asked, looking at the bared hands of a poor but deserving editor at Vanderbilt's party. "At home in bed," was the indignant reply. "Do you suppose I'd bring my children to a party like this?"

A PARTY of young men dined sumptuously at a restaurant, and each one insisted on paying the bill. To decide the matter it was proposed to blindfold the waiter, and the first one caught should pay the bill. He hasn't caught any of them yet.

THE belief that the people of Pompeii cultivated watermelons is strengthened by the discovery in the recent excavations there of a man with his hands clasped across his stomach. There was nothing, however, to indicate that he was of African descent.

THE music-master says very affably: "Now, you see, children, in a march we always hav four beats to a measure, to accommodate the step; for I don't know anything that has three feet, except perhaps a milking-stool." "Or a yard-stick," adds a bright girl in the back row.

"WHY so gloomy this morning, Jacob?" "Ah my poor leetle Penjamin Levi—he is tead!" "Dead! You surprise me. How did it happen?" "Vell, you see, my leetle Penjamin he vas at der synagog to say his brayers, and a poy put in his het at der toor and gries, 'Job lot!' and leetle Penjamin—he vas gilt in der grush."

TWO learned but despondent university professors met not long ago at an afternoon coffee, and dined sympathetically together in a corner. "What a world this would be without coffee," said one. "Yes," replied the other, stirring the fragrant cup in a dejected aspect; "yes, but what a hell of a world it is with coffee!"

SHE looked so sweet as down the street
She tripped, a winsome fairy;
The wintry air toyed with her hair
Mischievously, oh, very!
A smile of pride ten inches wide
Enveloped all her features,
And those she met pronounced the pet
The fairest of earth's creatures.
On, on she tripped until she slipped
And sat her down with vigor!
What cared she then for jeers of men,
Or for the winter's rigor?
For with a cry and tear-dimmed eye,
And with a wild endeavor
To rise again, she cried in pain:
"My bustle's wrecked forever!"

—Duluth Tribune.

"MA," exclaimed an inquisitiv youth about six years old, "do you love Jesus?"

"Of course, my son; we all love him."

"Did you ever see him?"

"No, my son; but I often read about him in the holy Bible."

"Then do you love Brigham Young, too?"

"I don't know; I guess not."

"Why don't you know? You often read about him in the paper to us. He had so many wives, and lots of other women loved him so much, I should think you could love him, too."

"But, my son, Jesus was the son of God, the creator of all things out of nothing."

"Did he make me out of nothing?"

"Yes, he made us all out of nothing."

"How could he make me out of nothing?"

"It is all strange, but he can do anything, my son."

"Ma, if he can do anything, what for did he make Ingersoll and all other bad men that do not love him?"

"I don't know, but I guess he made a mistake. Don't bother me any more."

"When he made Ingersoll I expect he thought he was making a twin brother to Talmage, didn't he?"

"I don't know. Don't bother me any more, I tell you. I can't work and answer questions. Study your Sunday-school lesson and learn to be a good boy."

After looking over his lesson a little he found in it, "The mouth of strange woman is a deep: he that is abhorred of the Lord shall fall therein" (Prov. xxii, 14).

"Ma," he inquired, "if I should be abhorred of the Lord, and a strange woman came along, do you think I would fall therein?"

"Oh, I guess not, if you are a good boy and fear the Lord."

"But how can I fear the Lord, ma? If I don't fear him will I fall in his mouth, too?"

"No, my son; you don't understand your lesson."

"I know I don't understand it, and wish you would explain it to me, so I won't fall into the strange woman's mouth."

"You may go and play with the boys if you want to."

Sometimes a small boy cornereth the righteous.

Introduced to the People of the United States His MAGNETIC GARMENTS
For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medical Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the
Wilsona Magnetic Garments
After all other Treatment has failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.
Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.
With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.
BY D. M. BENNETT,
Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.
Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.
Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peeples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a
Freethinker's History of the World.
This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,
The oldest reform journal in the United States,
Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,
By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.
Edited by HORACE SEAVER.
PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.
The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 3m38

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Vol. 10. No. 19. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, May 12, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A CLERGYMAN advertising for employment during his vacation months says he is "not particular as to latitude—east, west, north, or south."

THERE is much truth in a statement attributed to Cardinal Newman that some preachers are "like men who lash the waters to frighten the fish when they hav made no preparation to catch them."

SOME of the congregation of a Moss Point, Miss., church put eggs instead of money in the contribution box. The Rochester Post-Express thinks this is rather a strange way of "giving to the Lord," but good fresh eggs are acceptable to anybody.

SAYS the Jewish Times: "Dr. Erlenmeyer has just given an erudite lecture to prove that the ancient Hebrews were a left-handed people. Whether the race was originally left-handed or not, it cannot be denied that a few left-handed gentry still survive."

A PENNSYLVANIA Protectionist was shocked when he went to church the other day and heard the minister announce that salvation was free. Next day he sat down and wrote to his congressman asking why in the mischief he allowed it to escape the tariff bill.

IT is sad to hear a religious society singing, "When I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies," when you reflect upon the lamentable fact that they hav not got so far as to be able to read a clear title of their church mansion on earth.—Boston Transcript.

"SHALL we wear a silk hat?" was the subject of a lecture by a Brooklyn divine, recently. Yes, sir, if it is becoming to you. But we imagin that a minister who would choose such a subject to lecture upon might look better in one of the pancake style.—Rochester Post-Express.

A CHURCH in a Western town has secured the patronage of all the young ladies in the place by introducing single seats which revolve on pivots. Young ladies can examin toilets in any part of the house without dislocating their necks, almost. Thus piety and comfort go hand in hand.—The Judge.

"MR. SANCTUS, I see that you enjoy a pipe when you are out of the pulpit?" "Very much, very much, sir!" "So it appears; and what do you prefer to hav in it, as a rule?" "Shortcut, sir, shortcut, by all means." "Indeed! and if you're so fond of shortcut, why don't you put a little of it in your sermons?" —Yonkers Gazette.

STATISTICS show an increase in civil or non-religious funerals in Paris. In April, 1881, the proportion of such funerals to the total number was 16 per cent; in April, 1882, this proportion had risen to 21 per cent; and in February of this year to 24 per cent. In a single arrondissement—the tenth—the proportion was as high as 44 per cent.

"WE hav from time to time," observes the Chinese-American, "observed noble efforts on the part of the Christians, looking to the securing of new churches, new and expensiv cathedrals, new Bibles, and now new prayer-books. The next thing in order, and which will make the Christian just as good as the heathen, will be to hav some new Gods."

MR. GLADSTONE has spoken with great emphasis and eloquence in favor of allowing all members-elect of the House of Commons who may hav conscientious scruples upon the subject to affirm instead of taking the prescribed oath, and it is said that his attitude upon this question will impair his popularity, and weaken, if not annihilate, his political ascendancy. It will not be very creditable to the intelligence or fair-mindedness of the Liberal voters should the premier's wise and courageous conduct be attended by any such result. In this connection the oath is a superfluous and incongruous relic of medieval superstition, and to make it the prerequisit of any one's admission to a seat to which he has been legally elected is an absurd anachronism. The constituency which elects a Bradlaugh has as much right as any other to be represented by the man of its choice.

REV. MR. BEECHER, in a letter to Mr. Barnum, declares that he likes to go to a circus at least once a week. A great many old boys feel the same way. Mr. Beecher, being obliged to preach every Sunday himself, is unable to attend Rev. Mr. Talmage's greatest show on—that is, he may object to attending a circus on the Sabbath.—Norristown Herald.

"M'RIA, I heerd de boss readin' from de paper dis mawnin' dat there's gwine ter be a change in de ministery in England. I spec some ob dem ar ministers hab been foolin' aroun' somebody's premises when de husban' an' fader was way down in de cotton patch, an' dat's kase why dey change dem. M'ria, dis should be a wa'nin to ye, for we am all wums, an' we should profit by de 'struction dis lesson 'fords."

AT a late weekly meeting of the Baptist ministers it was agreed to send a petition to Judge Thayer asking him to reconsider the sentence of Rev. Henry Lösch, who was convicted of stealing a book from a store on Tenth street, this city. Dr. Rowland stated that the reverend gentleman only entered the store, and as the proprietor, with whom he was acquainted, was engaged, he took a book, meaning to hav it charged when he returned the next time!

THE mystery of evil and good: Little Mollie was caught by her mother stealing apples from the tree, and severely rebuked. Her mother told her she must not touch those apples, as she was going to make preserves of them. On the following Sunday little Mollie's school teacher asked her why God forbade Adam and Eve to eat of the tree in the midst of the garden. "Because he wanted to make preserves of the apples," was the childish reply.—Texas Siftings.

THIS anecdote comes from Scotland. Two fishermen, Jamie and Sandy, belated and befogged on a rough water, were in some trepidation lest they should never get ashore again. At last Jamie said, "Sandy, I'm steering, and I think you'd better put up a bit of prayer." Sandy said, "I don't know how." Jamie said, "If ye don't I'll just chuck ye overboard.' Sandy began, "O Lord, I never asked anything of ye for fifteen years, and if ye'll only get us safe back I'll never trouble ye again." "Whist, Sandy," said Jamie, "the boat's touched shore; don't be beholden to anybody."

A GOOD old Methodist parson in Illinois attempted to plow a little the other day, his hired man having failed to appear. He worked away for awhile, geeing and hawing, with a good heart, but at last he threw himself under a tree, and, as he wiped the perspiration from his glowing face, gave utterance to the following soliloquy: "About the only true way of testing the religious qualities of a preacher is to let him plow half a day with a yoke of oxen. If he don't commence to swear at them in less than fifteen or twenty minutes his 'solidity' with the promised land is to be envied."

PRESIDENT BASCOM of the University of Wisconsin declares that after an experience of ten years in large college classes he is convinced that coeducation is pre-eminently the fitting method of training our youth. President Seelye of Amherst thinks that the coeducation of the sexes in our American colleges is not desirable. President Robinson of Brown is not prepared to favor the admission of young women to that university. President Welling of the Columbian University at Washington thinks that the problem of coeducation is one that each college must solve for itself, as the success and failure of the experiment in different institutions is evidence of the influence of different conditions. President White of Cornell has no time to express his views. President Eliot of Harvard does not think that the young men and the young women from fifteen to twenty are best educated together in intimate association, but that method may nevertheless be justifiable in a community which does not afford anything better. President Caldwell of Vassar would be glad to see the experiment tried in a college containing nearly an equal number of both sexes, but is glad that Vassar is not to make the experiment.

DR. WOOD, of Constantinople, lately wrote a pamphlet called "Irrefutable Truths." The doctor was in love with his title, for, as he argued, "it contains, as in a nutshell, the whole character and description of my argument from major through minor premises to triumphant conclusion." "But," retorted the Turk Unbeliever, "if your pamphlet is irrefutable, what about our Koran? If we admit that you are right and that we are wrong we may excite all true Osmanlis against the Commander of the Faithful. You must change your title, O follower of the cross." The doctor fought for his title. His heart was in it, as you can well understand; but he was obliged to submit, and his excellent pamphlet appeared under a less convincing designation. This kind of censorship is particularly inconvenient for persons in remote localities. Thus, a parcel of books from Europe consigned to Kerasund must be re-shipped to Trebizond, a hundred miles off, to be inspected by the pasha's dragoman. From Trebizond it may be sent to Constantinople; so that last month's Fortnightly Review may reach its lawful owner some time between this and next Christmas. Every book or magazine in which the word Turkey occurs is sure to be detained, unless, of course, it is addressed to some influential person, such as a consul or embassador, who is in a position to make a noise in the world if his goods are trifled with. "These," said a provincial governor lately, "are our orders from Constantinople, and we must enforce them in these times particularly."—Armenian Correspondence of the London News.

SPEAKING of the general acceptance of Darwinism, Longman's Magazine says: "As a race, we are beginning to overcome, by an exercise of robust common sense, the feeble foibles and objections which in the early days of Mr. Darwin's fame were urged against any approaches on the part of our 'poor relations.' The social prejudices which still exist here and there, and which are engendered chiefly by popular studies of quadrumanous manners at the Zoo, hav died away in sensible and unprejudiced minds. The great discovery—only made, it should be added, after nearly a quarter of a century of misconception—that Mr. Darwin and his friends did not recognize in the gorilla or orang even a far-off cousin of humanity, brought a sense of deep consolation and comfort to many minds. The additional statement that the kinship between man and apes was limited to an ancient connection placed very far back on the tree of life, and existent long before men were men, or even respectable monkeyhood had appeared, conveyed still deeper satisfaction. The attitude of objectors to the scientific exposition of man's place in nature has thus undergone a material change. It is no longer deemed heretical to assert our near relations with the quadruped stock; and no social ostracism is involved in the intelligent acceptation of even the furthest conclusions advanced by the upholders of the theory of evolution. There are not a few persons, in truth, who at first, alarmed by the apparently incongruous declarations of man's kinship with lower forms, expected a fearful fall from the secure position of human dignity; such persons, to quote Mr. Leslie Stephen's remark, having found that after all they were hanging not on the brink of a vast precipice, but from a rocky ledge with the toes, all unknown to themselvs, nearly touching the ground. And we hav heard of still more cheerfully disposed people, who, finding to their relief that humanity and its affairs remain perfectly undisturbed by Mr. Darwin's views, became converted to scientific ways of thinking, and even contrived to find a cheerful proof of man's lower kinship in the metaphorical declaration of Job that man is the descendant of the worm."

A PRINTER died in New York last week worth $40,000, which he had saved by miserly habits. He was a compositor. He died without heirs or friends.

GOV. BUTLER has secured the removal of the superintendent of the Tewksbury almshouse, the board of charities having decided that he has been derelict in his duties.

THE steamship Alaska, which arrived in New York from Queenstown last Saturday, made the fastest passage west on record, the time being 6 days 23 hours 48 minutes.

A MORMON wife has entered a complaint of bigamy against her husband who had beat her, and he has been held in $25,000 bail. The wife was also placed under bonds as a witness.

A NEW YORK doctor named Gage, who advertises himself as "the man celebrated for his wonderful cures in New Hampshire," was recently arrested in Dover, N. H., for practicing medicin without a license.

AN application was made on Friday, the 4th, for the release of Freeman, the Pocasset child murderer, who killed his daughter while under religious excitement, on the ground that he is now a sane man. The judge refused the application.

TRUE bills for murder hav been found against Fenians Peter Tynan (Number One), John Walsh, and P. J. Sheridan, as accessories to the Phenix Park assassinations. All three of the men are in America, and England will demand their extradition.

LAST Sunday was the finest day of the season. Everybody around New York, who could, went out of doors, and a few hundred took excursions by water. The Penal Code has been so amended in this city as to be without any practical restraint on the pleasure-seeking proclivities of the people.

A CARLOAD of Indians, who were traveling from Fort Walsh to Quappelle, was ditched near the latter place. The Indians thought the engineer caused the accident for the purpose of killing them, and they chased him two miles threatening to take his scalp. The interference of the chief alone prevented bloodshed. Several Indians were injured.

BEN HOGAN, the reformed prize-fighter, assisted by his wife, was holding Christian temperance meetings in Chicago, but Mrs. Hogan married another man during her husband's temporary absence, and the usefulness of the couple in the cause of Christ and temperance has been seriously impaired thereby. The ladies in the society hav notified Mrs. Hogan that her presence is no longer desired.

The Sabbath.—Concluded.

IS THERE ANY AUTHORITY FOR SUNDAY KEEPING? STATEMENTS OF THE BIBLE, CHRIST, AND THE BEST ACCREDITED CHURCH HISTORIANS.

Having the plain, straight, clear testimony of God, Christ, and the evangelists, we now take that of the most distinguished church historians and eminent divines. And for once, perhaps on this one only subject, we shall find they all agree; and it is the only subject on which they do agree. We shall confine our testimony to generally admitted first-class church historians, themselvs observers of Sunday. So the evidence we present is the admissions of opponents, and in every case giv authority—page, section, chapter, etc.

Neander (the most distinguished of church historians):

"The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance; and it was far from the intention of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect—far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday. Perhaps at the end of the second century a false application of this kind had begun to take place; for men appear by that time to hav considered laboring on Sunday as a sin" (Rose's Neander, p. 186).

The North British Review in a labored attempt to justify the observance of Sunday by Christians, styles that day:

"The wild solar holiday (i. e., festival in honor of the sun) of all pagan times" (vol xviii, p. 400).

"That very day was the Sunday of their heathen neighbors and respectiv countrymen, and patriotism gladly united with expediency in making it at once their Lord's day and their Sabbath" (vol. xviii, p. 409).

Verstegan:

"The most ancient Germans being pagans, and having appointed their first day of the week to the peculiar adoration of the sun, whereof that day doth yet in our English tongue retain the name of Sunday, and appointed the next day unto the especial adoration of the moon, whereof it yet retaineth with us the name Monday" (Verstegan's "Antiquities," p. 10; London, 1628).

We derive our names for the days of the week from the Saxons.

First day, named in honor of their chief god, the Sun; hence Sun's-day, or Sunday.

Second day, named in honor of the moon; hence Moon's-day, or Monday.

Third day, named in honor of the German hero Tuisco; hence Tuisco-day, or Tuesday.

Fourth day, named in honor of the god of battle, Woden; hence Woden's-day, or Wednesday.

Fifth day, named in honor of the god of weather, Thor; hence Thor's-day, or Thursday.

Sixth day, named in honor of the goddess of peace and plenty, Friga; hence Friga-day, or Friday.

Seventh day, named in honor of the god of freedom, Seator; hence Seator-day, or Saturday.

Jennings (declares the adoration of the sun more ancient than the deliverance of Israel from Egypt):

"The idolatrous nations, in honor to their chief god, the sun, began the day at his rising."

"The day which the heathens in general consecrated to worship, in honor of their chief god, the sun" ("Jewish Antiquities," book 3, chap. 1).

Morer (distinguished historian of the church of England):

"The primitiv Christians had a great veneration for the Sabbath, and spent the day in devotions and sermons. And it is not to be doubted but they derived this practice from the apostles themselvs" (Morer's Dialogs on the Lord's day, p. 189).

"The Lord's day had no command that it should be sanctified, but it was left to God's people to pitch on this or that day for the public worship. And being taken up and made a day of meeting for religious exercises; yet for three hundred years there was no law to bind them to it" (Ibid, p. 233).

Speaking of how we obtained the name Sunday, he says:

"It is not to be denied but we borrow the name of this day from the ancient Greeks and Romans, and we allow that the old Egyptians worshiped the sun; and as a standing memorial of their veneration dedicated this day to him" (Ibid, p. 22).

Lyman Coleman:

"The last day of the week was strictly kept in connection with that of the first day, for a long time after the overthrow of the temple and its worship. Down even to the fifth century the observance of the Jewish Sabbath was continued in the Christian church, but with a rigor and solemnity gradually diminishing until it was wholly discontinued" ("Ancient Christianity Exemplified," chap. xxvi, sec. 2).

Bishop Jeremy Taylor (a decided opponent of the Sabbath):

"The Lord's day did not succeed in the place of the Sabbath, but the Sabbath was wholly abrogated, and the Lord's day was merely an ecclesiastical institution. It was not introduced by virtue of the fourth commandment, because they for almost three hundred years together kept that day which was in that commandment" (Doctor Dubitantium, part i, book 2, chap. ii, sec. 51).

"The primitiv Christians did all manner of works upon the Lord's day, even in the time of persecution; when they are strictest observers of all divine commands; but in this they knew there was none, and therefore when Constantine the emperor had made an edict against working upon the Lord's day, yet he excepts, and still permitted all agriculture or labors of the husbandman whatsoever" (Ibid, sec. 59).

Edward Brerewood (professor of Gresham College, London; Episcopalian):

"The ancient Sabbath did remain, and was observed, together with the celebration of the Lord's day, by the Christians of the East church, above three hundred years after our savior's death; and besides that, no other day for more hundred years than I spoke of before was known in the church by the name of Sabbath but that" ("Learned Treatis of the Sabbath," p. 77; ed. 1631).

"The name of the Sabbath remained appropriated to the old Sabbath, and was never attributed to the Lord's day; not for many hundred years after our savior's time" (Ibid).

Sir William Domville:

"Centuries of the Christian era passed away before the Sunday was observed as a Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the sabbatical edict of Constantine in A.D. 321" (Domville's "Examination of the Six Texts," p. 291).

"Not any ecclesiastical writer for the first three centuries attributed the origin of Sunday observance either to Christ or to his apostles" (Ibid, Supplement, pp. 6, 7).

Prynne:

"It is certain that Christ himself, his apostles, and the primitiv Christians for some good space of time did constantly observe the seventh-day Sabbath. The evangelists and St. Luke, in the Acts, ever styling it 'the Sabbath day,' and making mention of its solemnization by the apostles and other Christians; it being still solemnized by many Christians after the apostles' times, even till the Council of Laodicea, A.D. 364" ("Dissertations on the Lord's Day Sabbath," p. 33; published 1633).

"The seventh-day Sabbath was solemnized by Christ, the apostles, and primitiv Christians till the Laodicean Council did in a manner quite abolish the observation of it" (Ibid, p. 44),

Kitto:

"Though in later times we find considerable reference to a sort of consecration of the day, it does not seem at any period of the ancient church to hav assumed the form of such an observance as some modern religious communities hav contended for. Nor do these writers in any instance pretend to allege any divine command, or even apostolic practice, in support of it" (Cyc. Bib. Lit., Art. "Lord's Day)."

Heylyn:

"Take which you will, either the fathers or the moderns, and we shall find no Lord's day instituted by any apostolic mandate—no Sabbath set on foot by them upon the first day of the week" (Hist. Sabbath, part ii, chap. i, sec. 10).

We now present the translation of the celebrated edict of Constantine—the original fountain of first-day authority. The original edict may be seen in the library of Harvard College.

"Let all the judges and town people and the occupation of all trades rest on the venerable day of the sun, but let those who are situated in the country freely and at full liberty attend to the business of agriculture, because it often happens that no other day is so fit for sowing corn and planting vines; lest the critical moment being let slip, men should lose the commodities granted by heaven" (Encyclopedia Britannica; Art. "Sunday").

Millman, the learned editor of Gibbon, testifies:

"The rescript commanding the celebration of the Christian Sabbath bears no allusion to its peculiar sanctity as a Christian institution. It is the day of the sun which is to be observed by the general veneration" (Hist. Christianity, book iii, chap. i).

Mosheim, whom the majority of Sunday-keepers regard as authority equaled only by the New Testament, says:

"The first day of the week, which was the ordinary and stated time for the public assemblies of the Christians, was in consequence of a peculiar law enacted by Constantine observed with greater solemnity than it had formerly been" (Eccl. Hist., cent. 4, part ii, chap. iv, sec. 5).

The influence of Constantine powerfully contributed to aid those church leaders who were intent upon bringing the forms of pagan worship into the Christian church. Gibbon thus places upon record the motivs of the holy fathers of the church and the result of their action in "Decline and Fall," chap. xxviii:

"The most respectable bishops had persuaded themselvs that the ignorant rustics would more cheerfully renounce the superstition of paganism if they found some resemblance, some compensation, in the bosom of Christianity."

The body of nominal Christians which resulted from this strange union of pagan rites with Christian worship arrogated to itself the title of Catholic church, while those who resisted these unscriptural, dangerous innovations were branded as heretics, and cast out of the church.

The history of the Dark Ages is full of the edicts and decrees of popes, bishops, and councils, all directed to the one object—of establishing the sacredness of Sunday. Banishment, confiscation of goods, stripes, slavery; the loss of one hand, and then of the other; the chaining a number of persistent Sabbath-keepers (who dared to deny the authority of the holy Roman Catholic church to change the day to Sunday) to a row of iron pillars, and boring out the left eye of the poor wretches with a red-hot auger unless they recanted. The executioner would go down the line accompanied by the priest. If any still refused to recant and pledge to obey the church, their right eye was bored out. These were the gentle, loving persuasions of the Christians to secure the observance of Sunday.

To strengthen the sacredness of this venerable day Heylyn informs us:

"It was delivered of the souls in purgatory by Petrus Damiani, who lived A.D. 1056, that every Lord's day they were manumitted from their pains and fluttered up and down the lake avenues in the shape of birds" (Hist. Sab., part ii, chap. v, sec. 2).

And they taught hell itself could be benefited if those yet living upon earth would only keep Sunday well.

Morer:

"Yet still the others went on their way, and to induce their proselytes to spend the day with greater exactness and care, they brought in the old argument of compassion and charity to the damned in hell, who during the day hav some respit from their torments; and the ease and liberty they hav is more or less according to the zeal and degrees of keeping it well" ("Dialogues on the Lord's Day," p. 68).

In 1095 Pope Urban consecrated the Sabbath to the weekly service of the Virgin Mary.

In the very middle of the Dark Ages, when the papal power had reached its highest elevation, Pope Innocent the Third found the people of Great Britain stubborn and rebellious, keeping the Sabbath, and refusing to abstain from labor or regard as holy the great venerable day of the sun, which, by the infallible power of the holy church that cannot err, had been substituted for the God-given, Christ-indorsed Sabbath. Therefore in 1202 he sent into England one Eustachius, abbot of Flaye in Normandy, with a holy mandate, a roll which fell from heaven, containing the so-much-needed divine authority for Sunday. This holy mandate, or ready-written scroll, was declared to hav come down from heaven unto Jerusalem—and was found on St. Simeon's alter in Golgotha, were Christ was crucified—which lying three days and three nights, struck with such terror all that saw it that, falling on the ground, they besought God's mercy; this roll was taken to the pope and by him, in possession of Eustachius, sent to England. We hav really better proof that this miraculous scroll was written by Jesus, and rained down from heaven, than can be furnished that any part of the Bible, Old or New Testament, was written by direction of God, or even by the persons whose names are attached to the various books.

Hoveden (Roger Hoveden was a historian of high repute, who lived at the very time when this much-needed precept was furnished by the pope) informs us Eustace, the abbot of Flaye in Normandy, came into England in the year 1200 to preach, and was very earnest in behalf of Sunday.

"At London also, and many other places throughout England, he effected by his preaching that from that time forward people did not dare to hold market of things exposed for sale on the Lord's day" (Roger de Hoveden's Annals, Bohn's ed., vol. ii., page 487).

It seems, however, the prelates of England opposed him in this, demanding authority for the change; so he returned to Normandy, but returned the following year with the needed proof.

"In the same year, 1201, Eustace, abbot of Flaye, returned to England, and preaching therein the word of the Lord from city to city, and from place to place, forbade any person to hold a market of goods on sale upon the Lord's day. For he said that the commandment under written, as to the observance of the Lord's day, came down from heaven: The holy commandment as to the Lord's day, which came from heaven to Jerusalem, and was found upon the altar of Saint Simeon, in Golgotha, where Christ was crucified for the sins of the world. The Lord sent down this epistle, which was found upon the altar of Saint Simeon, and after looking upon which three days and three nights, some men fell upon the earth, imploring mercy of God. And after the third hour, the patriarch arose, and Acharias, the archbishop, and they opened the scroll, and received the holy epistle from God. And when they had taken the same, they found this writing therein:

"I am the Lord, who commanded you to observe the holy day of the Lord, and ye hav not kept it, and hav not repented of your sins. As I hav said in my gospel 'heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.' Whereas I caused to be preached unto you repentance and amendment of life, you did not believe me. I hav sent against you the pagans, who hav shed your blood on the earth; and yet you hav not believed; and because you did not keep the Lord's day holy, for a few days you suffered hunger, but soon I gave you fulness, and after that you did still worse again. Once more, it is my will that no one, from the ninth hour on Saturday until sunrise on Monday, shall do any work, except that which is good.

"And if any person shall do so, he shall with penance make amends for the same. And if you do not pay obedience to this command, verily I say unto you, and I swear unto you by my seat, and by my throne, and by the cherubim who watch my holy seat, that I will giv you my commands by no other epistle, but I will open the heavens, and for rain I will rain upon you stones, and wood, and hot water, in the night, that no one may take precautions against the same, and that so I may destroy all wicked men. This do I say unto you; for the Lord's holy day you shall die the death; and for the other festivals of my saints which you hav not kept, I will send unto you beasts that hav the heads of lions, the hair of women, the tails of camels, and they shall be so ravenous that they shall devour your flesh, and you shall long to flee away to the tombs of the dead, and to hide yourselvs for fear of the beasts; and I will take away the light of the sun from before your eyes, and will send darkness upon you, that, not seeing, you may slay one another, and that I may remove from you my face, and may not show mercy upon you. For I will burn the bodies and the hearts of you, and of all of those who do not keep as holy the day of the Lord.

"Hear ye my voice, that so ye may not perish in the land, for the holy day of the Lord. Depart from evil, and show repentance for your sins. For if you do not do so, even as Sodom and Gomorrah shall you perish. Now know ye that you are saved by the prayers of my most holy mother Mary, and of my most holy angels, who pray for you daily."

There is much more of the same sort, but lack of space forbids quoting more. Mark the fact, the seventh day was kept; the first day was not observed as the Sabbath by Christians; this as late as 1201 A.D. That this silly document was actually taken to England, miracles followed its reading, and that it caused the people to adopt Sunday as Sabbath, there is superabundance of testimony. We cannot take time to quote, but refer to Matt. Paris's Historia Major, pp. 200, 201, ed. 1640; "Binius Councils," ad. ann. 1201, vol. iii, pp. 1448, 1449; Wilkins's Concilia Magnæ Britaniæ et Hibernæ, vol. i, pp. 510, 511; London, 1737; Sir David Dalrymple's "Historical Memorials," pp. 7, 8, ed. 1769; Heylyn's "Hist. Sabbath," part ii, chap. vii, sec. 5; Morer's "Lord's Day," pp. 288–290; Hessey's "Sunday," pp. 90 and 321; Gilfillan's "Sabbath," p. 399.

Morer and Heylyn declare that the next year after the arrival of Eutachius in England with this roll, 1203, a council was held in Scotland concerning the introduction and establishment of the Lord's day in that kingdom. The roll that had fallen from heaven to supply the lack of scriptural testimony in behalf of this day was admirably adapted to the business of this council. Although Dr. Heylyn informs us that the Scotch were so ready to comply with the pope's wishes, it was not needed.

About the year 1214 a parliament at Scone by Alexander the Third, king of the Scotts, enacted that none should fish in any waters from Saturday after evening prayer till sunrise on Monday, which was afterward confirmed by King James the First.

Bamfield, in his "Enquiry," page 3, says:

"The princes of England in 1203 would not agree to change the Sabbath and keep first day (or Sunday); but in the tenth year of King John the pope excommunicated him, and the king was forced at last to lay down his crown at the feet of Mandulphus, the pope's agent. After being thus humbled, he removed in the tenth year of his reign the markets in the city of Exon from Sunday to Monday.

"Henry III. ordered the removal of all markets from first day to other days.

"The Parliament of England met on Sundays until the time of Richard II.

"In 1223 a synod was held in Oxford by Stephen, Archbishop of Canterbury, where they determined Sunday should be kept with veneration, and a fast upon the Sabbath.

"The first law made in England by the Parliament for keeping Sunday was made in the time of Edward VI. in the year 1470 A.D."

Testimony of distinguished churchmen, ancient and modern:

Zwingle:

"It is lawful on the Lord's day, after divine service, for any man to pursue his labor" (Cox's "Sabbath Laws," p. 287).

Beza:

"No cessation of work on the Lord's day is required of Christians" (Ibid, p. 286).

Bucer:

"And doth not only call it a superstition, but an apostasy from Christ, to think that working on the Lord's day in itself considered is a sinful thing" (Ibid).

Cranmer, in his Catechism, published 1548:

"We now keep no more the Sabbath on Saturday, as the Jews do; but we observe the Sunday, and certain other days as the magistrates do judge convenient, whom in this thing we ought to obey."

Tyndale, who gave us the first English version of the Bible:

"As for the Sabbath, we be lords over the Sabbath, and may yet change it into Monday, or into any other day as we see need, or make every tenth day holy day, only if we see cause why" (Tyndale's "Answer to Moore," book i, chap. xxv).

John Calvin:

"However, the ancients hav not without sufficient reason substituted what we call the Lord's day in the room of the Sabbath" (Calvin's "Ins. of Chris. Rel.," book ii, chap. viii, sec. 34).

Adam Clarke (vol. iv, p. 539; col. ii, 17):

"There is no intimation here that the Sabbath was done away, or that its moral use was superseded by the introduction of Christianity. I hav shown elsewhere that 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy,' is a command of perpetual obligation, and can never be superseded but by the final termination of time."

Albert Barnes (Matt. v, 19):

"'Shall be called great.' He that teaches that all the law of God is binding, and that all of it should be obeyed, without attempting to specify what is most important, shall be a teacher worthy of his office—shall teach the truth, and shall be called great. We learn hence:

"1. That all the law of God is binding on Christians.

"2. That all the commands of God should be preached in their proper place by Christian ministers.

"3. That they who pretend that there are any laws of God so small that they need not obey them, are unworthy of his kingdom.

"4. That true piety has respect to all the commandments of God, and keeps them" (Psalms cxix, 6).

John Wesley, in his sermon on Matt. v, 17, 19, bitterly denounces those who would seek to change one jot or tittle of the law—that is, the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t.

We hav shown there is no authority for Sunday observance in the Bible (Old or New Testament)—no authority or requirement for its observance by God, Christ, or the apostles; that the only authority for keeping Sunday holy is the heathen sun-worshipers, the pope of Rome, and the Romish church.

We giv two extracts from Roman Catholic catechism:

"Question.—What is this day of rest?

"Answer.—The seventh day of the week, or Saturday" (Gen. ii, 2, 3).

"Q.—It is then Saturday we should sanctify in order to obey God?

"A.—During the old law Saturday was the day sanctified; but the church, instructed by Jesus Christ and directed by the spirit of God, has substituted Sunday for Saturday" (Cath. Cat. of Religion).

"How prove you that the church hath powers to command feasts and holy days?

"A.—By the very act of changing the Sabbath, which the Protestants allow of.

"How prove you that?

"A.—Because by keeping Sunday they acknowledged the church's power to ordain feasts and to command them under sin" (Abridgment of Chris. Doct., p. 59).

We hav also given the declarations of the reformers and leading divines that there is no authority for Sunday keeping; that Sunday keeping is only of comparativ modern date among Christians, and was unknown as a Sabbath for more than three hundred years after Christ.

We ask the learned doctors of divinity, we ask all honest Christians, for simple, honest answers to the following simple questions.

1. Will the reason, because God rested on that day (Ex. xx, 11), apply to any other day?

2. Did God ever bless or sanctify Sunday, the first day?

3. Is the day holy because church creeds and priests and ministers call it so, or because God made it so?

4. Can you find the text—a "thus saith the Lord," or even an intimation, that God ever took away the blessing which he put on the seventh day?

5. When and where can we find the record that God givs us the seventh day and tells us we may now use it as a working or secular day?

6. Does the New Testament ever call the first day holy?

7. Where in the New Testament is the name Sabbath applied to first day or Sunday?

8. As the New Testament declares there is no transgression where there is no law (Rom. iv, 15; 1 John iii, 4), what sin is committed by working on Sunday?

9. Is it not a wicked perversion of scripture to take the name of "Sabbath" from seventh day, and bestow it on Sunday, the first day?

10. If the name "Sabbath" were no longer applied to first day, but it should simply be called "First Day," as it is in the Bible, would it not soon lose all sacredness in the eyes of the people?

11. If the Bible is true, how can you hope to escape the penalty of making the commandments of God of none effect by your tradition? (Mark vii, 5, 13).

12. Since we hav been so basely deceived and deluded in regard to the sacredness of Sunday, which all Christians hav united in teaching we must revere as most holy, and to violate which must insure our everlasting doom, why should we any longer accept the Bible, Christ, the trinity, the plan of salvation, or any other dogma or tenet of Christianity, which are regarded no more sacred or essential to salvation than observance of Sunday as the Sabbath? Cadit quæstio!

We rejoice in the faith that the world is growing tired of sects and disgusted with sectarianism—that the masses are beginning to dare to investigate and think for themselvs, and, realizing the myths and errors they hav been led to reverence, will now discard them, and henceforth act on their own convictions.

Dear Christian friends, is it not time to rise out of the deep ruts of superstition, bigotry, and blind faith; to look and see for yourselvs, instead of only through the eyes of priests and ministers?

We desire to zealously defend Sunday as a day of rest, recreation, amusement, and instruction. It is the weekly rest-day made for man—by man—before the idea of Christ or Christianity was first conceived. We would hav the citizen of the crowded city, the shop, and factory, seek the green fields, the woods, the streams; the tired out-door laborer recline at ease, enjoy reading and conversation with family and friends, or seek the concert or lecture hall, as inclination prompts. In short, the day should be sacredly observed in seeking comfort, health, and recreation, mental and physical; each and all free to spend its hours as inclination prompts, untrammeled by aught but the great first principle of Liberalism, "Do as you would be done by, and in seeking your own pleasure be careful and sure not to infringe on the rights of any other."

Let true Liberalism hav free course, and it shall glorify mankind. We shall hav a religion free from forms that fetter, clear of the cant that kills; a religion that incites love for all that is highest, holiest, and best; without slavish fear, or adhesion to creeds abounding in absurdities and contradictions, demanding faith in impossibilities; a religion that makes righteousness (right doing) rational, true manhood divine, freedom secure, and charity universal.

DEACON JONES is one of our self-poised men. While at his evening devotions, a gun was fired beneath his window. The deacon jumped to his feet like a jack-in-the-box. But he recovered his equanimity in an instant, and quietly remarked: "I don't know whether that fellow killed his prey or not, but I know that he spoiled mine."—Boston Transcript.

How to Solve the Problem.

Could we extend our vision backward through the endless ages of the past, in search of a beginning, then, as now, we would find it bounded by the same ethereal ocean of constituent elements, existing in the double condition that constitutes the sexes, studded with the same system of worlds that now greet our vision, deriving their existence and sustenence from the elements in which they exist, and as a whole, subject to the same laws of production and reproduction as their constituent parts or outgrowths; and further, that the same law that makes higher numbers by combination of lower ones; makes higher grades of being by combination of lower ones, that the higher could in no case exist independent of the lower. In the early settlement of our country, the Indians when taking prisoners sometimes tied them to a tree face outward and threw tomahawks at them to see how near they could come to them and not hit them. This seems to hav been the object of the leaders of thought, to see how near they could come to the truth and not hit it. Thus far in the history of our planet belief that the sexes, under the various names of cause and effect, spirit and matter, male and female, etc., etc., are distinct entities, the one sovereign, the other subject, has held full control without a shadow of evidence drawn from organic law to sustain it, as superstition forbids all reference to that law. The effect of this belief may be traced in rivers of blood and the plains of earth whitened with the bones of its victims as far in the past as history or tradition reaches.

Taking organic law for evidence: the only difference in sex is the location of sexual organs. In the female, internal and negativ, in the male, external and positiv, conception a passing of centers in which these conditions are reversed, in which positiv becomes negativ and negativ positiv, each taking the place of the other and becoming what the other was. As the animal is an outgrowth from the vegetable, as the vegetable is from the mineral, all are alike subject to the same organic law. Interchange of sex is fully demonstrated in the relations existing between the roots and top of all vegetables, the top an outgrowth from the roots, the roots the product of a former top; the roots as blind to the existence of the top as we in our normal condition are to the existence of those who bear the same relation to us that the top bears to the roots of the vegetable. That the sexes are interchanging is as evident as that night and day are, and nothing but a superstition that is the deadly enemy of the human family prevents us from seeing it. As action balanced by reaction is the motiv power of all, apply that law to the problem of existence and the solution is sure.

Religious Immorality.

The old Adam is apparently still strong, not to say rampant, in the negro races. Christianity has been doing its best for them, and they hav now reached that stage in the higher life in which intense religious fervor is combined with a concientious preference for other men's property, and certain other eccentricities. The commonly alleged adaptability of Christianity to meet all human needs and appeal to every class of mind, is illustrated in the ease with which they hav grafted its creeds and its pietism upon a morality at once simple and ingenious. Its leading principle is expressed in the burden of the well-known negro hymn, "Steal away," and it is perfectly unbiased in its views of social relationship. Dr. Tucker recently furnished the American Church Congress with certain details in these regards, which appear to hav somewhat staggered his audience. He says: "In the midst of a prayer I hav known them to steal from each other; and on the way home from a prayer-meeting they will rob any hen-roost that lies conveniently at hand, and this without any thought of sin against God, and even without any perception of an incongruity. . . . The most pious negro I know is one confined in a penitentiary for an atrocious murder, who can see no especial sin against God in his crime, though he acknowledges an offense against man." This "most pious negro" is evidently a more reasonable being than might be supposed, and it would be well if the Church Congress could realize that the ground of morality is the "offense against man"—a point on which the negro mind is clearly open to conviction. But our informant further adds: "I hav known a negro preacher guilty of incest; another of habitual theft; a third with two wives, being married to neither; a fourth who was a constant and most audacious liar—yet who were earnest and successful preachers. Yet the four men of whom I speak were not conscious of hypocrisy, and their known sins did not diminish their influence with their race. It was impossible to hear them preach or pray and doubt their absolute sincerity." This squint of sincerity hints at more than most Christians realize. The fundamental principle involved is that morality and religion hav no necessary connection with each other.—Selected.

Not LaRoy Sunderland's Beecher.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am surprised that my old friend, LaRoy Sunderland, has mentioned my much-loved Mr. Beecher, to say so little of his value to the "advance guard" of Liberalism in this latter half of the nineteenth century. But believing he means better, let me make the statement that, for one who has said and continues to say so much wisdom, there is no man equaling Mr. Beecher to-day in the ranks of genuin thought wheresoever. The pre-orthodox look and listen to Mr. Beecher; the esoteric and love-loving portion of the Christian profession can find a rest in Mr. Beecher's bosom that the world has never begun to realize in the fabled bosom of an Abraham. He is a host in himself, and he knows it; and it needs not a keen sight to acknowledge that he is leading his followers as fast as they can endure his superior, resplendent vision, and is therefore sometimes inconsistent with his previous statements. The best and proper way is to look at Mr. Beecher as a grand leader of to-day, doing more good, largely in consequence of attained popularity—well earned and sustained—a popularity which, if Mr. Sunderland and myself in the lecture-field hav not obtained, has not been obtained with any less heartachings and deep tribulations than we less men hav suffered. In my boyhood, Brooklyn days I viewed the old, unhewn rock of Plymouth as a sacred relic; I pass by the old rock now as a relic of 1620. But as to Mr. Beecher, with all his faults—and for a public man as he has been they are few—being watched as no man of this century has been watched, I say he to-day stands pre-eminent in the Liberal field. I love the man; I love Ingersoll, only a little less than does Mr. Beecher; and compared with the influence these two men impart—an influence that is not equaled in the world of thought by the entire clergy, outside of them—there is not another Beecher to-day. Let us listen to him; let us lend our chastening to him; but, while we would harshly criticise him, let us remember the children he has in hand whom he is feeding with milk until they are able for the stronger meat he has attained unto. A Second Reply to Mr. Hale.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I cannot imagin that you would rejoice to see a long article in response to the author of "The Materialism of Mind," therefore, I will only allude to two points of Mr. Hale's criticisms relating to myself. As he introduced nothing new in his last article (Jan. 20th), I hav but to reiterate and explain more particularly.

First. I admit the truth of his main proposition, that if Materialism is true all the so-called evils are its results, and not the fiat of his God, as he seems anxious to assume and desirous of maintaining. I cannot see why he should feel any more secure in a theory that presumes all the imperfections of the universe to flow direct from an intelligent being or God, who would or could make no better world than this, and who designed it thus for some purpose, even Mr. Hale does not thoroughly understand what, for he does not believe in the Christian's God any more than I do, therefore repudiates the idea that the Christian's God caused all this rumpus.

He cannot see, either, how it is going to help us in the least that these results come upon us without design, "for if evolution has done a bad job here now, it may do as bad a job or worse hereafter." Will not the same reasoning equally apply to his God? Let us see. If God has done a bad job here and now, he may do as bad a job or worse hereafter, "and I cannot see as we are gaining anything by choosing that horn of the dilemma." "We take our choice," he says. I'm sure I do not; evolution is forced upon me by the unanimous voice of nature, and amounts to a conviction. I hav no choice in the conclusion.

I repeat, a human being who designs and executes evil against his fellows, if caught, is put to death, but this God designs and perpetrates all kinds of shocking barbarities by the wholesale. His tornadoes destroy men, women, and children; his earthquakes swallow up thousands; his volcanoes depopulate whole villages; his freshets inundate vast territories; his forked lightnings pierce his sanctuary and strike dead his chosen worshipers on bended knee in prayer! All this and more the Christian declares his God designs and performs!

> "He plants his footsteps in the sea,
> And rides upon the storm!"

He has no respect for human life.

But Mr. Hale does not indorse the Christian's God; it is his God, some other God, equally powerful and cruel, who causes all this wreck of human life! Pray what is the difference, if an intelligent, divine being ordains, controls, and executes these fearful crimes against his own children, whether it is the Christian God, or the God of Mr. Hale?

Think you I had not rather believe that irresponsible nature, or evolution, produces these phenomena, than a being as much worse than a human as he is greater?

This brings me to my second point, Mr. Hale's nameless God "without person or gender." But he is not nameless, for among other appellations, Mr. Hale proceeds to giv his God a "more significant title than 'it,'" and so far forgets himself that in the second line, after having deprived this being of person and gender, proposes to call it "The I Am," using the personal pronoun, first person, "I," to designate his impersonal, genderless God! Now a pro-noun always stands for a noun. Let me quietly ask Mr. Hale what noun that personal pronoun "I," first person, singular, stands for? Whom does it represent? a neuter God, neither male or female, nor personal! It is the first person also, the person speaking. Now who is this person, this "I" speaking, this "I," in the present tense—who "am," "I Am?" It cannot be Mr. Hale; he is the third person, speaking of "The I Am;" he cannot stand in the place of this being and name him the "I Am;" it is the "I Am" alone that can do that; so I again ask Mr. Hale who that "I Am" is, this impersonal, genderless being that he calls God, or The I Am?

But Mr. Hale does not leave this being without gender. In a former article (Aug. 26th, 1882) he invests it with the masculin gender, "He," "Him," "His," with the capital "H."

It will be seen by the foregoing how difficult it is to hav any belief in the being of a God and divest it of personality and gender. Mr. Hale done as well as any one can in trying to reconcile such an absurd inconsistency.

I hav dwelt much longer on this point, Mr. Editor, than I otherwise should, but for the purpose of more clearly showing the impossibility of having a God, the being of which has neither gender nor person, parts, or place. Please excuse repetition and prolixity. I am not desirous of having the last word.

MEETING OF THE STATE ASSOCIATION AT FLINT.

The annual meeting of the State Association having suffered a lapse through a misapprehension, the secretary issued a call for a meeting at Flint, which assembled last Friday, April 27th, continuing through Saturday and Sunday. The meeting, though not as large as some previous ones, was, all things considered, a most gratifying success. The causes that led to the call for the meeting, having been explained, and the danger that had threatened the very existence of the association being understood, the sentiment was unanimous and enthusiastic in favor of standing by the old flag.

The regularly engaged speakers in attendance were Chas. A. Andrus, J. H. Burnham, and C. Fanny Allyn. F. D. Lacy, Mrs. Mary C. Knight (formerly Mrs. Gale), and S. D. Moore, were present as volunteer speakers. Mr. Lacy, from having been, less than a year ago, both Atheistic and Materialistic, as those terms are understood, showed in his addresses a strong tendency to the Theistic and Spiritualistic, frankly stating the change in his position which had been largely wrought by observing the spiritual phenomena.

The addresses of the session were of the first order. On Saturday evening Charles A. Andrus gave an excellent discourse on the general subject, "Psychology." Sunday afternoon Mr. Burnham gave one of his best lectures under the title, "What Shall We Think?"

C. Fanny Allyn closed a month's engagement at Flint on Sunday, and gave an interesting discourse from a number of subjects proposed by persons in the audience. She spoke feelingly of her friendly relations with the people of Flint, and especially with the family of Mr. W. J. Cronk, whose guest she had been. A beautiful bouquet given her by Mrs. Cronk was the subject, with others, of her closing poem, which may itself be described as a poetical bouquet woven of many parts.

On Sunday the secretary gave a short address on the relation of the two factors, Spiritualism and Liberalism, in the association, showing that the term "Materialism" has been sought by persistent misrepresentation to be applied to it, which is in no sense synonymous with Liberalism, and has no place in the organic work.

The following officers were elected: President, W. J. Cronk, Flint; Secretary, S. B. McCracken, Detroit; Treasurer, Mrs. M. A. Jewett, Lyons; Director, J. H. Burnham, Saginaw. These, with two directors who hold over, constitute the Executiv Board for the year.

All the expenses of the meeting were provided for, with a handsome balance remaining in the hands of the treasurer—a result that has never been known but once before in the history of the association.

The usual annual camp-meeting will be held in August.

A resolution appropriately thanking the society and friends in Flint for their hospitality, and also thanking the friends who had furnished music—Mrs. W. Owen, Mrs. Odell, and Mr. Smith, of Lapeer, and Miss Curtis and Mrs. Connor, of Flint—was adopted.

Too much cannot be said in commendation of the good people of Flint, who came short in no direction in their efforts to make the meeting a pleasant and successful one. All in attendance from outside were entertained without money and without price. But one sentiment animates them, and that is unity and energy in the work.

I should add that the new president, Mr. Cronk, is a representativ Spiritualist and Liberal, and a man of character and financial ability.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

The New York State Freethinker's Association has appointed its next annual convention to be held in Corinthian Academy, in the city of Rochester, for the five days commencing Aug. 29th.

This association is the most Liberal, free, and catholic organization in this country. Its two thousand members represent every state in the Union and the province of Canada. Its creed is "Universal Mental Liberty," and its platform the Nine Demands of Liberalism. It givs equal welcome at its conventions to Materialists, Spiritualists, Free Religionists, Agnostics, Atheists, and Liberal Christians, and offers its platform to Christians of the most orthodox stripe if they will accept of it.

This society has held five annual conventions, each being a great improvement on all former ones. At each convention, from the commencement, the association has invited the Liberals of the whole country and of Canada to unite with it; so that these conventions hav been in fact more of the character of a national than of a state convention. It does the same thing this year. It asks everybody who is in search of truth, or has truth to impart, to meet with the association at Rochester this year.

There never has been a Freethought convention in this country that attracted so much public attention and respect as the one held at Watkins Glen last fall. The proceedings were published by most of the leading journals of the country in a respectful and truthful manner, the New York Herald, the New York Sun, and the Elmira Advertiser giving the fullest and most complete reports. I think the convention was of that character that it justly entitled itself to such treatment. There was very little, if any, crankism represented on its platform at Watkins. The speakers were all men and women of ability and character, who each had a valuable thought to present, and presented it in a respectable and dignified manner.

At the coming convention, if possible, we must try to improve on our Watkins Convention. With all the good speakers we had last year, I would like to see added such eminent names as those of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Prof. Felix Adler, Minot J. Savage, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and Mrs. Clara Neymann. Mr. George Miln promised me last year that he would attend the convention again this year and spend much time previous thereto in an effort to make it a great success, but Mr. Miln is now out of the country, and I fear will not return in time to fill that promis. But if every friend of Freethought and progress will do his and her whole duty the convention will be one that will greatly advance the interests of humanity and genuin Liberalism.

H. L. Green.

P. S.—Allow me to request the Freethought journals of the country that can spare the space to copy into their columns the above article. There are so many of them that it is a great task to furnish copy for each, and so I send it to the Liberal paper published in this state—The Truth Seeker. H. L. G.

Christian Insolence Rebuked.

From the Alliance, O., Standard of April 20th.

On Sunday morning Mr. John Allerton, who resided with his son on Mt. Union street in this city, died very suddenly. Mr. Allerton had been very much indisposed for some time, but on the morning of his death he said he felt better and got up and dressed himself. A short time afterward he lay down on a lounge, and in a few minutes was dead. He had been suffering from congestion of the lungs, which finally caused his death. Mr. Allerton was 76 years of age, and had been a resident of this place for many years. He was very highly respected, and had many friends in this city. The funeral took place Wednesday at 10:30 A. M. from the residence of Wm. Allerton, and was conducted by Mrs. H. S. Lake. It was largely attended, and Mrs. Lake delivered an appropriate address to the relativs and friends present. Appropriate music was furnished by the Independent Church Choir. Dr. Hartshorn spoke at some length of the life of Mr. Allerton, and had much to say in praise. The doctor was not backward, however, in having it understood that his religious views were not similar to those of Mrs. Lake, nor would he agree with her as to the religious opinions of the deceased.

From the same paper of April 27th.

Ed. Standard: I write you at the request of those concerned, and ask space in your columns for the purpose of doing justice to one who can no longer speak for himself. I refer to John Allerton, who passed to spirit life on the 15th inst., and whose funeral address I was called upon to giv. Therein I endeavored to make a brief statement of his belief, which was that of a Liberal Spiritualist, but to couch it in such language as would not wound the feelings of any whose views differed from those of the speaker and the deceased. At the close of my address Dr. Hartshorn arose, in answer to an invitation to speak, and, without regard to courtesy, good taste, or truthfulness, made the statement that Mr. Allerton—whom he had know for fifty years—regarded the Bible as a moral guide, accepted its precepts as those by which human conduct should be governed, and relied upon it as a revelation from a supreme being. This was absolutely false in every particular, as all who knew him can testify; and nothing but regard for the occasion restrained me from announcing this fact then, in justice to the living and to the departed.

It is, however, only another illustration of the effort of the church to sustain its waning power by claiming the Infidel dead who can no longer reply to their slanderous aspersions upon their character. That the community may not be deceived by this, and to soothe the outraged feeling of those who were present on that occasion, I beg that you will publish this. Yours for truth and justice,

MRS. H. S. LAKE.

Bradlaugh Again Barred Out.

From the New York Sun.

The very small majority of three by which the Affirmation bill was refused a second reading on Thursday night proves, of course, that Mr. Gladstone's vigorous though tardy advocacy of the measure has had the effect of rallying a good many of the Liberals who on a former division growing out of the Bradlaugh complications had deserted the government. But a considerable number of the English Nonconformists were inflexible, and as the Parnellite members voted with the opposition, the ministry was defeated, and yesterday's proceedings were awaited with anxiety, to see how Mr. Gladstone would regard his repulse.

On the reassembling of the house on Friday Mr. Gladstone gave no hint of an intention to treat the rejection of the bill as a vote of loss of confidence, although in his speech a few days before he had used language that seemed to imply a resolve to test, if the house failed to support him, the feelings of the country on the question. Far from showing, however, a desire to uphold any longer the claim of an English constituency to be represented in the legislature by any man not legally disqualified and willing to comply with the Parliamentary forms, he remained a silent spectator of the debate on Sir Stafford Northcote's proposal to preclude the member elect for Northampton from taking his seat. That Mr. Gladstone had no conscientious scruples touching the propriety of administering the oath to one who had publicly denied its sanctity is clear enough, from the fact that he voted with Mr. Labouchere against the prohibitory resolution, which, however, was carried by a vote of 271 to 165. Had the premier's voice gone with his vote it is impossible that a majority of more than a hundred could hav been obtained for a motion by which the House of Commons has stultified itself and asserted inquisitorial powers, which it will just as certainly be one day forced to disavow as it was compelled a century ago to reverse its stupid and arbitrary proceedings against John Wilkes.

It is settled, then, that the House of Commons is willing to place itself on record as the most bigoted assembly that exists in any part of the civilized world. Not only in the United States should we treat with derision—even if such on act of folly were not forbidden by the Constitution—any attempt to deprive a citizen of political privileges on the score of his opinions touching the origin and government of the universe, but the same thing may be said of every European country which enjoys even the semblance of free institutions. Neither in the French Chamber of Deputies, nor in the German Reichstag, nor in the Prussian Landtag, nor in the Italian legislature, nor in the Austrian Reichsrath, nor in the Hungarian Diet are the forces of intolerance strong enough or bold enough to prevent avowed Agnostics from discharging the lawmaking functions with which electors hav seen fit to invest them. Even in a land which Englishmen look upon as so benighted and backward as Spain, the prime minister, Sagasta, is ashamed to make admittance to the Cortes depend on the profession of particular religious opinions, and has promised to effect the substitution of some form of affirmation for the usual oath in certain cases.

Not only is the rejection of the affirmation bill a triumph for fanaticism, but the refusal to permit Mr. Bradlaugh to take the oath was an infringement of the rights of the borough of Northampton whose constitutionality is extremely questionable. What right had the House to go behind the formal offer of a member elect to conform with its rules? Where does it get the authority to investigate a man's previous professions and present motivs, and to decide arbitrarily that an act ostensibly correct is in reality an evasion of the law? It is true that subsequently to his first election Mr. Bradlaugh published a statement that he should insist upon making affirmation, on the ground that the prescribed oath would not be binding on his conscience, but if the House can take cognizance of such declarations made after the election of a member, why may it not also notice equivalent assertions or admissions made before an election is held? And if all printed avowals of Atheism should be held to disqualify for Parliament, why should those who make no secret of their Agnostic opinions in conversation escape a similar penalty? It is notorious that a considerable number of the members who voted on this very motion to exclude Mr. Bradlaugh reject the Christian conception of God and the dogma of immortality, and we might name several whose Atheistical views hav been distinctly divulged in their published writings. But they took the oath promptly and quietly, regarding it as a mere formality; whereas Mr. Bradlaugh had the candor to acknowledge what they, for the moment at least, concealed. The only difference between him and his fellow Atheists is that they added hypocrisy, or, as they would call it, a judicious reticence, to their obnoxious ideas upon religious subjects.

But Mr. Bradlaugh, it seems, is the only man in the United Kingdom who cannot be allowed to be a hypocrit. He must not even be suspected of hypocrisy, for although nearly three years hav elapsed since he expressed Agnostic opinions, and although for aught that the House knows about the matter he may hav abjured them long ago, he has been thrice refused his seat, and meanwhile the borough of Northampton has been deprived of a seat to which it is constitutionally entitled. That the offer to take the oath will ultimately be held a legal compliance with the rules of Parliament cannot be doubtful to those who remember what came of the analogous attempt to partially and temporarily disfranchise the borough of Westminster for its persistence in returning Wilkes. There was but one way of avoiding the virtual admission that the oath is meaningless in the mouth of many members, and that was to allow affirmation to be substituted. Mr. Gladstone at last saw this, but the reactionists and bigots would not see it; hence the quandary into which the House of Commons has been plunged.

Defeat of the Affirmation Bill.

From the Hamilton, Ont., Evening Tribune.

Bigotry in religion and fanaticism in politics are in themselvs forces bad enough, but when the two are combined they raise a spirit which for injustice and intolerance cannot be equaled. The rejection of the Affirmation bill by the British House of Commons yesterday, especially in view of the fact that the bigotry of the Tory opposition had been consulted in leaving out of the measure its retrospectiv clause, is indefensible. It could by no means be termed a Bradlaugh relief bill, for if Mr. Bradlaugh avails himself of its benefits, he must first seek for the fourth time election at the hands of his constituents, who know full well what they are doing and the views which Mr. Bradlaugh upholds. The spirit which prompted the opposition to display its fanaticism and bigotry is a nineteenth-century survival of that which inspired Claverhouse to stain the glens of Scotland with the blood of the Covenanters; which made Torquemada hear peals of silvery laughter in the shrieks of agony, and the groans of the dying victims to the Inquisition's power; which made the vales of Switzerland the scenes of bloodshed and murder; which drove from Spain a long procession of Moors, Protestants, and other heretics, inflicting such a blow upon the social and commercial prosperity of that country as to transform a perfect paradise into a wilderness, from the effect of which blow it has not recovered even to this day. It was the same spirit which prompted the Freethinking disciples of the first revolution in France to parade the streets of Paris with the heads of their victims carried aloft, and which filled the prisons of that unhappy country, deluged the land with human blood, and committed outrage after outrage against all social and religious institutions. It was the same spirit in Mohammedan lands which permitted a display of fanaticism of the worst character, which carried the sword and fire into thousands of peaceful homes. It is the same spirit which, no matter their creed, no matter their nationality, no matter their skepticism, as in the case of the revolutionists of France—the same spirit which leads to the defiance of all those common principles of justice which underlie society and government, and which violate every interpretation of that beautiful golden rule which forms the very foundation of the Christian code of morals. Let Mr. Bradlaugh be what he may, he is the choice of an important constituency in England, and the day has gone by for any government or even any parliament to say who shall be the electoral choice. The forces of bigotry and intolerance triumphed yesterday, but a day will come, and it is not far distant, when they will be forced to eat the bitter leek of humiliation, and when, perhaps, as in the case of John Wilkes, they will be compelled to erase from the journals of the House of Commons the record of their own infamy, bigotry, and intolerance.

The Liberal Club.

Mr. Wakeman had the chair of the Liberal club at the meeting of that body last week. In opening the proceedings he called attention to the report of the previous meeting which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. He pronounced it the most "humorous and unsatisfactory report to the speakers" that had ever been made. The opinion was generally indulged in that the report was written out by Mr. Shook.

Mr. Albert Brisbane was the speaker of the evening, his subject being "Modern Scientific Speculations —Their Superficialities." He believed organic laws governed the universe, and that exact knowledge on any subject could not be had until the laws pertaining to that subject were discovered. No accurate information of astronomy existed prior to the discovery of the law of gravitation by Newton, and a million years of speculation could not hav accounted for the perturbations of planets in their orbits. When the laws of density and distance were proclaimed, astronomy became an exact science. All laws were to be judged by the results of their application. The law of evolution, in the speaker's mind, had not proved satisfactory, because it had as yet led to no definit results. The theories of Darwin needed confirmation. Cosmic wisdom alone, whether under the name of providence or divine guidance, was the moving force in the phenomena of nature which we behold. Auguste Comte's three integrations, the theological, metaphysical, and Positiv, did not cover the whole ground; neither did the philosophy of Hegel. Spencer's evolution—a change from an indefinit and incoherent heterogeneity to a definit and coherent homogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations—explained nothing, because no one knew what homogeneity was. We had no instance of it. A study of all philosophies, ancient and modern, had left the speaker equally in the dark. The law of social science must be found out before we can look for an adjustment of human differences, and a solution of the economic questions which arise daily. This law had yet to be discovered. It lay in the science of social integration, a higher one than that of Positivism. We should learn to mistrust the speculations and conclusions of the human mind, and endeavor to find out the designs and laws of the overruling cosmic wisdom.

Mr. Andrews followed. He said that Mr. Brisbane had first brought to his notice the teachings of the French philosopher, Charles Fourier, whom he regarded as the greatest genius the world had ever produced, and from an eminently respectable orthodox deacon he became orthodox in the opposit direction. He was now orthodox in both directions He had discovered the law of which Mr. Brisbane was in search, and was teaching it to a small class. Mr. Brisbane, the speaker said, did not believe this, but the force of truthful conviction compelled him to state it as a fact.

Mr. Langerfelt said Carl Marx, the father of German Socialism, had taught the truth of the matter in his written works. It had an economic basis.

Mr. Roosevelt announced that he had solved the problem. The solution would appear in print in a few days.

Mr. Vaughan believed evolution answered the question. It was as reasonable to believe that a mollusk could be placed in the machine of the ages, and with time to turn the crank, bring out an Ingersoll, as that a perfect human being could hav been put into the apparatus, the crank turned the other way, and a man brought out like Talmage.

Mr. E. H. Heywood, of Boston, stated that the social question was the one of predominant importance. The amount of intellect represented by the members of the club was evidently immense, but, Mr. Heywood intimated, they were on the wrong track. He would hold labor reform meetings the next Sunday and Monday.

Mr. Shook was present, but had himself well under control, and did not speak.

Mr. Brisbane closed the exercises with a fifteen-minute speech. The discussions of the Liberal Club are of great interest.

AT the Baptist Ministers' Conference in this city last week the Rev. D. C. Potter treated the ministers assembled to some plain and wholesome truths, which were such a novelty the chairman requested him to take some of them back. Talking of the gospel-tent business he said it was an unmitigated blunder, consisting of "gospel hall, mass meeting, cabinet organ, limp-back gospel hymn, bad grammar, and no propriety." He also evidently knows something about the Young Men's Christian Association, for he told his clerical hearers that "the grandest humbug in New York is the association palace at the corner of Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue." He was requested to strike out the word humbug, which he did, but forgot to say that it altered his opinion in any way.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE CHRISTIANS UP TO THE TIME OF THEODOSIUS.

After the death of Julian, the Arians and Athanasians, who had until this moment restrained themselves, commenced again to cause trouble in the empire. The bishops of the two parties were the leaders in sedition. Fanatical monks traveled to the desert of Thebes, sowing fire and discord, speaking of impossible miracles such as we read of in the history of the popes of the desert, insulting the emperors, and pointing out long beforehand the coming rule of the monks.

There was a wise emperor who, for the purpose of putting an end to these continual broils, granted liberty of conscience to every one. This was Valentinianus I. During his time all sects lived, at least a few years, in a formal kind of peace, only anathematizing instead of slaying each other. Pagans, Jews, Athanasians, Arians, Macedonians, Donatists, Cyprians, Manicheans, and Apollinarists, were all astonished at this seeming tranquillity. Valentinianus taught all those who are born to rule that if two sects destroy a state, thirty sects will leave it in peace.

Theodosius did not think thus, and was about to loose everything. At first he took sides with the Athanasians, and he aroused discord again by his intolerance. He persecuted the pagans and banished them. He then, with a coward's thought, believed it necessary to turn over all the provinces upon the right bank of the Danube to the Goths. This unfortunate precaution against his own subjects prepared the way for the destruction of the Roman empire.

The bishops, in imitation of their emperor, ceased their mad persecution. But there was a tyrant named Gratianus, who dethroned and assassinated his colleague Theodosius, made himself master of England, Gaul, and Spain. I do not remember which Priscillian it was who dogmatized, as so many others have done, and said that souls were emanations from God; but a few Spanish bishops reported him and his principal followers to the tyrant Maxinus. That rascal, the better to endear himself to the bishops, whose help he needed in order to maintain his usurpation, condemned Priscillian and seven of his partisans to death. A bishop named Ithacius was barbarous enough to have them tortured in his presence. The people, always rash, and always cruel when they yield to the reins of superstition, one time, in Bordeaux, stoned a high-born lady to death because she said she was a follower of Priscillian.

The judgment of Priscillian was more trustworthy than that of all the martyrs of whom the Christians have spoken so much during the times of the early emperors. Those miserable beings believed it pleased God whenever they soiled themselves with the crimes of which they complained so much. The Christians since those times are like the dogs turned into a bone pile; they were thirsting for blood, but did not desire to fight for their empire; they permitted it to be invaded by twenty nations of barbarians, while they employed themselves in persecuting as many of the sectarians of the ancient Roman religion, or as many of their brethren, as did not agree with them.

Is there anything more horrible than that most cowardly deed of the priests under Bishop Cyril, or, as the Christians call him, St. Cyril? There lived in Alexander a woman celebrated for her beauty and her grace. Hypatia was her name. Educated by the philosopher Theon, her father, she occupied his chair in the year 415, and was applauded for her knowledge, while honered for her grace. She was, however, a pagan. The tonsured dogs of Cyril, followed by a crowd of fanatics, assailed her one day in the streets while she was returning from her lecture-room, pulled her hair out, stoned her, and then burned her; nor did St. Cyril reprimand them in the least, or Theodosius the younger and the pious Pulcheria, his sister, who governed the empire in conjunction with him, even so much as to condemn this inhuman excess of passion. Such a contempt for the laws would have appeared all the less astonishing in the reign of their grandfather, Theodosius I., who so basely stained his rule with the blood of the Thessalonians.*

*There is nothing so characteristic of the Christian priesthood as the unbounded praise they lavished for so long a time upon Theodosius and Constantine. It is certain that Theodosius, surnamed the Great, and sometimes called a saint, was one of the most wicked men who ever governed the Romam empire. He at one time promised a general amnesty to the citizens of Thessalonica for six months, while the Cantabrians, with cruel perfidy, invited the citizens to the public plays, during which he killed the men, women, and children without sparing a soul. This was in the year 390. Is it possible not to be seized with indignation against the panegyrists of this barbarian who went into raptures over his prayers? He denied himself, they say, the pleasure of attending mass for many months. Is it not an insult to humanity to dare to mention such satisfaction? If the instigators of the Irish massacres had passed six months without attending mass, would it hav expiated crime? And is one cleared from the bloody stains for having assisted at a ceremony no less ridiculous than idolatrous? As for Constantine, I have the word of Consul Ablavius that this emperor was a Nero [1771].

Some Other Kind of Philosophy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav lately read quite a number of articles from the pen of Mr. John Peck, on the subject of "Infidel Philosophy," and hav noticed one point of his philosophy that he lays the principal stress of nearly every article upon, and I would now like to ask the gentleman a few questions, because if this is Infidel philosophy, I am somewhat mistaken in my estimate of Infidelity.

I do not think John deals fairly with the Christians' God in charging every misfortune of the world upon him. By his articles it is plain that he ignores every form of God—says that we hav no use for one. Now, John and his philosophy teach this, and if he is sure of it, then all these cruelties he is charging upon the Christian God must be the operations of his own god, or the Infidel god of nature. It is nature that brings about all the punishment for violated law, and transmits to posterity the good, bad, or indifferent qualities of our lives. The Christians' Bible declares that the "sins of the fathers are visited upon the children to the third and fourth generations." This John in substance declares to be unjust and the hight of cruelty, and denounces their God in round terms, but he seems to forget that the sins of parents are thus visited upon children, as can be observed daily. Now, to be consistent, why does he not denounce nature, since he says there is no God? Is it not plain that in this instance at least the Bible God is in perfect accord with his god, or the laws of nature?

Suppose we let the Christians' God quite out of the question, and agree to defy his powers over matter, mind, or man; let us ignore him. Does this change the violence of the tornado, appease the hunger of the starving, cure the cancered face of the unfortunate, restore the epileptic, change the idiotic? Do the shipwrecks, famins, epidemics, floods, fires, and earthquakes, that destroy their millions, become the less a glaring fact because nature takes the place of the Christians' God?

Please do in your next article tell us how to avoid these natural troubles, build up a system of philosophy that will benefit mankind and "giv him a boost" onward, instead of scolding and blaming God for doing what you say he ought not to do.

The Christian believes that his God is powerful enough to do with nature what he pleases, and as these things are a part of life, he contends that his God did them. On the other hand, you contend that no god, especially a god of love, could be guilty of doing so meanly by his children. Now, how do you know this, since they are being done? He may be as mean as they say he is, as mean and cruel as nature is. How do you account for this? Now, sir, in my opinion, there is no consistency nor argument in such a position; and more, if God or nature is cruel enough to permit the evils complained of here, you do not know but the God of nature may extend the punishment and suffering into futurity. So far as your philosophy goes I hav not seen an argument to disprove it. If a man during a whole life is placed in bad surroundings, with an inherited organization that leads to evil ways, and while his whole being is besotted and filled with the filth of immorality, should suddenly die, and if a future life should be a truth, does it not follow that such a person would still tend to his former habits of thought? And would such thoughts be calculated to produce happiness? We all know that the mind, as well as the body, is developed in the direction of its exercise. The blacksmith's arm becomes strong by swinging his hammer, and if no exercise is taken the body becomes weak, and in time disease and death follow. And so it is in regard to the intellectual and moral part of man. It would be just as reasonable to expect a perfect booby to go to bed at night, and wake up in the morning a profound philosopher, as to suppose that an ignorant or vicious person should wake up to perfect bliss in the future world, if such a world exists. No one can be anything but what has became a part of his conscious self. The things of to-day go to make up the man of to-morrow. This principle of growth obtains from the cradle to the grave. The moralist is in part right when he predicts good for the developed, and bad for the ignorant and vicious, as it is in accordance with nature's ways. And Mr. John Peck must know this. There can be no advantage in substituting nature, blind and unintelligent, as certain Materialists contend she is, for the Christian God, unless we can show that in her laws there is a more potent government and a more substantial hope for mankind. Will your Infidel philosophy do this? And if so, how, and when, and by what means?

Nature's laws are inexorable, and seem to contain no human sympathy. The same law that causes an apple to fall will cause a man to fall over a precipice; there is no distinction; and in the advancing economy of nature a city or a continent may become submerged to the ocean's vasty depths with even less apparent concern than Mr. John Peck would exercise toward a colony of ants that were occupying a place in his garden and which he desired to pitch over the fence, and the ants would know about as much of the cause of their treatment as we know about the cause or the inscrutable ways of Mother Nature.

I hav listened to an immense amount of God-slaying in my time, and in the progress of mankind I am only too thankful that we are about done with all such human contrivances; but still, after all, there is an illimitability before us, an unknowable something, that the wisest of men will never discover, and even the Universology of Mr. Andrews will be puzzled to account for.

Every God that has been seated in the temple of human worship was the work of ignorance and the outpouring of the inward restlessness of man, the inward desire for progress and knowledge, and of necessity the work of nature. When we look back ten to fifty thousand years, the mind is almost paralyzed in contemplating the condition of the world's inhabitants; its monsters, its hordes of barbarous and cruel savages that made it a daily study to slaughter their enemies; and when the unstable condition of the earth is brought into the picture, with its numerous and destructiv earthquakes, floods, famins, etc., etc., without limit, it produces a shudder and suggests it to hav been a very undesirable time to hav had to liv. And yet every decade has been the stepping-stone to a higher state of life and a more stable temple to worship in. We often wonder why the "lost link" cannot be found which connects man with the lower animals, but in view of the above picture it may be conjectured that it was on account of the vast ocean of time that has intervened, and the wars of annihilation had by the earliest tribes of men. This is Infidel teaching, but it is in accordance with the history of the races of men as far back as their condition can be traced, and is in accord with the geology of the earth, so far as it relates to the perturbations and upheavals of her unsubstantial condition. If this is the true theory, or if these are the true inferences to be drawn, then it follows that man never had a fall, but has been growing as everything else in nature is growing. And if he never had a fall there can be no necessity for a savior to raise him up, and the whole fabric upon which the Christian's temple is built is a castle in the air, and his God a work of the imagination. Yet all this time has Nature been the only worker; and if she transmits both good and bad qualities to posterity, it behooves us to study her methods and assist in elevating mankind from ignorance and superstition to a true comprehension of those things that effect our immediate good and the good of those who follow. If man has advanced in the scale of being and in his knowing faculties, it must hav been because of his disappointments and ignorant estimates of nature, and he has been cured by the punitiv nature of every infraction of law. Hence the operations of nature as regards the advancement of her children are automatic in character; every evil will in time cure itself, and every sinner will in time work out his own salvation by the gradual hints of his own surroundings. To study the greatest wonder of Nature man must study himself and his true relations to her. If this is properly done, this inveterate God-slaying will soon become unnecessary.

J. R. PERRY.

Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Not Annihilated or Vanquished.—Concluded.

It requires exercise to develop our mental and physical powers, and circumstances in life that bring them into exercise are the necessary requisits for their development; and the more difficult the performance of the task the more complete and triumphant will be the result. This is what I call overcoming evil with good; that we are placed here in this life for a purpose; that every circumstance with which we are surrounded in life is designed to bring into exercise and develop the innate powers we possess, to fit us for the completion of that purpose here and hereafter; that every step we take in advance is a step preparatory for the next, and so on forever; that every false step we take, every mistake we make, is a lesson to teach us to do better next time, such false step and mistake being evils in the sense I intend them to be understood; they may make a more lasting impression upon our minds, and be of more benefit to us in the future, than the experience would be that we might hav gained from doing the same thing right at the first.

From this I think Mr. Ridenger will be able to see the use of overcoming the evil with the good, hereafter as well as here, if it shall exist there as it does here, and on and on forever if it shall exist forever; and as fast as we overcome, so fast shall our happiness be increased. But Mr. Ridenger asks, "How can that God of yours right the wrongs of the outraged hereafter, even if he has a little hell to punish the persons who do the outraging? that cannot do any good to the outraged." I hav made no allusion whatever to any hell, great or small, for the punishing of outrages. This hell business is all of his own getting up. I can see no design in punishing, in the sense in which he puts it, unless it should be reformatory, the same as all the evils we encounter here as we pass along the journey of life. I hav no idea that outrages will be punished in any other way than by seeing and feeling the effects of the wrongs done, and learning therefrom, in view of the misery it produces, how much better it is to do right. And the sufferings of the wronged, the injured, the outraged, will, by the contrast in the experience of the individuals, add to their happiness when the wrong ceases—for such wrongs cannot last forever, for my God can and will stop them when the fit time arrives and the purpose for which they were designed is accomplished.

This is my idea: that sickness in all its forms, poverty, pestilence, famin, and death are some of the evils of this life, and that they will all be overcome when we leave this life. If there is a hereafter, when we shall hav passed hence, and from the fear and consequent suffering from all these causes, the remembrance of these evils and the contrast between them and perfect freedom and safety from their annoyance forever will make our happiness greater than if we had never suffered from those evils; like the sufferer here who has been sick nigh unto death and recovered, and knows how good it is to enjoy health once more, which was never half appreciated before he was sick.

And this, among others that might be named, is the reason for my belief in a future state of existence. I can see no reason or justice in the order—or perhaps I should say disorder—of things as they exist here on earth, without such a hereafter.

I think I hav said all that need be said now in reply to Mr. Ridenger, in the mildest manner that his unkind misrepresentations would seem to justify. If such mocking sarcasm is all Liberalism has for its defense, its advocates had better abandon it at once and take up something for which a good and sufficient reason can be given. I will endeavor to so frame this reply that it may be final on this subject, and that hereafter, for all critics who shall present themselvs, it will only be necessary to refer them to this for an answer.

When I commenced this discussion my object was to show that if Materialism were true, and material organization the cause of mind and everything else, that then all that Materialists find fault with in the world—the different systems of idolatry, the Jewish God and all other gods, Christianity, and every humbug in existence, or that ever has or ever will exist—are the result of their own system; for if material organization is the cause of all things, then all things are results of that cause. That was the proposition contained in my sixth article on materialism of mind, published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 2, 1882, which not one of my critics has attempted to attack, or even alluded to, except Mr. Wallis of Kansas, and Ella E. Gibson. Mr. Wallis said he might attack it some time in the future. I cannot see what criticism can be brought to bear upon it, for it is a self-evident truth, unless they were like his former criticisms, in which he undertook to prove that, when I had proven the mind to be immaterial, I had proved that it was material; or like Mr. Ridenger, who makes the very reason that I giv for a belief in a future state of existence his reason for a disbelief in such a state of existence; or, in other words, to simplify and make it plain, it is to say that black is white, that there is no difference, unless it be that white is the blackest. Now, that is a kind of criticism that it is of no use to waste words in replying to, for no argument is applicable to the case. The only thing would be to put assertion against assertion, and a lie against a lie, which, while it would prove nothing, would be just as good as anything else.

Ella E. Gibson, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 18, 1882, acknowledged the truth of the proposition as self-evident, in referring to my reply to Mr. Winter, of Cincinnati, Ohio. But Mr. Winter never acknowledged anything of the kind. If he ever saw the truth of the proposition, it only raised a storm of passion in his mind that prompted him to indulge in a senseless tirade as the only excuse he had for a reply.

That is the point—that if Materialism is true, then there is no reason or sense in the strictures and gabble of Materialists about everything they find fault with, for all these things are the result of their own system; and when a Materialist attacks idolatry or Christianity as wrong, he admits the existence of other causes that produce results contrary to his own theory and surrenders to his opponents, for if other causes do exist that produce opposit results from Materialism, then Materialism is not the only cause, and, if a cause at all, may be no more true than the other cause that produces other results. And right here at this point the bottom falls out of the system of Materialism. This is the very point I hav had in view, and intended to establish and maintain, from the commencement of this discussion. All through the different articles I hav written that hav been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER I intended to scuttle the old hulk of Materialism, and I expected that when the old rats who had made their nests in the hold saw the water rushing in upon them and the old craft going down, they would make a scramble to save themselvs and keep afloat on the surface of the water, that in their frantic efforts they would catch at a stick, a chip, a straw, or anything they might think would keep them from drowning, until they could find some other place of refuge.

And that is just what has been going on, as I understand it, in all of these criticisms that hav been presented on this subject—all side-shows to divert attention and argument from the main point at issue, and thus try to keep up an appearance of safety and stability, when in fact they are bankrupt and unable to pay one cent on the dollar in true currency, and come up and offer bogus, counterfeit coin instead of the genuin to settle up the account. "The Bible or Jew God—He Is Merciful."

ARGUED PRO AND CON BY PALMER AND HAGAMAN, OF CONCORDIA, KANSAS.

I hav read this little book with interest, and think it is well calculated to do good work as an uprooter of the old superstitions in the minds of the believers in the old Bible and its gods and ghosts. It is one more cheap book that we should all buy and circulate. I will giv you right here a specimen of Mr. Hagaman's style of presenting the subject, and only regret that space will not permit a longer quotation:

"I do not feel under any obligations to any god or gods—not even for being here, which I credit wholly to my parents. Why should I seek God's aid?—your God, of course, I refer to. Three times he tried to drown me; once to freeze me to death; tried to kill me with measles and whooping-cough; tried the 'plague;' fell a tree on me; kicked me with a mule; twice run teams away with me; fired bullets at me; struck me with a dagger, another time with a cleaver; twice robbed me on the plains of Kansas; cheated me in a trade, with a deacon to help him out of a horse; gave me the bilious fever, and ever so many times the chills and fever; poisoned the air I breathed, the water I drank, and the food I ate; compelled me to work or starve, and gave me poor health to do it with many times; made sand-burrs and endless varieties of thorns and thistles to annoy me; secreted poisonous reptils by my path to bite me; made hornets to sting me; made mad dogs to bite me; burglars to enter my house and steal from me; skunks to— and rob my hen-roost; weasels to suck the blood of my chickens; flies, ants, musketos, grasshoppers, potato-beetles, bugs, and worms of a thousand varieties to torment me; sends hail to ruin my trees and crops, and to break the glass out of my windows; liars to lie about me; tattlers to tattle about me; and preachers—the worst pests of all—to preach me into hell because I won't giv them of my money. I am willing to compromise the matter with God on these grounds: If he will destroy the preachers, the grasshoppers, skunks, and malaria, I'll take up his 'yoke' and bear it like a little man."

I think you will find ten cents' worth of ammunition in the book, and hope you will each one encourage Brother Hagaman by ordering one or more copies right now, before you forget it. Address Kansas Blade, Concordia, Kansas.

WOMAN'S PLACE TO-DAY. Four Lectures in Reply to the Lenten Lectures on "Woman," by the Rev. Morgan Dix, D.D., Rector of Trinity Church, New York. By Lillie Devereux Blake. John W. Lovell Company, publishers. Price 20 cents. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

On the first Friday evening in Lent the Rev. Morgan Dix began a series of lectures on "Woman" in Trinity Chapel, which is an up-town branch of the down-town house where Mr. Dix preaches on Sunday. The lectures were reported in the daily papers, and met the eyes of Mrs. Blake, who is a stanch and persistent defender of woman's rights. The reverend lecturer's views were so narrow and so out of consonance with nineteenth century enlightenment on the subject of sex equality that Mrs. Blake thought it necessary that they should not go unchallenged. So she hired a hall and proceeded to do what she could to set the public right in regard to woman's place to-day. The interest awakened was so great, and Dr. Dix's side of the question having been issued in book form, that the lecturer consented to the publication of her discourses. The result is a book of about 175 pages.

The gist of Dr. Dix's lectures is that the man is the head of the woman; that the priest is the father of the household (which may sometimes be true in its literal sense of the younger members); that the sexes should not be mixed at college; that women should not be allowed to vote; that they should go to church and listen to the "Magnificat" chanted by male voices; that a woman's name should appear but twice in the papers—once when she is married, and once when she dies; that she owes all she has to the church and the Bible; that her glory is maternity, and her place in the kitchen; and some more of the same general drift.

Mrs. Blake's task was to prove that all this is untrue, and she has done it well. Woman, in her opinion, should invade every department of human affairs. Her advantages for education should be equal to those afforded men. She should be present at the polls. She should hav her hand in the administration of justice. There should be women in the police courts. She should study and practice law, medicin, and politics. She should hav all the liberty she is entitled to, which is all that any human being can enjoy. Woman does not owe anything to the church or to the Bible. On the contrary, the church and the Bible owe her much. She has foolishly exalted them, and they repay her with degradation. Speaking of woman's love for the "Magnificat," Mrs. Blake is so eloquent that we quote her words:

"Ah, my friends, there is a grander hymn than the 'Magnificat,' as there is a word that is dearer than mother, home, or heaven, and that word is Liberty'—a hymn that is as wide as our own broad continent, and strong as the surges of the Atlantic; that sounds in the wild wind that sweeps through the pine forests of the North, and sings in the soft breezes of the Southern savannas; that swells with the rush of mountain torrents, and sings with exultant joy through the high arches of our sun-lighted sky; that is sweet as the ripple of waves, and grand as the roar of Niagara—the Hymn of Liberty."

As a plea for the recognition of woman as the equal of man, "Woman's Place To-day" has probably not been equaled. Mrs. Blake has all of woman's insight and all of man's and woman's strength of appeal and argument. She has more than Dr. Dix's ability, and more than his fairness in discussion. Added to this the fact that she has right and truth on her side, and it is easily to be realized that she has given us a most able and interesting book. As long as there are ministers of the Morgan Dix stamp to pile Bibles and hymn-books before the wheels of the car of progress, it is to be fervently hoped that women like Lillie Devereux Blake will arise to see that the obstructions are cleared away.

THE BIOGRAPHER. Illustrated. Consisting of Short Sketches of Eminent Persons. To be issued monthly. Single copies, 25 cents; $2.50 per year; $3.00 to foreign addresses. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

The May number of this periodical is at hand. It contains sketches and portraits of some thirty-five eminent men concerning whom public interest is felt. Among the portraits we notice the genial countenance of Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr., editor of the Health Monthly; and we take this occasion to say in passing that a better man and a better paper in its line than Dr. Foote and his Monthly do not exist to our knowledge. Besides Dr. Foote, the Biographer sketches among others Wm. E. Gladstone, premier of England; Bismarck, Wendell Phillips, Henry Ward Beecher, Dr. James McCosh, Charles Stewart Parnell, Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher; Jeremiah S. Black, who doomed himself to everlasting fame by attempting to defend the Christian religion from the assaults of Colonel Ingersoll; and last, but not by any means least, Emily Faithfull, the celebrated English advocate of woman's elevation. The print and cuts in the Biographer are well executed, and the matter it contains is valuable.

CONVICT LABOR AND PRISON REFORM; a Plea for the Abolishment of the Contract System. By John J. Conrad, Ex-Convict. Price 10 cents. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

The author of this pamphlet has spent three years in the prison at Auburn, N. Y., and from his experience there is enabled to giv considerable information about the workings of that institution. He does not state the reason for which his liberty was restricted during the above-mentioned time, but that fact has no bearing on the importance of the statements he advances, provided they are true. It seems that the services of the convicts in the Auburn penitentiary are bought by contractors. Each inmate is required to perform a certain amount of manual labor, regardless of his physical capacity or incapacity. Failing in this, he is subjected to punishment by the keepers, who are alleged to be governed by the contractors. When it is found after repeated trials that a man is unable to perform his allotted task, he is placed in solitary confinement in a dark cell, and fed upon a few ounces of bread and water once in every twenty-four hours. After enduring this process of starvation for a week or ten days it is expected that the incompetent mechanic will be enabled to resume his work under circumstances more favorable to the accomplishment of the specified amount of work, when in fact he is in a condition far worse than before. The result is that more severe punishment, in the shape of paddling, is resorted to, but with no better results. When by this course of disciplin the convict loses what little capacity for work he at first possessed, he is sometimes placed on the sick list, taken to the hospital, put under the care of an incompetent physician, and before long is carried out a corpse.

These are serious charges, and if true an investigation of the condition of things at Auburn is in order. All the evils mentioned are due in the main, according to Mr. Conrad, to the reprehensible system of contract labor now in vogue, in which the agent of the company employing the convicts is virtually the ruler of the prison. Conrad would see this system abolished, and allow the proceeds of the prisoner's labor in most cases to be applied to the support of the family left at home. The chaplain of the prison, the Rev. Mr. Searles, concurs in this view. When it is considered that many comparativly innocent persons are confined in our penal institutions, proper laws and proper enforcement of them, for the treatment of prisoners, become of first importance. If Mr. Conrad's statements are to be relied upon, such laws as now exist are not carried out in spirit or in letter, and new laws are needed. Prisons should be reformatories, not torture pens.

The School Question.

Some friend sends us a long article in the San Francisco Argonaut on the above subject by a Mr. W. Gleeson, a Catholic priest of Brooklyn. The points he urges against the public school system are (1) that the schools become secular, and therefore Godless and Infidel, and (2) that they cause the Catholics to lose several thousands of converts every year. This is the burden of his grievance against the schools, but it will puzzle other than a Catholic to see why these are not the very best reasons in favor of the present school system. The charge is made that the system is a failure, but any one who looks around him can see that it is unfounded. Only last week the Catholics had to be reminded that their schools in this city turned out three and a half times as many paupers and criminals as the public schools, and if this be so, the petition to change the one for the other should be met with indignant rejection.

Some of the priest's quotations and admissions are valuable, and we cannot do better than quote. We hav no disposition to find fault with some of his conclusions, for we earnestly hope his predictions may be true, and Ingersoll's prophecy that "the public schools will be the future cathedrals of our nation" may be fulfilled.

"The system is also irreligious and sectarian. Persons get angry and annoyed with us when we tell them that it is pagan and Infidel; but if you eliminate all that is Christian, what, I would ask, can the residue be but pagan and Infidel? Doubtless I will be told that there is a difference between secularism and paganism.. This is merely to throw dust in our eyes. Every tree is judged by its fruit, and if the fruit in this case be Infidel, or, what is the same, an abandonment of the practice of all Christian duties, the inference is plain that the system is Infidel. You can't hav an effect without a cause, and if the effect in the case of the public school teaching is Infidelity, the logical consequence is that the cause is and must be Infidel. But where is the evidence, you will say, to show that the result of the common school teaching is this? On this point, I think, in all fairness, that the testimony of six millions of people—that is, the declaration of the entire Catholic population of this country—ought to be considered tolerably satisfactory. As far as our own children are concerned, and I presume that we may fairly infer that it is the same with all others, this is what we hav to deplore. For those brought up in the public schools, in ninety cases out of a hundred, cease to be practical members of our church, drift rapidly away into indifferentism, and, if they hold anything at all, end by becoming disciples of such men as Buckner, Spencer, or Auguste Comte."

"On the 21st of October, 1877, Dr. Platt said in his sermon: 'As Protestants we should Christianize our education; because, first, if our secular schools were instituted exclusivly to build up Protestantism, they were a great blunder, for they are breaking it down.' Mark that. 'Secular schools, continued the doctor, 'in the interest of Protestantism are a fatal blunder. . . . Secularism saves nothing—not even itself. . . . As to Protestantism, it is only a question of time when our present system will render it a dead factor. The issue is by these schools narrowing the contest down to Romanism on the one hand and Infidelity on the other. . . . As American citizens we should Christianize our education. . . . When religion fails all fails.' And further on in the same discourse he said: 'The danger to civil liberty is not from ecclesiasticism, but from those degraded disciples of secularism—those Bible-hating, Sabbath-breaking, God-deriding cormorants of office, who make a trade of politics and liv upon what they can plunder of the public taxes.'"

"Again, as far back as 1848, when Infidelity was not as rampant as it is to-day, the General Presbyterian Assembly of America resolved upon recommending to their congregations the necessity of erecting primary and other schools, where the teaching and duties of religion should be carried on in connection with the usual branches of secular learning. To the foregoing I will add only another testimony. It is that which was delivered at the Convention of the Southern Baptists, held in Marion, Alabama, on the 12th of April, 1871, when it was affirmed 'that the tendency of the common school system was to foster Infidelity,' and that 'the only hope is Christian education in our own schools.'

"I could giv you almost numberless other instances of like disapproval on the part of Protestant gentlemen of education divorced from religion; but, sir, I think you will acknowledge from the instances I hav adduced that Catholics are not the only persons in the community who object to purely secular education apart from religious instruction. I sincerely hope that the day may not be far distant when Catholic and Protestant clergymen will stand on the same platform and fight in the same lines when battling for the accomplishment of this so much needed educational reform. And unless some such action as this is taken, and taken very soon, too, I most confidently predict that in a couple of generations the grass will be growing before most of the church doors of America, and Bob Ingersoll's prophecy will be fulfilled—viz., that the public schools will be the future cathedrals of our nation."

That our present school system, when not perverted from its rightful use, is irreligious in the sense Mr. Gleeson means it, is true; but too often are the scholars taught rubbish from the Bible that takes years to eradicate from their minds. Our system is intended to be purely secular, for in our schools are the children of Catholics, Protestants, Infidels, and Spiritualists. They all hav their religious rights, which must be respected by the state. Either each sect must hav a religious teacher, or all must be content to provide religious instruction for themselvs. We guarantee the Infidels will find no fault with this. If it is demonstrated that religion (Christianity) has been a damage to the world, and is to-day, surely the system of education that does not inculcate it cannot be blamed. The Christians ought to be satisfied that their history has not yet been taught in the public schools, for when the time comes that the bloody career of the church is known, not only will ninety out of every hundred public-school scholars be simply indifferent, but they will turn against it as the greatest curse mankind has felt. And so we cannot find fault with a system that is making education common and opening eyes the church has kept closed under a pillow of darkness.

But with the priest's assertion that, "even in a purely temporal sense, entirely apart from man's spiritual interests, be assured of it that this system is a dangerous one, and will inevitably sooner or later make itself unfavorably felt. It will undermine the very foundations of the government of the country. There is abundant evidence in the history of the past to show that governments that rested on mere material civilization had not the proper foundation. What nations in their day were greater than ancient Egypt, Greece, or Rome? Where was civilization carried to a higher point of perfection than at Thebes, Heliopolis, Athens, and Rome? And does not the traveler to-day, when visiting the scenes of these ancient seats of art, see around him on all sides nothing but ruins? Why did they fall? The plain answer is, Their civilization was material, and, being only material, it went down before the rude blows of time. And so shall it be with every nation that builds on the same insecure foundation. A thorough Christian education is the only security for the stability of the nation," we must differ widely. He mentions as instances cities and countries that had a surplus of religion—not Christianity, but superstitions just as degrading, gods just as mythical, and forms of worship as evanescent. "Nations, like individuals, hav their periods of youth, of manhood, of decay." These old countries decayed because their time had come. They decayed as this country will decay in time, as some of the countries of Europe are now decaying, and their multiplicity of gods was a great help to the rotting process.

But if a thorough Christian education is security against decay, why is Spain among the fifth-rate powers to-day, when she ruled the world but three hundred years ago? She is thoroughly Christian, and thoroughly rotten. Catholicism has degraded her beyond redemption. Italy, too, was sunk in ruin till an Infidel seized the reins of government. France was ruined with her Jesuits. With no connection between church and state she is prosperous. Ireland—poor Ireland!—the mother of brilliant beggars and exiled heroes—it is the church and nothing else that has made her the slave and football of one nation and a laughing-stock for all the rest.

What the Catholic church wants is separate schools, to be run by teachers appointed by the church, in the interests of the church, but to be paid by the state! Note the selfishness of this:

"Well, but you may say, What can we do to accommodate you? You surely don't expect us to go and build separate establishments for you Catholics. You don't expect us to pull down these institutions which we hav raised at such cost, and in which we hav such faith. Most assuredly this is not our demand nor desire; we are not so unreasonable. We are ready to meet you more than half-way in the settlement of this important matter. We will go this far: We will put up the schools we need, and will furnish them in a manner to suit you at our own expense. The teachers we require we will take from those you hav already appointed, in every instance where they are of our own faith; and if we cannot find the necessary number in this way, we will present to your boards candidates for the position of teacher, so that you may hav an assurance that the instructors in our schools hav the necessary qualifications. Furthermore, we will willingly allow your inspectors to examin our pupils to see that they are proficient in their studies. In a word, we will giv you all that you are getting now, and a great deal more—that is, moral training, together with secular instruction. And for all this we only ask what you are paying under the present system. Again I ask, what is there unfair in that? Does not that system prevail in England, Ireland, and Scotland? Does it not prevail in Upper and Lower Canada? Does it not even prevail in a part of this country—namely, in Richmond county, Georgia? And if it has been found to work admirably in those places, why not here?"

Mr. Gleeson's claim that the public schools are making Freethinkers we admit. That they are reducing the number of Catholics in the country we are glad of. His claim to hav separate schools is in direct opposition to the principles of our government. There is no God in our Constitution yet.

The moment the religious sects began to parcel out the schools, that moment dooms our republic. The American people are not quite insane enough to yield to the Jesuits who hav stealthily crept in among us. The public-school system of the United Kingdom is not an admirable one, if we may judge it by its fruits. Scotland is the most immoral country on the face of the earth in proportion to its population. It has more illegitimate children. It drinks more whisky. It has more harlots. Its population is the most hypocritical, except Ireland's. Ireland has the most ignorant population. It is the dirtiest and most priest-ridden. Its people are the most unhappy and discontented. Notwithstanding God's special agent, the pope, looks after them very carefully, they cannot do anything to better their condition. England's Catholic schools are hotbeds of sedition. When church and state are united and the former controls the schools they are always bad. Italy, for hundreds of years the home of Romanism, proves this beyond dispute. In that country, when ruled by Pius IX., only eight million out of twenty-four million could read the simple alphabet. Tyler makes the assertion that formerly many of the Catholic bishops could not read the Bible, and we may well credit it when a priest of France says that to-day his fellow-priests cannot see that the earth is round. Just previous to the downfall of the pope Senator Briaschi made the following report concerning the schools he investigated:

"Young men who had been in training six or seven years had no knowledge whatever of geometry, algebra, or arithmetic. Of Italian literature they knew almost nothing, regarding Faust, Tasso, Virgil, and even the Psalmist David, as contemporaries. The students were ignorant alike of geography and history, even of Italy. The Adriatic was said to be a mountain, Sardinia a city, Milan the capital of Sicily, etc. One told me Brutus was a tyrant, another that Petrarch was one of the illustrious poets. One said Columbus was an apostle, another that he was the Holy Ghost. In general they were unable to write the simplest numbers from dictation."

Briaschi adds:

"If popery had much longer retained the temporal sway in Rome, education would hav disappeared."

Willard and Hallam both bear testimony to the same effect. Catholicism is degradation, ignorance, slavery. Catholic schools are repressors of education. Whether the church loses or gains by our public schools it has no right to any share of the public money to establish sectarian schools of its own. Public schools are places for secular instruction. If any sect wants religious schools let it establish them, get those to attend who like such things, and let it pay the bills out of its own pockets. If the Catholics don't like this state of affairs, they can emigrate.

The Hamilton "Tribune's" Error.

The stricture's of the Hamilton, Ont., Evening Tribune on the Tories of England are excellent, coming from a province which glories in seizing and confiscating heretical books, but it makes one important mistake common to people to hav read priestly histories of the French Revolution and hav not investigated further. We refer to the statement that Freethinker's "carried the heads of their victims aloft" through the streets of Paris. No such thing was done. That revolution was caused by the oppressions of the priests and lords, and it was natural that the long downtrodden peasantry should commit acts of violence in retaliation, but they did not go so far as is charged. Besides, they were not Infidels from conviction's sake, but simply Christians exasperated against their priests. Reason was deified by some of the leaders of that time, and it is a noteworthy fact that the most humane were the freest thinkers. Robespierre, Marat, and Danton were essentially religious and supertitious. "If God did not exist," said Robespierre, "it would behoove us to invent him." It is well known that Paine was imprisoned because he pleaded for the life of the king.

The stories about the murderous excesses of the Freethinkers in the French Revolution are priestly lies, told for a purpose, and still reiterated though refuted a thousand times.

Notes.

MARRIED.—On Wednesday afternoon, April 25, 1883, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Prof. W. F. Jamieson, of Chicago, Mr. William B. Fuller and Miss Cora E. Howe, all of Braidwood.

THE Executiv Committee of the New York State Freethinkers' Association hav decided to hold the annual convention in Rochester in the Corinthian Academy. It will begin August 29th. The Rochester Liberals hav generously raised the money to pay for the hall.

WE would again say that we do not use anonymous communications. The name and address of the writer must be given us, though we will withhold them from print if so desired; but it seems to us that the man who cannot publicly father his thought on any subject lacks either sincerity or courage.

THE following is extracted from the testimony taken by the Board now investing the Tewksbury, Mass., Almshouse abuses:

"The Tewksbury investigation was resumed this morning. Christian Mueller testified to tanning human skin, received from various doctors and students, and a pair of slippers made from a woman's skin was shown!"

Massachusetts is a famed Christian commonwealth, with more religion to the square inch than any other state except Delaware.

SUNDAY before last, we see by a Rochester paper, seven professed "converts" were baptized in Eldridge lake. The water, we are informed, was "frigid," but the converts "had to drive a mile or two to their homes after the immersion before they could warm themselvs or put on dry clothes. A similar baptism is announced for each Sunday for several successiv weeks." There is on the statute book of this state a law making it a crime to attempt suicide. It is probable this law will not be enforced in this case, although if there ever was a deliberate attempt at this crime it seems to us this baptism is one. Perhaps a more appropriate board of officials to judge this case would be a commission de lunatico inquirendo.

A GOOD many of the church people and papers do not take kindly to the new version of the N. T. (short for New Testament). Considering it lately, the Guardian wound up by giving it this kick:

"The Revision has had, and will still continue to hav, some valne among scholars as a mere commentary upon difficult and disputed texts; but even in this respect, it is becoming of less and less consequence, as it is proved that the original Greek text which was made the basis of the new translation is often of very doubtful authority. Among the great mass of Christian readers, its uncouth phraseology has always been exceedingly offensiv, and especially as the change from the authorized version in multitudes of cases could only hav been made in a spirit of sheer wantonness—change, for the sake of change."

LAST Sunday's program of the services of song at the Five Points House of Industry, says the Herald, contained some verses entitled "I Should Like to Die, Said Willie." The name of the author attached was Bliss, and as only the words of this song out of many others were printed on the programme, the inference is that they were considered exceptionally fine. The first and third verses ran:

"I should like to die, said Willie, if my papa could die too;
But he says he isn't ready, 'cause he has so much to do;
And my little sister Nellie says that I must surely die,
And that she and mamma—then she stopp'd, because it made me cry;
And that she and mamma—then she stopp'd, because it made me cry.

There will be none but the holy—I shall know no more of sin;
Though I'll see my mamma and Nellie, for I know he'll let them in,
But I'll hav to tell the angel, when I meet him at the door,
That he must excuse my papa, 'cause he couldn't leave the store,
That he must excuse my papa, 'cause he couldn't leave the store."

Whether Willie died or not the author does not record, but it is to be hoped that he had his own way about it, and that the author followed him before he had opportunity to pen more verses of this kind for children's perusal. Such morbidly unhealthy sentiments do more to take the manhood out of boys than the dime novels so vigorously denounced from the very pulpits that countenance trash like the above.

METHODISM seems to be the worst of the various sectarian phases of Christianity for producing immoralities. Its preachers are constantly getting tried for "conduct unbecoming a minister" in connection with some seductiv female member of the congregation; and the "sisters" appear to be very willing to promote the pleasures of the parsons. The Methodists are also very self-righteous. Until recently there existed a small collection of them in Pennsylvania so sensitiv in their perfection that in using the Lord's prayer they omitted the clause, "Forgiv us our trespasses," because it implied a confession of faults. But when the leader of the society left his wife and ran away with a young woman who had been especially prominent in refusing to repeat the prayer except in the altered form, the clique speedily broke up.

PROF. GEORGE P. FISHER, of Yale, who, it will be remembered, was called in to help out Judge Black in his discussion with Col. Ingersoll, says that the prevalence of religious skepticism and disbelief is by no means confined to communities in which newspapers and magazines abound, but is manifest in the furthest frontier settlements. He thinks that the concentration of attention upon the study of material nature, the wondrous inventions and improvements, the increase of material comfort and prosperity, are among the influences which hav indirectly produced the existing state of things. Mr. Fisher is correct. The more civilized people are, and the more they study nature, the less room they see for a narrow religion that is in direct opposition to all the facts they observe.

PASTOR GEORGE H. HEPWORTH, D.D., is a vigorous writer, and when he puts pen to paper, he, so to speak, bears his whole weight upon it. In a recent article upon "Marriage as a Crime," in which he deals with the every-day abuse of marrying for money, he says:

"We stoop to 'unconfinable baseness' for gold, and we even marry for gold, which, if the grim and horrible truth must be told, is only a mild phrase which throws the mantle of rhetoric over deliberate but well-paid prostitution. Whosoever givs the person, through the solemn rite of marriage, without the heart; whosoever, for the sake of houses and lands and equipage and position, and not for love and love only, puts her hand into the hand of a man, is thenceforward no wife, but something far other. That certain legal forms hav been completed with many seal the lips of open criticism; but facts are facts, in spite of it all."

It is refreshing to hear the pastor of a wealthy New York congregation express himself in this unreserved fashion. This is done, however, in a newspaper, and not in a sermon. It would be interesting to know how many there are among the "opulent women" of Mr. Hepworth's flock to whom these remarks apply with something like the force of a personal allusion. We venture the opinion that there are so many that he would not dare to repeat from his pulpit the paragraph quoted. Like the rest of the Christian world, Pastor Hepworth's congregation would prefer to go to heaven by the down grade.

THE Literary Churchman says: "Those who believe that 'civilization' without religion is enough to regenerate the world may be interested by the 'proclamation' issued by that truculent savage, who for the sins of England yet remains unhung. The 'resources of civilization' are, of course, dynamite and similar explosivs." And then it quotes: "Mr. O'Donovan exhibited the following 'proclamation,' which is being circulated in behalf of the Revolutionary Council of the Fenian Brotherhood:

"'England is afraid that Ireland will use the resources of civilization against her, and that which England is afraid of is that which Ireland should use. Irishmen hav at last found out the way of knocking a fall and a screech out of England, and the old harridan is roaring with rage and terror at the Irishmen who are striking her. But those Irishmen are not to be restrained by her roars and threats. They will fight against her with their own weapons; they will exhaust the resources of civilization against her. Will you help them?'"

We would call the Churchman's attention to the fact that Mr. Rossa is a strict Catholic Christian. Also to the fact that no Freethinker has recommended or used dynamite in England. But then, what is the use of asking a churchman to see or admit the truth?

THE Chicago Herald has not a very high opinion of Joe Cook, and expresses itself like this:

"The Rev. Joseph Cook does not seem to hav succeeded in getting the reformed newspaper bee out of his bonnet. If the Rev. Joseph will attentivly read the editorial columns alone of any one of the twelve chief American newspapers, he will find there more good ideas in regard to progress, and stronger blows for the right, than the Boston Monday lectureship has made during its whole existence. If he seeks to know the actual condition of the world at large from day to day, there is no way of doing this but throught the news columns of the press. If he will examin the advertising columns of the same papers he will find objectionable advertisments in not more than three or four of them all, and only to a very limited extent in any. Many papers, like the Herald, never admit them. These facts are well known to all newspaper readers, and they should be to the Rev. Cook himself. This being the case, the Herald submits that the neat and proper course for the Rev. Joseph and his followers is to establish their proposed moral engin without further noise and show with it how the world can be moved. Or let them brace up the religious press until it reaches the point where the public will read it and respect it for the life there is in it without pulpit urging. The Herald regrets to say, further, that in its opinion the Rev. Joseph is out of order in traveling by public conveyance. A windmill has no right to 'go' by steam."

THE old story of the philosopher gazing at the heavens and falling into a ditch at his feet is familiar to all. The Winsted Press would doubtless apply it to the Spiritualists, and it is very appropriate to some of them in the East, but we hav always found those out West as alive to Christian intolerance and as ready to oppose it as other Freethinkers. The Press says:

"Free speech is being attacked by the holy bigots in various quarters. The latest outrage is upon the Spiritualists of Ohio, where the legislature has just laid a license tax of $300 on all mediums, speaking mediums included. No doubt it is all 'for God's sake,' for piety never does anything specially shameful without somehow making its idols the excuse, but 'for God's sake' let the Spiritualists and other Liberals of Ohio combine to test the constitutionality of this act, and whether it is decided to be constitutional or not let them stop voting the old party bigots into office. While the Spiritualists hav been 'bathing in the light of inspiration' and riveting their eyes on some other shore the pious rascals hav crept up shyly and stolen their clothes! This should teach them the necessity of looking sharply after the things of this world, even to the extent, if necessary, of letting the other take care of itself. If they don't they may fare worse at the hands of the miserable Forgodsakites than did the Quakers of Plymouth. Spiritualists as a class hav seemed to think their garments too 'pure' to be mussed in the rough work of defending free speech, but perhaps now that their ox is gored they will come down from their toplofty conceits and help Freethinkers maintain for all the right which is so dear to themselvs."

IT appears that our forebodings in Mr. Bradlaugh's case hav been realized, and the Affirmation bill defeated, but not by the House of Lords. Parliament has proved itself sufficiently under church domination to prevent the bill reaching that conclave of brainless aristocracy. It was refused a second reading by a vote of 292 to 289—three majority against it instead of the thirty for it we were led by the cable dispatches to expect. It appears that the worst passions of the churchmen hav been aroused by the failure of the court to convict Mr. Bradlaugh of blasphemy, and this taken in conjunction with Mr. Gladstone's speech in favor of the Affirmation bill has led them to work with great zeal against the bill. The day after the defeat Mr. Bradlaugh presented himself in the House, asking to be permitted to take the oath. The speaker requested the pleasure of Parliament as to the case. A Mr. Northcote moved that he (Bradlaugh) be precluded from going through the form. Mr. Labouchere moved that Mr. Bradlaugh be heard in his own behalf, upon which that gentleman arose and said that the law had given him a seat in the House, and in the name of the law he demanded it. His exclusion was an act of flagrant iniquity. No act of his had justified the action of the House, which should declare his seat vacant or pass a bill disqualifying him. As long as he was not disqualified, he would claim the right to his seat. Mr. Labouchere opposing Mr. Northcote's motion to exclude Mr. Bradlaugh, Mr. Gladstone moved the previous question. The vote was 271 to 165 in favor of the motion, and Mr. Bradlaugh is therefore once more shut out. After the vote he spoke for half an hour, arguing his right to his seat, but no change was made.

A DISCUSSION of the "Salvation Army" took place lately in the British "Upper House" and the opinions expressed of that horde of screaming vagabonds are interesting. The bishop of Oxford was outspoken as to the immorality which had, he said, in some cases followed the meetings of the Salvation Army, observing that the ratio of illegitimate births had increased in proportion to the number of meetings which the Salvation Army had held in some parts of the country. The bishop of Lichfield said he had had a profound distrust of this movement from the first. The extravagances of the movement were increasing every day, and must increase in order to keep up the excitement. The latest development in his own diocese was scarcely credible, but he had in his possession a placard which stated that a captain of the Salvation Army in Derby would preach the gospel standing on his head for ten minutes, and, what was more, he kept his promis. The bishop of Hereford read a placard which had been posted in Hereford, announcing that the services of the Salvation Army "would be conducted all day by the two great devil hunters," and he remarked that it was impossible for any one to read the Rev. Charles Bullock's reply to the Secret Book of the Salvation Army, without seeing that it was the bounden duty of the clergy to signify their stern disapproval of the proceedings of that Army. It is curious but not surprising that the preachers are now coming to occupy the same position regarding these people that the Freethinkers hav all along expressed. Emotional religion is the basis of a large share of the immorality rampant among the Christians. It especially leads to sexual lapses from virtue, and if revivals and camp-meeting are to continue to be a feature of Christianity, the church people should be taxed to maintain foundling asylums for "little orphans."

The Lecture Field.

THE Rocky Mountain Howitzer reports that "Prof. W. S. Bell, of Boston, who has been lecturing in Colorado for some weeks past, and of whom the press speak in terms of commendation, is expected to be in Greeley Sunday, the 13th of May, and deliver a lecture on 'Liberty and Morality,' in Unitarian Hall."

W. F. JAMIESON is engaged in lecturing every evening and twice every Sunday in Merrillan and in Neillsville, Wis. He is engaged to deliver five lectures in Pipe Stone, Minn., commencing May 27th. He will accept calls to deliver three courses of five lectures each course, between May 10th and 25th. Address him at Lake City, Minn.

MRS. H. S. LAKE speaks for the Pittsburgh Liberal League during the Sundays of May. She has been re-engaged by the Independent Church of Alliance, and the Liberals of Salem, O., for the Sundays of June, speaking twice each Sunday. Parties wishing her services for grove meetings or other lectures during July, or for the week evenings of June, will please address her at Pittsburgh, Pa.

C. FANNIE ALLYN, who has been in the lecture-field a devoted worker for many years, is now speaking in Michigan. The papers in that state contain highly commendatory notices of her platform utterances. Upon one occasion she was present at a Knights of Labor meeting. The subject of her discourse was, "Do the Laboring Classes of America Receive their Just Dues?" The local paper, in noticing her lecture, makes the following complimentary remarks:

"This lady is a good public speaker, and the thoughts advanced by her received the hearty applause of those present. She reasoned that the reading and thinking laboring classes of this country could and would right the wrongs they are living under without a conflict between capital and labor, and that socially, politically, and financially they could accomplish their purposes and receive their just dues by co-operation and an appeal to the ballot. Her ideas in regard to false education were good, and the illustrations plain and convincing. At the close of the lecture a vote of thanks was extended the lady, when she closed by reciting a poem appropriate to the occasion."

Selections.

Col. Ingersoll Makes the Clergy Appear Small.

From the Chicago Daily News.

Robert Ingersoll very rarely takes the trouble to answer critics. His recent address over the dead body of his friend, John G. Mills, has called forth a storm of denunciation from nearly every pulpit in the country. The writer called at the colonel's office on New York avenue yesterday, and asked him to reply to some of the points made against him. Reluctantly he assented.

"There are always people kind enough to send me anything they hav the slightest reason to think I do not care to read," said Mr. Ingersoll, when asked whether he had seen recent clerical strictures upon his doctrins. "They seem to be animated by a missionary spirit," he continued, "and apparently want to be in a position when they see me in hell to exclaim: 'You can't blame me. I sent you all the impudent articles I saw, and if you died unconverted it was no fault of mine!'"

"Did you notice that a Washington clergyman said that the very fact that you were allowed to speak at the funeral was in itself a sacrilege, and that you ought to hav been stopped?"

"Yes, I think I saw some such story in the Post. Of course the clergy regard marriages and funerals as the perquisits of the pulpit, and they resent any interference on the part of the pews. They look at these matters from a business point of view. They made the same cry against civil marriages. They denied that marriage was a contract, and insisted that it was a sacrament, and that it was hardly binding unless a priest had blessed it. They used to bury in consecrated ground, and had marks upon the graves, so that Gabriel might know the ones to wake. The clergy wish to make themselvs essential. They must christen the babe—this givs them possession of the cradle. They must perform the ceremony of marriage—this givs them possession of the family. They must pronounce the funeral discourse—this givs them possession of the dead. Formerly they denied baptism to the children of the unbeliever, marriage to him who denied the dogmas of the church, and burial to honest men. The church wishes to control the world, and wishes to sacrifice this world for the next. Of course I am in favor of the utmost liberty upon all these questions. When a Presbyterian dies, let a follower of John Calvin console the living by setting forth 'the five points.' When a Catholic becomes clay, let a priest perform such ceremonies as his creed demands, and let him picture the delights of purgatory for the gratification of the living. And when one dies who does not believe in any religion, having expressed a wish that somebody say a few words above his remains, I see no reason why such a proceeding should be stopped; and, for my part, I see no sacrilege in it. Why should the reputations of the dead and the feelings of those who liv be placed at the mercy of the ministers? A man dies, not having been a Christian, and who, according to the Christian doctrin, is doomed to eternal fire. How would an honest Christian minister console the widow and the fatherless children? How would he dare to tell what he claims to be truth in the presence of the living? The truth is, the Christian minister in the presence of death abandons his Christianity. He dares not say above the coffin, 'The soul that once inhabited this body is now in hell.' He would be denounced as a brutal savage. Now and then a minister at a funeral has been brave enough, and unmannerly enough, to express his doctrin in all its hideousness of hate. I was told that in Chicago, many years ago, a young man, member of a volunteer fire company, was killed by the falling of a wall, and, at the very moment the wall struck him, he was uttering a curse. He was a brave and splendid young man. An orthodox minister said above his coffin, in the presence of his mother and of mourning friends, that he saw no hope for the soul of that young man. The mother, who was also orthodox, refused to hav her boy buried with such a sermon—stopped the funeral, took the corpse home, engaged a Universalist preacher, and, on the next day, having heard a man say that there was no place in the wide universe of God without hope, and that her son would finally stand among the redeemed, this mother laid her son away, put flowers above his grave, and was satisfied."

"What hav you to say to the charge that you are preaching the doctrin of despair and hopelessness, when they hav the comforting assurances of the Christian religion to offer?"

"All I hav to say is this: If the Christian religion is true, as commonly preached—and when I speak of Christianity I speak of the orthodox Christianity of the day—if that be true, those whom I hav loved the best are now in torment. Those to whom I am the most deeply indebted are now suffering the vengeance of God. If this religion be true, the future is of no value to me. I care nothing about heaven, unless the ones I love and hav loved are there. I know nothing about the angels. I might not like them, and they might not like me. I would rather meet there the ones who hav loved me here—the ones who would hav died for me, and for whom I would hav died, and if we are to be eternally divided—not because we differed in our views of justice, not because we differed about friendship, or love, or candor, or the nobility of human action, but because we differed in belief about the atonement, or baptism, or the inspiration of the scriptures—and if some of us are to be in heaven and some in hell, then, for my part, I prefer eternal sleep. To me the doctrin of annihilation is infinitly more consoling than the probable separation preached by the orthodox clergy of our time. Of course, even if there be a God, I like persons that I know better than I can like him—we hav more in common—I know more about them; and how is it possible for me to love the infinit and unknown, better than the ones I know? Why not hav the courage to say that if there be a God, all I know about him I know by knowing myself and my friends—by knowing others? And, after all, is not a noble man, is not a pure woman, the finest revelation we hav of God—if there be one? Of what use is it to be false to ourselvs! What moral quality is there in theological pretense? Why should a man say that he loves God better than he does his wife, or his children, or his brother, or his sister, or his warm, true friend?

"Several ministers hav objected to what I said about my friend Mr. Mills on the ground that it was not calculated to console the living. Mr. Mills was not a Christian. He denied the inspiration of the scriptures. He believed that restitution was the best repentance, and that, after all, sin is a mistake. He was not a believer in total depravity, nor in the atonement. He denied these things. He was an unbeliever. Now, let me ask, what consolation could a Christian minister hav given to his family? He could hav said to the widow and the orphans, to the brother and sister: 'Your husband, your father, your brother, is now in hell; dry your tears; weep not for him, but try and save yourselvs. He has been damned as a warning to you; care no more for him; why should you weep over the grave of a man whom God thinks fit only to be eternally tormented? Why should you love the memory of one whom God hates?'

"The minister could hav said: 'He had an opportunity—he did not take it. The life-boat was lowered—he would not get in it—he has been drowned, and the waves of God's wrath will sweep over him forever.' This is the consolation of Christianity, and the only honest consolation that Christianity can hav for the widow and orphans of an unbeliever. Suppose, however, that the Christian minister has too tender a heart to tell what he believes to be the truth; then he can say to the sorrowing friends: 'Perhaps the man repented before he died; perhaps he is not in hell; perhaps you may meet him in heaven;' and this 'perhaps' is a consolation not growing out of Christianity, but out of the politeness of the preacher—out of paganism."

"Do you not think that the Bible has consolation for those who hav lost their friends?"

"There is about the Old Testament this strange fact—I find in it no burial service. There is in it, I believe, from the first mistake in Genesis to the last curse in Malachi, no remark, not a word said, over the dead, as to their state and place. When Abraham died nobody said: 'He is still alive—he is in another world.' When the prophets passed away, not one word was said as to the heaven to which they had gone. In the Old Testament Saul inquired of the witch and Samuel rose. Samuel did not pretend that he had been living, or that he was alive, but asked: 'Why hast thou disquieted me?' He did not pretend to hav come from some other world. And when David speaks of his son, saying that he could not come back to him, but that he, David, could go to his son, that is but saying that he, too, must die. There is not in the Old Testament one hope of immortality. It is expressly asserted that there is no difference between the man and the beast—that as the one dieth so dieth the other. There is one little passage in Job which commentators hav endeavored to twist into a hope of immortality. Here is a book of hundreds and hundreds of pages and hundreds and hundreds of chapters—a revelation from God—and in it one little passage, which, by a mistranslation, is tortured into saying something about another life. And this is the Old Testament. I hav sometimes thought that the Jews, when slaves in Egypt, were mostly occupied in building tombs for mummies, and that they became so utterly disgusted with that kind of work, that the moment they founded a nation for themselvs they went out of the tomb business. The Egyptians were believers in immortality, and spent almost their entire substance upon the dead. The living were impoverished to enrich the dead. The grave absorbed the wealth of Egypt. The industry of a nation was buried. Certainly the Old Testament has nothing clearly in favor of immortality. In the New Testament we are told about the 'kingdom of heaven'—that is at hand—and about who shall be worthy, but it is hard to tell what is meant by the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of heaven was apparently to be in this world, and it was about to commence. The devil was to be chained for a thousand years, the wicked were to be burnt up, and Christ and his followers were to enjoy the earth. This certainly was the doctrin of Paul when he says: 'Behold I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.' According to this doctrin, those who were alive were to be changed, and those who had died were to be raised from the dead. Paul certainly did not refer to any other world beyond this. All these things were to happen here. The New Testament is made up of the fragments of many religions. It is utterly inconsistent with itself; and there is not a particle of evidence of the resurrection and ascension of Chirst—neither in the nature of things could there be. It is a thousand times more probable that people were mistaken than that such things occurred. If Christ really rose from the dead, he should hav shown himself, not simply to his disciples, but to the very men who crucified him—to Herod, to the high priest, to Pilate. He should hav made a triumphal entry into Jerusalem after his resurrection, instead of before. He should hav shown himself to the Sadducees—to those who desired the existence of spirit.

"Take from the New Testament its doctrin of eternal pain—the idea that we can please God by acts of self-denial that do no good to others—take away all its miracles, and I hav no objection to all the good things in it—no objection to the hope of a future life, if such hope is expressed—not the slightest. And I would not for the world say anything to take from any mind a hope in which dwells the least comfort; but a doctrin that dooms a large majority of mankind to eternal flames ought not to be called a consolation. What I say is that the writers of the New Testament know no more about the future state than I do, and no less. The horizon of life has never been pierced. The veil between time and what is called eternity has never been raised, so far as I know; and I say of the dead what all others must say if they say only what they know. There is no particular consolation in a guess. Not knowing what the future has in store for the human race, it is far better to prophesy good than evil. It is better to hope that the night has a dawn, that the sky has a star, than to build a heaven for the few and a hell for the many. It is better to leave your dead in doubt than in fire—better that they should sleep in shadow than in the lurid flames of perdition. And so I say, and always hav said, let us hope for the best.

"The minister asks: 'What right hav you to hope? It is sacrilegious in you.' But, whether the clergy like it or not, I shall always express my real opinion, and shall always be glad to say to those who mourn: 'There is in death, as I believe, nothing worse than sleep. Hope for as much better as you can. Under the seven-hued arch let the dead rest.' Throw away the Bible, and you throw away the fear of hell, but the hope of another life remains, because the hope does not depend upon a book—it depends upon the heart, upon human affection. The fear, so far as this generation is concerned, is born of the book, and that part of the book was born of savagery. Whatever of hope is in the book is born, as I said before, of human affection, and the higher our civilization the greater the affection. I had rather rest my hope of something beyond the grave upon the human heart than upon what they call the scriptures, because there I find mingled with the hope of something good the threat of infinit evil. Among the thistles, thorns, and briers of the Bible is one pale and sickly flower of hope. Among all its wild beasts and fowls only one bird flies heavenward. I prefer the hope without thorns, without the briers, thistles, hyenas, and serpents.

"Do you not know that it is claimed that immortality was brought to light in the New Testament, that that, in fact, was the principal mission of Christ?"

"I know that Christians claim that the doctrin of immortality was first taught in the New Testament. They also claim that the highest morality was found there. Both these claims are utterly without foundation. Thousands of years before Christ was born—thousands of years before Moses saw the light—the doctrin of immortality was preached by the priests of Osiris and Isis. Funeral discourses were pronounced over the dead ages before Abraham existed. When a man died in Egypt, before he was taken across the sacred lake, he had a trial. Witnesses appeared, and if he had done anything wrong, for which he had not made restitution, he was not taken across the lake. The living friends, in disgrace, carried the body back, and it was buried outside of what might be called consecrated ground, while the ghost was supposed to wander for a hundred years. Often the children of the dead would endeavor to redeem the poor ghost by acts of love and kindness. When he came to the spirit world there was the god Anubis, who weighed his heart in the scales of eternal justice, and if the good deeds preponderated he entered the gates of paradise; if the evil, he had to go back to the world and be born in the bodies of animals for the purpose of final purification. At last the good deeds would outweigh the evil, and, according to the religion of Egypt, the latch-string of heaven would never be drawn in until the last wanderer got home. Immortality was also taught in India, and, in fact, in all the countries of antiquity. Wherever men hav loved, wherever they hav dreamed, wherever hope has spread its wings, the idea of immortality has existed. But nothing could be worse than the immortality promised in the New Testament—admitting that it is so promised—eternal joy side by side with eternal pain. Think of living forever knowing that countless millions are suffering infinit pain! How much better it would be for God to commit suicide and let all life and motion cease! Christianity has no consolation except for the Christian, and if a Christian minister endeavors to console the widow of an unbeliever, he must resort, not to his religion, but to his sympathy—to the natural promptings of the heart. He is compelled to say: 'After all, may be God is not so bad as we think;' or, 'May be your husband was better than he appeared; perhaps somehow, in some way, the dear man has squeezed in; he was a good husband, he was a kind father, and even if he is in hell, maybe he is in the temperate zone, where they hav occasional showers, and where, if the days are hot, the nights are reasonably cool.' All I ask of Christian ministers is to tell what they believe to be the truth—not to borrow ideas from the pagans—not to preach the mercy born of unregenerate sympathy. Let them tell their real doctrins. If they will do that, they will not hav much influence. If orthodox Christianity is true, a large majority of the men who hav made this world fit to liv in are now in perdition. A majority of the revolutionary soldiers hav been damned. A majority of the men who fought for the integrity of this Union—a majority who were starved at Libby and Andersonville—are now in hell."

"Do you deny the immortality of the soul?"

"I never hav denied the immortality of the soul. I hav simply been honest. I hav said: 'I do not know.' Long ago, in my lecture on 'The Ghosts,' I used the following language: 'The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear beating against the shores and rocks of Time and Fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion; it was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists of clouds and darkness as long as Love kisses the lips of Death. It is the rainbow of hope shining upon the tears of grief.'" T. T. C.

Progress of Archæological Discovery in Central America.

From the Scientific American.

Of the fact of there being ruins of ancient cities, hitherto shrouded in mystery, scattered over that large tract of country which separates North from South America most persons are now aware. But their nature, age, or relation to the early history of the world has remained till quite recently a matter of which comparativly nothing has been know. It has, however, been for some time recognized that among the most interesting of these archæological remains are some in Yucatan—a penisula dividing the Gulf of Mexico from that of Honduras, situated between 17 deg. 30 min., and 21 deg. 56 min. N. lat., and at no great distance from Cuba.

Determined to explore these ruins and learn the lessons they might teach, a scientific investigator, Dr. Augustus Le Plongeon, accompanied by his wife, set out on a mission of discovery to Yucatan in August, 1873, from which he recently returned. Ten years previous to this he had determined the task of writing an account of prehistoric America, and having dedicated himself to this work, had found, after having explored the the ruins of antiquity found in Peru and Bolivia since 1862, that in Yucatan were situated the most valuable materials for such work; and a residence of nine years, constantly engaged in explorations both of a super- and subterranean nature, has made him familiar with many of the Yucatan ruins. Both he and his wife being skilful practical amateur photographers, they hav secured numerous negativs of the ruins, embracing many detailed portions. They hav also obtained, by means of a plastic material similar to what is used in French stereotyping, upward of two hundred casts from the more important sculptures and mural decorations, several of which are being reproduced in plaster, thus showing the work in fac simile.

Attention was concentrated upon the cities of Uxmal, Chichenitza, Ake, and Mayapan. There are other cities as large as these, but they are in the possession of the hostil Indians; still other cities which are fraught with interest in an exceptional degree, for they hav been inhabited by a race of dwarfs, compared with whom the dwarfs of popular exibitions are almost giants. The diminutiv stature of the inhabitants is shown by the buildings, the doorways of which, Dr. and Mrs. Le Plongeon assured us, are thirty-six inches high by eighteen inches in width. One of the largest temples in these dwarf cities is twelve feet long by nine feet wide, everything else about them being in the same ratio of dimensions. The names of some of these cities are Meka, Nicte, and Cankun. These are situated on the east coast of Yucatan, opposit the islands of Mugeres and Cozumel. They are at present very difficult of exploration owing to the frequent visits made by parties of hostil Indians, who are well armed, and in skirmishes with whom no quarter is either expected or given.

In Uxmal there are several ruins in a state of excellent preservation. These prove in an incontestable manner that in early ages a high degree of civilization existed. The date of the erection of several of these edifices is believed to be not less than six thousand years ago, although Dr. Le Plongeon is of opinion that there is much that points to an antiquity of ten thousand years. It being of the greatest importance that the antiquity of these remains of a former civilization should be determined, we here present a few of the reasons given by which this is sought to be established.

In one temple, which is richly decorated both with marble and other stone, portions are profusely covered over with inscriptions and writings in the Maya language, in writing of an ancient nature hitherto unknown, but the key to which has been discovered by Dr. and Mrs. Le Plongeon, by dint of much perseverance. With this new alphabet they hav been enabled to decipher many of these records of ages of the long ago. The age of these erections is discoverable, first from the Katuns found in the city of Ake, mentioned by the chroniclers, who tell us that at the time of the Spanish Conquest such Katuns were still being used. These consist of columns of stone, eight in a column. One is placed every twenty years. On the top of the seventh, and at each corner, is placed another stone, these corner stones being laid at intervals of four years, and on the ccmpletion of the twenty years represented by them a large stone is placed over all, thus completing the column, or Ahau-Katun, which thus marks a period of one hundred and sixty years. Now, in one building were found thirty-six of these columns, which represent at least six thousand years as the time that had elapsed from the erection of that temple to that at which the last stone was laid on these time columns; and the time that intervened between the completing of these records by the placing of this last stone and the Conquest is not known in this case.

Another guide to the discovery of the antiquity of these erections is the worship of deity in the form of the mastodon's head. Now, as this animal has been extinct for ten thousand years, it follows that either the builders of these temples or their fathers were familiar with it, for had they not known the mastodon they could not hav made an image or a picture of it, and all of the buildings throughout the peninsula are ornamented with the mastodon's head, and some of the sculptures represent human figures in the act of worshiping it.

The buildings in most cases are formed of a white limestone, the stones being all cut nearly to one size and very closely fitted together. The outsides are square, but they are cut in a pyramidal form. The ceiling of the buildings form a triangular arch; the rooms are generally long and narrow, but very lofty, the walls and floors being cemented with concrete. At Uxmal is a building called Monjas, which consists of a hundred and twenty rooms, all arranged in pairs, each pair communicating with one another by a doorway, but with none of the others, except through the courtyard. There are no interior sculptures, all being on the outside, and in these a certain local style or order has been observed, for while at Uxmal the ornaments are all found above the doorways and façades, at Chichenitza they reach down to the ground. One edifice, known as the Governor's House, is 293 feet in length. They are mostly erected on artificial terraces composed of stones laid on the top of each other, one of these being similar in style to the "hanging gardens" of Babylon.

The great question of popular interest regarding these archæological remains is, What do they teach us? Apart from the history of the family affairs of the contemporary kings, which can now be read with comparativ plainness by the explorers, it has been discovered that there is an almost absolute identity between the language, the manners, and customs of these prohistoric Yucatanese and those of Chaldea, Egypt, Hindostan, Persia, Burmah, and Siam, and that an early and cultivated civilization, imagined to be of a higher type than any other, existed in Yucatan. It has also been discovered and established beyond cavil that Freemasonry existed in these prehistoric times with the same Masonic symbols as are now in use, proofs of this being found in the photographs and casts; and that what is now known as mesmerism existed six thousand years ago in very much the same form as it does at present, as shown by the decorations on the frescoed walls. Among the customs common to the Yucatanese are to be found some also common to the inhabitants of Hindostan, such as the manner of carrying children astride on the hip. The making of an impression of the hand in red pigment on the walls of certain sacred edifices was common in former times both to Yucatan, to Elephanta and other places in India, and even in caves in Australia and other of the South Sea Islands. There is scarcely a monument in Yucatan upon which is not to be found the impression of a red hand, this being the record of a vow made to the gods. Fire-worship, phallic and mastodon worship, together with gods having elephants' heads, flourished in Yucatan in these early periods.

The Maya language, still spoken in Yucatan, was also known in many parts of the East. The last words of Jesus of Nazareth, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani, are said to be pure Maya words, and to mean, "Now, now, I sink; darkness comes over my face." From the narrativ, it would seem that none of those standing within hearing understood the language made use of, as they imagined he was calling upon Elias to aid him. Enough has been said to indicate the great interest that attaches to Yucatan.

Our London Letter.

It is most gratifying, after the adverse verdict in the Freethinker case, to record the two victories gained by Charles Bradlaugh last week. The individuals who instigated the prosecution in these cases will hav but little cause to congratulate themselvs on the results. Probably Newdegate, with all his piety, will be somewhat of the opinion that the God whom he has championed must be somewhat ungrateful in not turning the hearts of the judges in his favor, instead of against him, and thereby leaving him to pay the costs, probably not less than £5,000; but perhaps he will comfort himself with the pleasing thought that his reward hereafter will be proportionately great compared with his losses here. The reversal of the decisions of the lower courts is of considerable importance to Mr. Bradlaugh, as it relieves him of liabilities amounting to £45,000, though of course the prosecution never anticipated getting the money in any event, but merely the satisfaction of ruining him financially and politically. And we know only too well that there is nothing so pleasing to a true believer as a successful attempt to ruin an unbeliever.

The manner in which the action was so pluckily fought, and the amount of legal knowledge possessed by the champion of Freethought, hav gained him many admirers even from the ranks of orthodoxy, and hav not redounded in any way to the credit of his opponents. Had he failed he would hav had a swarm of barking curs at his heels, but now they will think twice before daring to attack such a formidable adversary.

As he has up to the present time secured every contest in which he has been engaged, he will in all probability go on from success to success, finding each one less difficult than the last. But it is yet problematical whether he will be able to take his seat in the House of Commons this session. Mr. Gladstone seems inclined to stop the way by making a promis to his political opponents that in the event of the Affirmation bill becoming law it is not intended to make its action retrospectiv, which will entail upon the junior member for Northampton the necessity of being once more elected, and on presenting himself once more to his constituents no stone will be left unturned to insure a defeat at the polls.

The Affirmation bill has set many of the clergy by the ears, and several of the journals hav been inundated with letters on the subject. Some clergymen hold the opinion that when Christ said, "Swear not at all," he really meant it; on the other hand, others think that it was a satirical remark on his part, and that the exact opposit was intended; while a third section maintain that it only referred to the parties to whom he was speaking at the time. The most rabid of them assert dogmatically that as soon as the oath is abolished religion and morality will fall together and the reign of Satan will set in. As there is so great a diversity of opinion amongst the embassadors of God, it is to be regretted for their own sakes that they do not apply to the Holy Ghost for a decision in the matter. But I suppose it would not do for them all to be of one mind in religious questions, as if all was peace and harmony in the church, parsons would not flourish so well; for while the sects are warring with each other and every one else, the money comes rolling in to supply the sinews of war, and the church waxes fat. Preaching seems about the best paying business nowadays, and we find individuals of all trades and professions going in for it during their spare time. Lord Wolseley is the latest authority on the word of God; he informed an appreciativ audience at a city banquet a few days back that "our peace societies, while they fancy they are carrying out the principles of Christianity, seem to mistake entirely its teachings." He is probably quite as correct as those who think differently, for the peculiar beauty of the "blessed word" is that you can commit any crime, or hold any doctrin you like, and find something authoritativ there to prove you are right. It is quite true, what its admirers say, that there is no other book like it in the world, and perhaps it is a good thing that such is the case; one such compilation is quite enough. J. D.

Letters from Friends.

ROCK ISLAND, April 24, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $6—$1 for the Monument Fund, and the balance as directed. With great confidence in the future of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain, Yours truly, J. S. BEAN.

OSCEOLA, April 24, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5. Apply $2 on THE TRUTH SEEKER for remainder of 1883, $1 on the monument, and $2 for running expenses. I'm a thousand times obliged for your kindness.

Truly, L. M. HASTINGS.

NAVARINO, April 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3—$2.50 to renew subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and fifty cents toward the Monument Fund, as I think that will be a good disposition of the change. With due respect,

Yours truly, C. T. CHAFEE.

COVELO, April 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $10.40, for which please send and do as follows: "Answer to Christian Questions and Arguments," 25 cents; Crimes of Preachers," 25 cents; "A Truth Seeker Around the World," by D. M. Bennett, $6.50; I respectfully donate balance toward the loyal D. M. Bennett's monument.

PHILIP A. DEUL.

JANESVILLE, April 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.50 for the good old TRUTH SEEKER for one year. I am well pleased with its teachings, but expect to read it but little longer, as I am now nearly 81 years of age, and my eyesight is getting rather dim. But I still hope for the success of the noble paper. It has no quibbling or false pretense, but cuts its own way like a two-edged sword. WARD WITHAM.

ARLAND, April 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5 for another passage in the ship THE TRUTH SEEKER for myself and another subscriber. I see there is considerable opposition in regard to different questions among the brethren. Now, it appears the main object for us is to obtain our rights equal with the church, and until such rights are established to lay by all other questions. As for myself, I am in my eightieth year, and cannot expect to be long with you, but would like to see our rights secured before I go. Let us hav peace. FRANKLIN ELMER.

SANTA CRUZ, April 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find one dollar, for which please send your truly interesting and liberal paper three months to the subscribers herein named; and if we continue to like it (and we hav no doubt but we will), you can then reckon us as regular subscribers. We wish we could hav found a TRUTH SEEKER sooner, to hav helped us out of the meshes of the priestly net that was thrown around us in our childhood. What a shame that innocent children should be thrust into the toils of the church, where they are taught a slavish reverence for the clergy and their bloodthirsty God, instead of being left free to exercise their own reasoning powers.

M. P. OWEN.

POPLAR CREEK, April 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am truly glad that THE TRUTH SEEKER continues to make its weekly visits, fraught with such useful information. Surely it is a pleasant task to peruse its valuable contents. I would state that I liv near a Presbyterian church, and the members of said church take me as a very dangerous man, because I investigate and tell. They hold that no one but the reader is injured, if he would read and not talk it. How easy it is to portray their liberality; but enough!

Inclosed you will find $1.50, for which you will send THE TRUTH SEEKER another six months, and "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," by D. M. Bennett. J. G. HARRIS.

LOUP CITY, April 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I did not receive the April 7th number, which I understood contained an account of the last and dying words of Thomas Paine. Now, as his supposed last words hav been often thrown at me by Christians, I am very anxious to get the truth of them as near as possible, so you will do me a great favor by forwarding it to me.

We hav quite a large number of Liberals here; our village officers are all Liberals; our principal county officers are also Liberals, and, in fact, four-fifths of the citizens of our little city are Liberals. We hav but one minister living off of the people here. He is a Methodist, and is partly paid by the Home Missionary Society, which is lucky for him, or he surely would starve. He is allowed the privilege of preaching in our court-house. The Catholics are in the greatest number here—that is, of church-going people. They hav a church, and a priest visits them once a month, so that they can confess to him their shortcomings twelve times a year, any how.

I must say before closing that THE TRUTH SEEKER, comes to me every Monday night, and I am always ready to receive it with open arms and heart. I must also commend Mr. John Peck and his "Infidel Philosophy," and the manner he disposed of Brother Towne and his twaddle. If it would not be asking too much of you, would you please inform me through your columns how often the Bible has been revised, and by what people?

Hoping that the dear old TRUTH SEEKER may ever prosper in it good work, I am,

Yours for Freethought, GEO. H. GIBSON.

GREENVILLE, April 18, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Words cannot express the sorrow we felt upon reading of the death of your noble husband. You hav our heartfelt sympathy in your bereavement. We hav taken the dear old TRUTH SEEKER for five years. We are all going to Forest Grove, on the 19th of April, to hear Dr. J. L. York lecture. We feel very much disappointed, as we expected Mr. Bennett with him. Mr. Bennett's death has caused our eyes to fill with tears scores of times.

Please find inclosed $5—$2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER; $1.50 for the fourth volume of around-the-world trip; the rest as directed. When it is decided that they intend to build a Liberal hall to Mr. Bennett's memory, call on me, and I will send some dollars toward it. HENRY BENNETT.

PINAL, April 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, to extend my three months' subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER to one year; also twenty-five cents in stamps for "Answers to Christian Questions." It is a good paper, bears a good name, and deserves the patronage of every civilized human being on earth. Long may it liv, and strong may it prove to crush error, stamp out hypocrisy, and clear away the mythical rubbish that has for so many centuries been the great barrier to to civil, mental, and moral progress. To me it is the greatest of all wonders how, in this professedly enlightened age, such flimsy, unauthenticated, irrational fables can keep so strong a hold on the minds of so large a proportion of seemingly intelligent and presumably thinking human beings. Will these ever abandon their idols? JOHN A. BROADBECK.

FARLEY, April 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 14th is a new version of the "Sweet By and By," which I hav partly committed to memory, and often sing it on the street in the hearing of my orthodox friends. I notice that the young are wonderfully taken up with it, and I hav repeated calls for my paper that they may learn or copy the verses.

The object in writing this letter is to call the attention of Liberals to the influence of a wide circulation of the song among the young people in their respectiv localities. A sentiment learned in song is very hard to banish from the mind; it is equal to the catechism among Catholics. This new version of a very popular song or hymn places Christianity and all of its celestial paraphernalia in their true light, and shows up the absurdity of the whole scheme so plainly that none but the wilfully blind will fail to see. I wish you would put those verses into a leaflet or tract, so that they can be obtained cheap for free distribution. H. GILMORE.

ATTALLA, April 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send $3—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year, 25 cents for "Self-Contradictions of the Bible," and 25 cents for "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments." I would hav remitted earlier, but I hav put it off to the very day my time was up with the expectation of getting subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I hav failed in doing so, so far. But my courage has not failed yet. I am living in a very godly-given community; I am the only person in the county that I can find that is seeking for the truth. That is the reason that I send for "Bible Contradictions" and "Answers to Christian Questions," to help me through a little. The Christians here say that I am one of the most cheerful, generous, and kind-hearted of men in the county, but that the devil must be in me, and they are really very sorry for me; but, let me tell you, they can't squeeze any chickens out of me by pitying my condition. I care not for their friendship as long as I hav the dear old TRUTH SEEKER by me. I am satisfied to liv by that and die by it. Long may it liv to speak truth in the land. W. L NELSON.

ELBERTON, April 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Dear friend, I am now soon to leave Georgia, for East Tennessee. I hav been talking a heap of Freethought down here in this cotton country, where men used to own so many slaves they did not know them when they met them in the road, and believed they did it according to the will of God, as expressed in his word. Well, I find many now who believe the black man was made by their God for the express purpose of serving the white man, and quote their Bible for proof. I also find skeptics who hav been heavy slave-owners; but as a general thing they don't believe that the institution of slavery was right. I am truly glad of this.

I hav found several who like to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, but hav not got the sand to face the orthodox frown. I feel glad that I hav been able to throw a little light into the dungeon of their brains. The transition from the darkness of superstition to the light of truth will be slow, but let us not despair; better late than never. I am at present in rather an odd situation. My brother has been for years dealing out orthodoxy of the Methodist type to these people, and they think it rather strange that I should come into his part of the country, warning the people of the great danger which I see in all the Bible religions, from beginning to end.

W. L. WARLEY.

TRUXTON, April 30, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: This is the first time for me to write to you since the death of Mr. Bennett. I can assure you it is not because I did not feel bad about his death; but there were so many letters of condolence sent you weekly that I came to the conclusion to wait until I could renew my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. But I wish to say that I felt great sorrow on learning of his death—as much as anyone outside of his family could. But his works remain and will wield an influence for ages to come.

Inclosed you will find $1 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and twenty-five cents for Mr. Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions." I mean to send you the old price for THE TRUTH SEEKER and you can do as you please about it. If you think well of sending me some reading matter for the balance you may do so; if not, it will be all right. I think the paper is worth $3, and I told Mr. Bennett I would take it as long as I liked it, and I now tell you the same. I will send you some money for the Monument Fund before long, as I think one should be erected in memory of so great a man. I regret his loss very much, and sympathize with you and all of his friends. May you liv long and guide and protect THE TRUTH SEEKER according to Mr. Bennett's wishes when he was living; and may all his friends help to support it. With kind wishes for the editor, Mr. Macdonald, and sympathy for you, I conclude by saying that I am, For liberty and justice, JOHN DEAN.

MOUND CITY, April 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav a doubt which I wish to express. I think that Infidel writers should be most careful of all writers in the expression of their opinions, whereas I doubt whether they are as careful as others. An article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 14, by Mr. Ockelmann, makes this wonderful statement: "The fundamental principle of Christianity is the principle of love and the universal fraternization of individuals and nations." Shade of Venus! Can that be true? If that is true, the great body of the Freethinkers of the world is a body of the most egregious asses the world has ever known. That principle embodies ninety-nine-hundredths of all that Liberals are working for, and if it be the fundamental principle of Christianity, why not join hands with the Christians and go with the majority?

But is it true? I say it is not. The Christians hav never loved even their brethren. My father was a Baptist, my grandmother a Methodist, and my favorit uncle was a Presbyterian; and I know that the Christian love that exists, or did exist, between these sects, before the work of the Liberals began to make it pleasant for them, was something "pale and curious," like "Capt. Wragg's wine."

Mr. Ockelmann says the Greeks called other nations barbarians. Please tell me what Christian nations call un-Christian nations. And please tell me whether or not the present fraternization between Christian nations is sustained by Christian teaching. On the contrary, I think it is sustained by standing armies of millions of men.

No, Mr. Editor, if you except that undying love which the Christian priest manifests for the ewe lambs of his flock, you will find that universal Christian love fills a small universe. DR. SHUCK.

HAMILTON, April 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It may interest a great many truth seekers, more particularly in Canada, to know the fate of the bill introduced into the Dominion Parliament, which was to hav given Agnostics the right to affirm in criminal courts (it being allowable in civil courts). The friends of universal mental liberty in Toronto furnished friends throughout Ontario with copies of a petition, praying the Commons to grant us the same rights that orthodox Christians had; those petitions were circulated around and in time were duly presented to the house by different members. During the election campaign, whilst the candidates were canvassing their constituents, we found every candidate was willing to support a bill favoring our petitions, even the premier, Sir J. A. McDonald, whom the tories believe is a heaven-born statesman. He told a deputation of our friends in this city, as also did Mr. E. Blake, leader of the opposition, that they would be only too glad to giv us relief. Well, sir, the bill was brought into the house, and was appended to some other very obnoxious legislation, and we found when the division in the question took place that the "heaven-born" premier, with his henchman, the senior member for this city, F. Kilvert, voted in direct opposition to the bill, after their plighted word had been given to support it. So much for heaven-born statesmen and their hirelings. Just now the clergy of this city are devoting a great deal of their time to the attempt to demolish Agnosticism, and it is quite laughable to hear the pueril and silly arguments they use. We hav got a contingent of the last Christian craze, the Salvation Army, here, who parade our streets with an apology for a band, namely, a fife played by a young man, and a drum played by a woman, headed by two women playing tamborines, and a man with a flag bearing the inscription, "Blood and fire;" these hav an accompaniment in the small gamins of the city, who keep time on anything that will make a noise, tins, pans, etc.

I inclose $4 to pay for second volume of THE TRUTH SEEKER; one year's subscription; one dollar for Liberal League, to help the car along.

GEORGE MADDOCKS.

AN OLD EDITOR TALKS.

HANNIBAL, Mo.

MR. EDITOR: Please place amount of inclosed order to my credit on subscription. It is the bounden duty of every lover in the spirit of Liberalism, goodwill to humanity, and successful intelligence, to patronize such a periodical as THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I know how it was, myself, while a newspaper adventurist down in Petersburg, Va., and Savannah, Ga., when the subscriptions did not come to time, the press machinery worked wrong, and creaked—without oil. The laborers had to be paid weekly, and the editorial "staff" (supposed to be somewhat of a chameleon organization and liv on air) frequently took their dinners on "crackers and point," that is, a nickel's worth of crackers, eaten after pointing them at the sirloin steaks, hams, and veal cutlets in a restaurant across the way. People do not seem to understand that to run a periodical like THE TRUTH SEEKER requires about $150 a week.

Nevertheless, at this age of science in man's mental advancement, it is beneficial to sustain THE TRUTH SEEKER strongly with financial "backbone," and it is better to be an Infidel to the Bible's lore than to be an idolater of the self-aggrandizement and personal interests of the lazy promulgators of what is termed "orthodox Christianity"—which is simply based upon the Bible's legends, myths, and fanciful inventions thereunto adapted. "Throw such physic to the dogs!"

By the bye, I perceive brother A. E. Trabue, of Ralls Co., Mo., imagins I slighted "The Society of Moralists," of Hannibal. Friend Trabue is their warden, and one of the best and most liberal-minded men in the West, but somewhat eccentric, for effect's sake.

The "Moralists" of Hannibal are intelligent truth-seekers, and shall hav my support as long as they investigate the nature of all things in the philosophic light of reason. I cannot indulge in the credulity of the Spiritualists belonging to said society, as, having been educated for a Jesuitical priest, I would just as soon believe in the real presence of the "body and blood" of a God in the Romish sacramental wafer and wine, as accept as truth the fanciful spook developments palmed off as communications from the dead! In course of time, truth, in its fittest garb, will survive, and so, with good will for all, I remain,

FRANK O'MAHONY.

EAST DUBUQUE, April 29, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I find by the tab on my paper that my subscription expires on the 1st of May. Be pleased to find inclosed $7.50 to pay subscription one year ($2.50) and $5 to apply on the Monument Fund as proposed in a previous letter. It givs me pleasure to learn of your success in managing the paper financially and sustaining its high popular favor.

Respectfully, D. R. BURT.

P. S.—A few days since I visited Shell Rock, Iowa, and called on Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, the friends of Mr. Bennett, who wrote him every day that he was imprisoned. I found Mrs. Fisher a lady something above the average woman for intelligence, whose nervous system was much impaired, which accounts for the extraordinary writing every day, and often from five to twenty pages. She was deeply interested in all things that affected Mr. Bennett, and this imprisonment was a great shock to her nerves. There were two incidents connected with this singular acquaintance, or impressment, as some would call it. The day after Mr. Bennett's death there continued a rapping with short intervals for twenty-four hours, which was heard by both Mr. and Mrs. Fisher. All that time both were ignorant of his death. Fisher had no sympathy with his wife, and was displeased with her for the interest she expressed in Mr. Bennett's imprisonment. After Mr. Bennett's death Mrs. Fisher wrote me that the spirit of Mr. Bennett impressed her that I could render her and her husband great benefit, also a neighbor, by magnetic power. I had never seen or heard of her before she wrote, but learned she had heard of me. She continued to write me every week until I visited them. You may hav some curiosity to learn the effect of my treatment. I am not repared to speak advisedly of it. But the parties improved under the treatment. Last evening I received a letter from one of the parties—a case of erysipelas in the face of six years' standing, having received medical treatment for all the time without a relief. The skin was hard, inflamed, cracked, and many sores upon it, and bleeding. I treated him four days, and left with marked improvemnet. The letter stated that they should pronounce it cured if not fearful that it would return, and regarded it as a miracle. Pardon me for calling your attention; I was interested, and supposed you would be, as I regard it singular in all of it connections.

BOZEMAN, April 8, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find a letter from A. J. Richards, a valued friend of mine, and also, as his letter will attest, of the Liberal cause. It seems that I cannot better comply with his request in extending the information as desired, than by transmitting his letter entire for publication.

EVOLUTION, Jan. 8, 1883.

FRIEND BURKE, Dear Sir: I will drop you a few lines as I hav something to write, hoping they may find you O K, Wishing to assist my Infidel friends whenever opportunity offers, and to assist in throwing into our ranks all I can, I giv you this information, and hope you will assist in extending it to others through the Leagues, and if possible not outside of our brethren and sisters.

I hav discovered a large section of gold country. Hav found gold on five streams, but hav only prospected two of them enough to know how they will pay. One of them is between twenty and thirty miles long, the other twelve to twenty, with average width of sixty or seventy rods, with gold in paying quantity the entire length. Also with tributaries which undoubtedly will pay. The gold is of coarse and good quality, with bed-rock from five to twelve feet. As near as I can judge from what I hav done there is enough to giv employment to fifteen or twenty thousand men, and I should like to see the Liberals get the lion's share if possible. I hav spent three years of the hardest work and worst exposure of my life working it up by myself, with no assistance or encouragement from anyone, and now I intend to reap my harvests, and should like to see my friends enjoy some of it. If the Liberals will act promptly, and not get excited, and work together, they can get a good slice of it, and also build a city that they can control and hav good laws and regulations. The county is literally traversed with lodes of quartz, and plenty of good timber and water. As I am virtually shut up in winter, fifty miles from post-office, I can do but little to giv our friends the information, and I know from what I learn that it can't be kept long, and before next summer closes there will be as big a rush as has been witnessed for years. And if you will get information to as many Leagues as possible without letting the public know, you shall lose nothing by it, and you may do hundreds a great favor. Perhaps it might be a good plan to write to some of the men in the lecture field and get their assistance; for instance, Follett, of Illinois, Green, of New York, and others. Use your own judgment, and let as many good Liberals know as you can, and come yourself in spring if you are fixed so you can. If you can't, send me a power of attorney and I will locate mines and hav them worked for you on the waters of the Coeur d'Alene River, in Coeur d'Alene mining district, and it shall cost you nothing, and I will divide profits with you. If D——s is there, and you can trust him to keep it, tell him, but not those godly preachers, for I hav no gods up here for them to bawl over.

The new mines are about forty miles from my place, on the road back in the mountains, which is a poor trail, as I hav only cut it out sufficient to get through, and pretty rough at that. Men don't want to come without provisions, for it will be ninety miles over bad roads to get supplies. Can't get in before the middle of May from that side, and only a week or two earlier from this. I hav given enough that you may be able to get an understanding, and don't be afraid to work; it's no humbug. Don't know how soon I can get this to the office, as I hav to depend the on repairs men on the government telegraph line which runs past here. They hav a station three miles below here, they being our only neighbors.

Now I will giv directions so that by inquiry you can find me. I am on the old Mullen Road, twenty-five miles west of the summit of the Bitter Root mountains, about one hundred and twenty-five miles from Missoulia, and fifty miles east of Fort Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, which is the nearest place to get supplies, and twenty-three miles east of Old Mission. If there are any coming from the Eastern states their best route will be via California, Portland, on the route of the N. P. R. R. to Rathdrom, which is twelve miles from Coeur d'Alene, where they will hav to fit out, as they can get nothing nearer.

Hoping to see you in the spring, I remain,

Yours, A. J. PRICHARD,
Coeur d'Alene, Idaho Ter.

This much I will venture to say for the writer of the above. He is a Liberal of the most radical type, has made quite a critical study of scientific matters, and a man whose appearance will impress anyone as that of a candid and honest man. His pursuit for several years past, although he has property in the states, has been that of a prospecter. It is possible that he may be mistaken in what he has written, but not dishonest, and the confidence of this community in his integrity has caused quite an excitement, and many are going. It was not till April 1st that I received his communication, and my faith in his honesty and judgment is such that I hav arranged to send an agent.

THOS. BURK.

Mind as a Separate Entity, Only Temporarily Associated with Organisms.

Mind is known as an important something—a force—and so, as the function of a material, its existence is as much recognized as are the unconscious elements with which it is closely associated by co-operation. In its known will-force we must admit its pecular distinctiv character, in its thoughtful, designing, paramount supremacy over such of the unconscious elements, as our bodies and other matter, which it controls and fashions for its purposes, and thus proves its separate and peculiar elemental character, as possessing thought, invention, and will-power, as a force, over all such thoughtless and unconscious elements, which does not admit of its being derived from them; but is so proved to be a separate co-existence, in association with such know-nothing unconscious elements, as our bodies and other thoughtless matter, being derived from a universal conscious mind element.

Such separate existences of conscious and unconscious elements being recognized, we hav a simple method of comprehending infinit cause and effects, in which force, or potency, can only originate in a material mind, having a purpose, and be, thus, dynamically impressed in bequeathed laws of action to unconscious matter; each having their separate offices of primal controler, and secondary acts of controled, as intelligent cause and unconscious effects for all phenomena. We see these separate principles in action, when man's mind inaugurates the uses of common matter for all art purposes, which, we know, unconscious matter could not, of itself, accomplish; and hence the necessity of mind co-operation in all such arts. Therefore, in all art accomplishments, for useful and esthetic purposes, man's mind is in necessary co-operation as designer and dynamical controler of such performances of unconscious matter, by his will-power as a potential force. Unconscious matter must be equally impotent everywhere, without intelligent co-operativ laws to enforce its potential acts, by an infinit mind.

As unconscious matter—not being intelligent—cannot be a primal force, having neither choice, direction, nor purpose, nor any consciousness of its doings, is of itself wholly devoid of any stimulus for acts anywhere; therefore, with our mental effects upon unconscious matter, it is a necessary inference, from such analogy, that unconscious matter everywhere equally needs mind co-operation to dynamically originate, stimulate, and enforce its acts into wondrous phenomena and mechanisms, everywhere abounding; while the unconscious materials forming such hav no cognizance of their performances. This, then, is the intelligent origin, for a purpose, of all the potential law which enforces unconscious matter into all its useful and esthetic works, everywhere manifested in nature—as well as in art—emanating from that mind element.

With these premises clearly defined, I do not comprehend how any investigating mind can, Atheistically, deny the separate entity and controling supremacy of mind over all thoughtless unconscious materials, and so its necessary co-operation everywhere, for all acts or dispositions of know-nothing, unconscious matter. And, thus, is positiv proof of the necessary existence of a controling infinit mind, as inaugurating and directing the laws and acts of universal unconscious matter—being its sole potency for intelligent purposes; as our minds are the sole potency, in all art works, with unconscious matter.

Such views of nature, with its two co-eval, primordial principles of intelligent and non-intelligent materials, or conscious or unconscious elements, alone givs a rational adequate conception of the intelligent cause of all the known adaptable and highly mechanical phenomena of cosmos—as finite minds, alone, limitedly, effect in all art works upon unconscious matter. These are the only consistent and necessary adequate inferences, from such rational analogy of the known results of our minds co-operating with unconscious matter; to necessarily extend the same principles of dual action, to all nature, to account for its intelligent ways—self-evident purposes—and accomplishments.

Such essential intelligent control of all nature, givs no sanction to the blasphemous attributes assigned to such controler in Bible or other old theisms; or to any revelations, or other knowledge of such great great first cause of the dispositions of co-eval unconscious matter, beyond inferences from the great book of nature, which records in its manifold pages the most admirable works of intelligent devisements by amply impressed laws, which, in their phenomenal characteristics, proclaim exclusiv goodness in the general laws for the greatest good to the greatest number, in adaptable and bounteous provision for every rightful and intelligent desire, bequeathed by its author; just such as a good earthly parent desires to provide for his children and dependents, though he cannot always guard them against imprudence and accidents.

In conclusion: If the highly complicated and ingenious mechanisms of animal constructions and their adaptable sustainers do not proclaim intelligent design and impress, then there can be no intelligent purpose and acts in the less perfected works of art. To deny the first is to annihilate the second, as an Atheistic dilemma of contradictions with known facts; being inadequate conceptions of nature, and finite minds—all lesser minds being derived from the greater, as parts of the universal mind element or first primordial principle of cosmos.

THE

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for a knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and hav been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

CHAS. E. TRASK, 304 Ingham st., Jackson, Mich., says: "Garments arrived, with letter of instructions. Hav worn them. They are benefiting me more in the past week than all the medicin I hav ever taken."

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

FRIENDS OF PROGRESS

THE LATE

D. M. BENNETT

published a long article in THE TRUTH SEEKER, respecting the value of our garments. In fact, so satisfied was he of their value that he sold thousands of dollars' worth to his subscribers.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

NO CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv evén a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

Are surer and quicker in action than any other Magnetic Garments.

They are made out of lace or netting which makes them the coolest and lightest appliance made.

Their magnets have on them an armature or keeper which makes them continuously curative. No others have this necessary addition. See any work on Natural Philosophy to see how necessary the Armature is.

The VICTORIA is so constructed that the patient can remove the magnets at pleasure and wash all the goods. This cannot be done with any others.

Paralysis, Asthma, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Female and Spinal Diseases, Rheumatism, Sick Headaches, Dyspepsia, General Debility and all diseases arising from deficient nerve force, there is no other treatment that is as successful as the wearing of VICTORIA MAGNETIC GOODS.

All other garments are slow in action.

VICTORIA is quick and sure. All other appliances oblige the patients to hope for to-morrow.

VICTORIA gives help to-day.

Send for circulars, price lists, etc., before you buy of others!

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

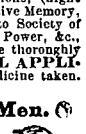
A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y38

DR. FELLOWS

SWAN OF HOPE



A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Idens, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

WE hav reason to rejoice that the progress the world has made is as great as it is, considering the impediments and difficulties it has had to encounter; and the great mass of ignorance, superstition, and wrong it has had to meet and contend with. Light is breaking in; the myths of olden times are one after another giving way, and in due time, if we steadily pursue our course, and keep our faces toward the goal of truth, the full effulgence of the genial sun of Reason, Science, and Devotion to Humanity will ultimately illumin our pathway.—D. M. Bennett.

WHATEVER may be thought of the genuinness or authenticity of any part of the book of Daniel, it makes no difference in my belief of Christianity; for Christianity is within a man, even if he is a being gifted with reason; it is associated with your mother's chair, and with the first remembered tones of her blessed voice.—Coleridge's Table Talk.

[Could the force of philosophic impudence go further? Could Spurgeon or our own Talmage say anything more silly? What! are the Buddhists, the Chinese, the Mohammedans, sent into the world without mothers, as one great man was without a human father?—and is not what is sauce for the Christian goose sauce also for the Mohammedan gander? Coleridge was looked up to, forty years ago, and was reckoned a champion of Christianity. He now lies "down among the dead men," for whom there is no resurrection.—Hylax.]

FAIR are the flowers and the children, but their subtle suggestion is fairer;
Rare is the rose-burst of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer;
Sweet the exuberance of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter—
And never was poem yet writ, but the meaning outmastered the meter.

Never a daisy that grows, but a mystery guideth the growing;
Never a river that flows, but a majesty scepters the flowing;
Never a Shakspere that soared, but a stronger than he did unfold him—
And never a prophet foretells, but a mightier seer foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs the painter is hinted and hidden!
Into the statue that breathes the soul of the sculptor is bidden;
Under the joy that is felt lie the infinit tissues of feeling—
Crowning the glory revealed is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symboled is greater;
Vast the create and beheld, but vaster the inward creator;
Back of the sound broods the silence, back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitiv nerves of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by the doing;
The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing.
And up from the pits where these shiver, and up from the hights where those shine,
Twin voices and shadows swim starward, and the essence of life is divine. —Richard Realf.

THE coming man's religion will hav no theology in it. All questions as to the origin of things, the nature of life, the duration of life, final causes, and the first great cause, "least understood," the coming man will naturally pass over. Such subjects hav nothing to do with religion. They are questions of science and curiosity, to be elucidated, if at all, by ages of investigation, experiment, and thought. It is not necessary to expound the universe, to assert or to deny a deity. It is only necessary for us to perceive that the question of the final cause is not pressing, not important to us—a matter of curiosity no more. It is only necessary to agree that no opinion concerning it can be guilty or odious.—James Parton's Coming Man's Religion.

"VERILY, methinks
Wisdom is ofttimes nearer when we stoop
Than when we soar." The other, not displeased, Promptly replied: "My notion is the same.
And I without reluctance, could decline
All art of inquisition whence we rise,
And what, when breath had ceased, we may become.
Here we are, in a bright and breathing world—
Our origin, what matters it?"
—Wordsworth's Excursion.

WE find among the writings of the ancient philosophers incomparable specimens both of dialectical and rhetorical art. We hav no doubt that the ancient controversies were of use, in so far as they served to exercise the faculties of the disputants; for there is no controversy so idle that it may not be of use in this way. But, when we look for something which adds to the comforts or alleviates the calamities of the human race, we are forced to own ourselvs disappointed. We are forced to say with Bacon that this celebrated philosophy ended in nothing but disputation, that it was neither a vinyard nor an oliv-ground, but an intricate wood of briers and thistles, from which those who lost themselvs in it brought back many scratches and no food.—Lord Macaulay's Lord Bacon.

METAPHYSICS [and theological disputes] yield no fruits. They are not a field, they are only an arena, to which a man who has got nothing to do may go down sometimes and try his intellectual gladiatorship.—Rev. Robert Hall.

OTHERS apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
Fixed fate, free-will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
—Milton's Paradise Lost.

Odds and Ends.

NEVER cry over spilt milk. The milkman has already wasted enough water on it.

JOSEPH CRICHTER, of Rochester, has had his horse's tail cut off. "Why hav you taken away the caudal appendage of your racer?" asked one of his friends. "Because I am a member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty, and long tails bother the flies."

PLANTATION philosophy: It's tryin' ter be interestin' in conversation dat makes a liar outen many a man.—De appetite ob man an' de vanity of woman is what keeps de world's trade in motion.—It ain't de pusson what bows low dat is really de humblest. De snake is all on de groun', but, Lawd, how pizen he is.—Arkansaw Traveller.

A MAN went home the other night and found his house locked up. After infinit trouble he managed to gain entrance through a back window, and then discovered on the parlor table a note from his wife reading: "I hav gone out. You will find the key on the side of the step."

FULL tender beamed the light of love down from his manly face
As he pressed her to his bosom in a fervent, fond embrace;
No cost of others' happiness found place within his thought;
The weakness of life's brittle thread no dim forebodings brought.

But tenderer than the light of love, more brittle than life's thread,
The shrouds that wrapped two other hearts gave up their withered dead;
For crumbing in his waistcoast, their glowing future dashed,
Two excellent Havanas were very badly mashed.
—Harper's Bazar.

"GABE," said the governor to an old colored man, "I understand that you hav been ousted from your position of Sunday-school superintendent." "Yes, sah, da figgered aroun' till da got me out. It was all a piece ob political work though, an' I doan see why de law ob de lan' doan prevent de Sunday-schools an' churches from takin' up political matters." "How did politics get you out?" "Yer see, some time ago when I was a candidate for justice ob de peace, I gin' a barbecue ter some ob my frien's. De udder day da brung up de fack an' rousted me." "I don't why the fact that you gave a barbecue to your friends should hav caused any trouble." "Neider does mysef, boss, but yer see da said dat I stole de hogs what I barbecued. De proof wan't good, an' I think dat da done wrong in ackin' upon sech slim testimony. Da said dat I cotch de hogs in a corn fiel'. I know dat wan't true, 'case it was a wheat fiel, whar I cotch 'em."—Arkansaw Traveller.

"SPEAKING of curious coincidents," said a lawyer who had business in the City Hall yesterday, "I think I hav the most curious case on the boards." "What is it?" "One day last week a woman came to me and engaged my services to file a bill for divorce. I hadn't got through with her when her husband came in to secure my services for the same thing. They were of the same age, had the same ground, and had not met before for months." "And you took both cases?" "Oh, no, that would hav looked a little queer." "Then you sent one to another lawyer?" "Oh, no, again. I am not furnishing clients to other lawyers. I saw that I was in a fix, and that I must do something to prevent one or the other from consulting another attorney, and so I acted as a mediator, and advised 'em to settle their trouble and liv together, which they hav done." "What! You advise a settlement, and lose your fee!" "Not exactly," replied the lawyer as he stroked his chin, "I charged twice as much for the advice as for securing the divorces!"

A LOT of Boston tourists were traveling in a sleeping car, also a Nevada traveler. In the morning, when the porter went round to collect his assessments on boot-blacking, there was a great commotion among the Boston tourists. Some paid him a five-cent nickel, and those who had no nickels were compelled to yield up short bits. All the while the Navada man, dressed in ordinary clothes, sat reading his newspaper. When the porter reached him he looked up inquiringly. "Did you black my boots, sir?" "Yes, sah." "You did a splendid job; never had my boots blacked so well before on this line. Here's $3." When the porter pocketed the money the Boston people looked up astonished, and presently it was rumored about that John Mackey was aboard or Enoch Strother was out on a campaigning trip. In a few minutes the Nevada man and the porter met (by chance) in the smoking room. "When does my sleeping ticket run out?" "Your time was up, sah, at Ogden; but if you wants to ride to Reno, boss, its all right." The traveler gave the darky a drink out of a black bottle, and the porter winked continuously for nine seconds as he drank the traveler's health. Six dollars saved. Economy is the road to wealth.

THE SINNER'S TRIUMPH.

He was kneeling in the pew,
Struggling, grunting, groaning, too,
When the ever-watchful pastor came on tip-toes down the aisle;
And then kneeling by his side,
"Help this sinner, Lord!" he cried;
"To find the blessed Comforter and make the angels smile."

And the sinner's face, which blazed
From exertion, quick was raised;
"Keep up the wrestle, brother," urged the pastor; "nor despair—
Hallelujah! Let us pray—
Hav you found it? Brother, pray!"
"Yes, I'v got it," said the sinner, as he picked up something there.

"Glory! Here's another soul
That has found salvation's goal!"
Shouted loudly then the pastor: "Brother, tell them what you'v found."
Then the guileless stranger rose,
And with triumph did expose
The paper of tobacco he had dropped upon the ground. —H. C. Dodge.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

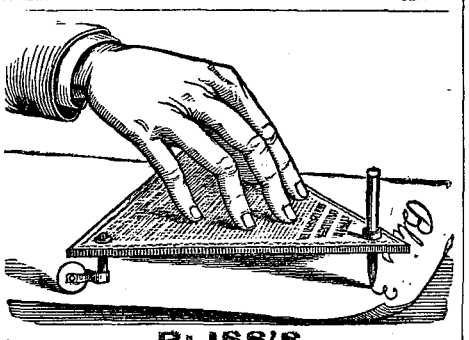
THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,



The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.
Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 3m59

It has been in the market a little over two years, and during that time thousands of skeptical persons, yes, downright Materialists, hav been convinced that this Planchette has been MOVED BY A POWER independent of themselvs while their hands hav been placed passivly upon it.

THE ADVANTAGES CLAIMED OVER OTHER PLANCHETTES.

First. A paste-board top in place of oiled, stained, or varnished wood.

Second. Five miniature batteries upon the top of each Planchette, upon which the fingers rest.

Third. Each Planchette is separately magnetized and assigned a band of developing spirits.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

Notes and Clippings.

"WHAT will attract sinners to church?" asks a religious exchange. Good opera bouffe music and a preacher that talks pretty broadly will fetch in a good many.—Star.

PATTI says music belongs to heaven rather than earth. Well, Patti, remarks the Philadelphia Times, if the angels are going to charge us $5 a seat every time they sing, we are sorry we hav been so good, that's all.

AN exchange tells of "a young lady losing the sole of her slipper while enjoying the intoxicating whirl of the waltz." Of what profit was it to her if she had gained the whole whirl if she thereby lost her sole?—Whitehall Times.

IN the primary class last Sunday, the teacher asked what was meant by "Then had the churches rest?" and got response from one of the smallest boys, "I s'pose they didn't hav any preaching."—Religious Paper.

A WESTERN preacher, whose congregatiou had begun to fall off somewhat, had it intimated that he would discuss a family scandal the following Sunday morning. As a consequence the church was crowded. The minister's subject was Adam and Eve.—Sunday Magazine.

"HOW shall I know whether I am spiritually fitted for the ministry or not? Young man."—Let us see—the 15th of May is the extreme limit of house-cleaning time, isn't it? Well, if you pass that date without a single wicked thought spot on your fair young conscience, you may safely invest in a barrel of lithographed sermons and a black cravat.—Burlington Free Press.

AMONG "the antiquities" exhibited in the Old South Church, in Boston, is an embroidery representing the Garden of Eden, in which our illustrious Father Adam, dressed in a costume of the last century, wearing a powdered wig and carrying a cane, is seated under a spreading oak, while naughty Eve, in a very tight-waisted dress and full skirts, is resting under a cherry-tree, holding a parrot on her lap.

MUCH ritualism seems to hav made Mr. George Campion mad. A few days since he jumped upon the altar in St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, tore down the cross and dashed it to the ground, and hurled after it two altar candlesticks. A cross and candlesticks being recognized ornaments in every cathedral, it was rather a monstrous offense. He was fined £5, which a friend paid; but there was a clamor for a lunatic asylum and six months' hard labor.

REV. DR. MORGAN DIX has issued a catechism of "chief things which a Christian ought to know and believe to his soul's health." In this he defines schism as "the refusal to acknowledge or commune with the duly authorized ministers of Christ." The Episcopal Recorder finds fault with the doctor for being a schismatic of the straitest sort, in that he refuses to acknowledge or commune with any ministers of Christ except those who belong to the Episcopal church.

IN the opinion of the Scientific American there is a possibility that the wonderful comet of 1812 may make its reappearance before the year closes. Encke computed for this comet a period of about seventy years. If his computation be correct it may suddenly flame forth in the heavens at any moment. A more rigorous investigation of the comet's path has recently been completed by MM. Schulhof and Bosseri that givs a period of seventy-three years. They hav fixed upon the 3d of September, 1884, for the next perihelion passage. But comets, with their perturbations, retardations, and accelerations, are the most unreliable members of the system. It is not impossible, in spite of all the wise calculations of the mathematicians, that the comet of 1812 may steal a march upon us before the year closes.

THE efficacy of prayer: Two old soldiers who had just been granted pensions met in Portland, Me., the other day. Said one: "After a year passed without my hearing from the department, I made the subject of getting my pension a special matter of prayer, and in less than six months the pension was granted." The other replied: "I held on two years, then wrote to Colonel Bob Ingersoll about it, and in less than thirty days I had my papers all right."—Exchange.

SEVERAL years ago, on a very cold day, Rev. Christopher Corey, of La Grange county, Ind., rode on horseback a distance of six miles to perform a marriage ceremony. As he was about starting for home, having duly authorized the two hearts to beat as one, a coin was placed in his hand. He dropped it in his pocket and rode away. When he got home he looked at it, and lo! it was an old-fashioned copper cent. The next morning the groom appeared at his door, and having explained with considerable embarrassment how the annoying mistake had been made, took back the cent and handed the clergyman a quarter.

SPONSLER, of Perry, wound up a glowing speech in the House on Wednesday with the quotation, "Vox populi, vox Dei," and sat down perspiring. Mackin turned to Crawford, who is a butcher at home, and remarked enthusiastically, "Wasn't that a grand climax, now?" "It was the real stuff," assented the Philadelphian. "I'll bet you $10 you don't know what it means, though," said Mackin. "I'll just go you," said Crawford eagerly. "Everybody knows it means, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsak en me?'" "Here's the tenner," said Mackin admiringly, handing it over. "I had no idea you were such a Latin scholar."—Lancaster Examiner.

THE cause of cremation is making progress in Japan that may well startle as well as encourage the advocates of cremation in Western lands. It is said that the number of bodies disposed of in that way is about 9,000 a year. The furnace is a stone and cement structure, with a tall chimney that makes it look like a factory. In the vestibule are a number of red earthenware urns and small shovels which the relativs of the deceased purchase to collect the ashes after burning. Beside the vestibule there are four chambers, the largest of which is decorated with granit columns. After the cremation the ashes are collected, placed in an urn, and then buried—often with much pomp—in a cemetery. The cremativ edifice is hedged in by fences of bamboo-canes and red camelias.

THE PROSY PREACHER'S POST-PRANDIAL.

On a Sunday a layman benign
With a prosy old bishop did dine;
So rich was the food,
And so awfully good,
That he dosed after drinking the wine.

Sound he slumber'd until the good man
Woke him up, with a half-muttered ban;
"Now I must go preach,
And you I beseech
To attend me to church if you can."

Then the layman arose with a lurch,
And he said, sinking back in his perch,
"Excuse me, your grace,
But here, in this place,
I can sleep just as well as in church!"

SEVERAL years ago, says a Michigan paper, Miss Cynthia E. Cleveland was a meek and efficient dress-maker at Pontiac. Then her soul was fired in the temperance cause and she became one of the most efficient gospel temperance workers in Michigan, and as such was favorably known throughout the entire state. Two or three years ago she went to Dakota, where she likewise became famed in the anti-beer and anti-whisky cause, becoming president of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, if, indeed, she was not its originator. Less than a year ago she was admitted to the bar, being the first lady to enjoy that high distinction in Dakota. A short time ago she had her first case in court, and, stranger than fiction, it was in defense of a woman on trial for selling liquor without a license—and she won her case.

CLERGYMEN are well known to hav their little weaknesses, like frailer and more sinful humanity. "Even ministers," as the Scotch laureate has it, "they hae been ken'd a rousing whid at times to vend, and nail't wi' scripture." The Rev. Dr. Fitz, of Mason City, has been ecclesiastically censured for "a morbid disposition to converse upon and inquire into matters unbecoming a man in his station." Had the Rev. Dr. Fitz resided in Brooklyn, they would hav sold his pews by auction and voted him a larger salary. He knows where to find rest for his sensational soul.

OLD Uncle Isaac, the well-known colored rag-picker, has just made his appearance after having been confined to his house for several days. "Where hav you been?" asked the Critic this morning. "I havn't seen you for a long time." "Oh, I'se jess been scuperatin' after dat argyment I had wid de Washington boys." "What argument?" "Why, dat 'ligious argyment we had las' week, when de biggest Washington boy called me a liar and sed dat I was ole and ignorant. Den I jess gub him one, and dat sneakin Jim Washington hit me 'cross de back wid a fence palin'." "And you've been to bed?" "Yes, sur; jess got out dis mornin', an' de 'fects ob dat argyment haint worn off yet. But I'se goin' now to Jedge Snell fer to git a warrant for all of dem boys." "What will you charge them with—getting the best of the argument?" "No, sah, dat I shan't; I shall charge dem wid insult; wid contempt ter kill."

A MAN in Texas was arrested for running away with three sisters—triplets—and was placed on trial. "You're a nice fellow," said the judge, as a preliminary. "I know it, jedge; leastwise that's what the gals said." "What do you mean by running away with three women, and ruining the peace of a happy family?" "I meant to marry 'em, jedge." "Insatiate monster! would not one suffice?" "Put it a little plainer, jedge." "Wouldn't one hav been enough?" "It mought look that 'ere way to you, jedge, and did to me at fust, but you see there was three of 'em, kind of one set, like." "That doesn't count in law." "Mebbe it don't, jedge, but them gals and me talked it all over, and they was mighty attached to each other and said it was a pity for me to take one of them triplets and break the set, so we jest concluded to hang together, and I'll be durned if we wasn't hangin' right out for Utah, and no mistake." "The law does not recognize any such excuses." "All right, old man, go ahead. There was three agin one, and if I hav to suffer I kin stand it; but I want to say right here, jedge, if any fool cuss breaks that set while I'm sufferin, I'll break his durned skull as shore as I'm a dyin' sinner, and you can bet a rawhide on it." The case was continued.

IT is hardly possible to read the history of Europe without perceiving that the legal disabilities, under which women now rest, are a relic of ecclesiasticism, inherited by us from the Romish church by way of England. Before England received Catholic Christianity from Rome, Saxon women held a place in the councils of the Heptarchy; and we all know the high positions of honor in church and state accorded women by the ancient Germans. Among the Teutonic races chastity went side by side with respect for the equality of women. But the Christianity taught by Rome taught her essential inferiority. She "was represented" (v. Lecky, Hist. Morals, vol. ii, pp. 338-340) "as the door of hell, as the mother of all human ills. She should be ashamed of the very thought that she is a woman. She should liv in continual penance on account of the curses she had brought upon the world. She should be ashamed of her dress, for it is the memorial of her fall. She should especially be ashamed of her beauty, for it is the most potent instrument of the demon." Women were even forbidden by a provincial council, in the sixth century, to receive the eucharist in their naked hands, lest they should pollute it by the contamination of their touch. Truly, woman owes little to the Bible or the church for the position she occupies in this century.

JOE BRADY, one of the Irish Invincibles implicated in the Phenix Park murders, was hanged last Monday. He was a stanch Catholic, had been for fifteen years an official in a church, and carried a prayer-book in his hand to the scaffold.

A CHICAGO brewer and an undertaker crossed swords in a duel one day last week; but after a few passes the seconds interfered, the combatants declared their honor to be vindicated, shook hands, and drowned their animosities in many tankards of the brewer's lager.

THE trial of Jere Dunn in Chicago for the killing of Prize-fighter Elliott is said to partake of the character of a farce. The evidence is that Dunn walked into the restaurant where Elliott was eating and deliberately opened fire on him. It is beyond dispute that Elliott's taking off was no loss to the community at large, but the killing of him in cold blood was murder, and the law should be carried out on his slayer.

Communications.

Meeting of the Apostles at Jerusalem.

We now come to the conference of Paul and Barnabas with the church at Jerusalem. This is Paul's third visit to Jerusalem according to Acts, but he himself says in his epistle to the Galatians that he went there only twice, and the second visit, as he describes it, parallels most nearly with the third of Acts.

"And when they came to Jerusalem they were received by the church and by the elders and by the legates; and they recounted all that God had wrought by them. And some who from the sect of the Pharisees had believed rose up and said, It is necessary for you to circumcise them and to command them to observe the law of Moses" (xv, 4, 5).

The Pharisees in this passage are apparently the "false brethren" alluded to by Paul, as having crept in privily to spy out the liberty which Paul taught in the Messiah (Gal. ii, 4). "These 'false brethren' were baptized into Pharisees," says Mr. Wise, "as though the other Jews were less attached to the law" (p. 457).

"And the legates and elders assembled to look into this matter. And when there had been much discussion Simon [Kepha] arose and said to them: Men, brethren, ye know that from the earlier days God chose that from my mouth the gentiles should hear the word of the gospel and should believe."

This refers to the conversion of Cornelius, when, says Canon Farrar, "for the first time during 2,000 years the Jew and the gentile met on the broad grounds of perfect religious equality" (St. Paul, p. 157). The question which was settled by these same "legates and brethren" at Jerusalem ten years before is now reopened, and reargued by Simon, who continues:

"And God, who knoweth what is in hearts, bore testimony concerning them, and gave the Holy Spirit to them, even as to us. And he made no distinction between them and us, because he purified their hearts by faith. And now why tempt ye God by putting a yoke on the necks of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we could bear? But we believe that we, as well as they, are to hav life by the grace of our Lord Jesus Messiah.

"And the whole assembly were silent and listened to Paul and Barnabas, who related how God by their hands had wrought signs and prodigies among the gentiles.

"And after they had ceased, James arose and said: Men, brethren, hearken to me. Simon hath related to you how God hath begun to elect a people for his name among the gentiles."

We need not giv the rest of the speech of James the Lord's brother, and reputed first bishop of Jerusalem. Mr. Wise charges the speaker with a false quotation from the Old Testament; but we find it agreeing very nearly with the Septuagint, which was probably the only version accessible to the writer of Acts, unless the Peshito or Syriac Old Testament was in existence at the time. This version is quoted and commented on by Ehphraim Syrus in the fourth century, and its formation is placed by modern scholars in the latter part of the first century or early in the second (Murdock's Syr. N. T. Appendix ii).

Bishop James concludes his speech with the imposition of the following rule of conduct upon the gentiles:

1. Keep aloof from the defilement of a sacrifice [to idols]; 2. And from whoredom; 3. And from what is strangled; 4. And from blood.

This was embodied in a letter addressed to the gentiles of Syria and Celicia, and sent by two leading brethren, Jude and Silas, who accompanied Paul and Barnabas back to Antioch.

Turn now to what Paul says about the action of these churchmen at Jerusalem, and note the following points in Galatians ii:

1. I went up by revelation (not as a delegate) with Barnabas and Titus.

2. I stated privately to the prominent ones the gospel which I announced to the gentiles.

3. Titus, who was an Aramæan, was not compelled to be circumcised.

4. Not for an hour did we throw ourselvs into subjection to the false brethren who had crept in to spy out our liberty in the Messiah.

5. They who were esteemed prominent (what they were I care not) added nothing to me.

6. But James, Kepha, and John, who were accounted pillars, seeing the grace that was given to me, gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, that we should labor among the gentiles, and they among the circumcision. (How about the prior sanction of Kepha's revelation at Cesarea, the baptism of Cornelius and others?)

7. Only they desired that we should be mindful of the needy, and I was solicitous to do the same.

8. But when Kepha came to Antioch I rebuked him to his face, because, having already eaten with the gentiles, as soon as he saw himself watched by certain ones that came from James, he withdrew, being afraid of them of the circumcision.

9. And the rest of the Jews followed his example, in so much that even Barnabas was induced to regard persons.

10. I said to Kepha: If thou art a Jew and livest in the gentile way, why dost thou compel the gentiles to liv in the Jewish way?

How is it possible to harmonize all these statements of Paul with the account in Acts? "If Paul told the truth," says Mr. Wise, "this synod did not come off, and these provisos [of Acts] were not made" (p. 459).

PAUL AGAIN AT ANTIOCH.

Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch with Jude and Silas, who delivered and read the letter from the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. Jude and Silas, being also prophets, discoursed abundantly to the brethren and remained at Antioch some time, when they were dismissed. "But it was the pleasure of Silas to remain there," says our Syriac version; and the common English version says the same, while the Douay adds, "And Judas alone went back to Jerusalem." But the new English version omits verse 34, because it is not found in the oldest Greek codices. Nevertheless it appears that Silas did not return to Jerusalem, as we shall presently see.

PAUL'S SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

A short time after the return from Jerusalem Paul proposed to Barnabas to revisit the cities where they had formerly preached. Barnabas assented, but wanted to take his nephew, John Mark, along. To this Paul objected because on the former journey John had deserted them in Pamphylia. In consequence of this disagreement the two apostles separated, Barnabas going with his nephew to Cyprus, and Paul going with Silas for his companion through Syria and Cilicia. Coming to Derbe and Lystra, Paul was introduced to Timothy, whose mother was a believing Jewess, but whose father was an Aramæan. This young man being highly commended by the disciples of Lystra and Iconium, Paul adopted him as a companion, and because of the Jews that were in that region circumcised him.

Did the apostle of uncircumcision do this? If he did, why do we find no apology for it, nor even allusion to it in his numerous epistles? It is conceivable that he who confessed himself "all things to all men" (1 Cor. ix, 22), who "sought to please every man" (x, 33), and who justified falsehood for the glory of God (Rom. iii, 7), did, at an early period in his ministry, thus giv way to Jewish prejudice; but we need stronger evidence of it than that of the writer of Acts, just as we need something more authentic than the un-Pauline letters to Timothy, to convince us that that young disciple received ordination at the hands of Paul (2 Tim. i, 6), or of the elders (1 Tim. iv, 14), or before many witnesses (vi, 12).

When Paul visited Jerusalem after a ministry of seventeen years, he says, "Titus, who was with me, and was an Aramæan, was not compelled to be circumcised" (1 Gal. ii, 3). Would anyone suspect this to mean that Paul circumcised Titus? Yet Canon Farrar so interprets it. Conceiving that only by so doing Paul was able to get a hearing on the question before the elder apostles, the learned canon construes the passage thus: "Titus was circumcised but not under compulsion" (St. Paul, p. 235). This interpretation is ingenious enough to be decreed canonical.

Proceeding westward in their travels, Paul and Silas (Silvanus in the epistles) preached in the cities, teaching the disciples "that they should observe those injunctions which the legates and elders at Jerusalem had written."

Canon Farrar attaches no great importance to this injunction, which he says was addressed only to the gentile converts of Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, and which emanated from a "so-called council" in no way resembling the general councils of the church." And he notes the significant fact that "St. Paul discusses the question of meats offered to idols without the remotest reference to this decree;" also the fact that the western churches never held themselvs bound to abstain "from things strangled."

Rabbi Wise is nearer the truth when he says that "this synod did not come off, and these provisos were not made."

Paul and his companions traveled through Phrygia and Galatea, in the heart of Asia Minor, but "the holy spirit forbade them to speak the word of God in [consular] Asia," and "the spirit of Jesus" (so in the Syriac and new version) would not permit them to go into Bithynia. So they passed through Mysia to the region of Troas, where in a vision at night a man appeared to Paul and said, "Come to Macedonia and help us." The Holy Spirit forbade the missionaries to go this way and the spirit of Jesus to go that, but the spirit of a man in a dream besought Paul to go to Macedonia, and believing it was a call of the Lord, he went.

It is here that the "We" portion of Acts begins. The writer says, "We inferred that the Lord called us to preach to them." It would seem, therefore, that the writer was either Silas or Timothy.

Two Opinions.

Fifty-eight Mormon missionaries set sail for Europe Friday to make converts and replenish the harems at Salt Lake. These men do, under the cloak of an alleged religion, what any procuress would be arrested and punished for doing. The men go "scot-free."—South Bend, Ind., Tribune.

Archbishop Purcell and the Augustinian Fathers rob the depositors of the institutions they represent to replenish the coffers of the church of the same God that the Mormon missionaries make converts for. These men do under the cloak of "Our Most Holy Religion" what common thieves would be arrested and punished for doing. And the men go "scot-free." F. H. Nicoles.

Medaryville, Ind., May 5, 1883.

The Clergy and Progress.

The priesthood (with a few honorable exceptions) hav made this a world of sin and woe, a labyrinth both difficult and dangerous, all mined beneath and strewed with traps and pitfalls. They hav taught that knowledge grew on trees and must not be partaken of (and would enforce the penalty if they only had the power); that serpents were distinguished for wisdom, and as social advisers had no equal; that they walked erect and employed a very persuasiv eloquence; that destruction and wrath was the rule, and salvation and love the exception.

Natural smartness and knowledge acquired by eatting forbidden fruit gave too much equality, and the infinit God became jealous and a little scared, and drove man out of the garden, from an idler to honest industry, to which he was well adapted, and his subtle snakeship had to go down.

But little was gained over man by his expulsion. He gained great advantage by this forced experience; so that when God, in his "inscrutable providence," burns a city, or sinks a vessel, as a display of superiority and wanton cruelty, man by his acquired skill and industrious habits rebuilds and improves.

Since natural smartness is declared a blank, the clergy hav dealt in the chance game. If any one by chance and luck can escape all the traps and pitfalls, while our "heavenly father's" attention is given to watching sparrows and counting hairs, and can get through unnoticed into that little inclosure—the Christian heaven—they hav run the gauntlet; they are "sealed" and beyond the possibility of again being open to danger.

Thus this world has been made into a primary hell, with the chances ten to one of the next being tenfold worse.

As a modification of this uncertain state of things, vicarious atonement was invented, a "door of hope," of certainty to those who "believe." And for the convenience of such as had not faith quite strong enough, an improvement was introduced, death-bed repentance; so one can be changed from a lifelong sinner to a legitimate saint "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."

If these are not "doctrins of devils," I would inquire, in the name of reason and concience, what is?

If this is not encouragement, hope, and more, a premium on sin and sinners, what is it?

If this has not retarded human progress and human happiness, then what has? The answer comes, the Inquisition. That is only the other name of the same beast.

If this patent escape from the consequences of sin was valid in the time of Jesus, then,

> "Judas, that base, perfidious wretch,
> By wicked crimes accursed,
> By hempen cord outwent his lord,
> And got to heaven first."

Science and literature hav done more to liberate the world from intolerance, ignorance, darkness, and superstitious tradition than all the sermons that were ever hurled from pulpits. Are we not a thousand times more indebted to the Infidels—Voltaire, who extinguished the inquisition in France; Thomas Paine, whose heroism and fidelity to the rights of man gave us the blessing of an Infidel government, and struck a death-blow to priestcraft; our lamented Bennett, and his co-laborers, who maintain and advance the cause of Infidelity to creeds and dogmas, and fidelity to the sacredness of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—I repeat, are we not more indebted to these and their co-laborers, than to all the clerical inventions for the restoration of the "totally depraved?" It was they who broke the "flaming sword which turned every way to guard the way of the tree of life," and made it possible to liv and enjoy living in this world without the fear of the "wrath to come."

The priesthood, the Christian ministry, as a rule, hav been the opposers, the enemies, the incubuses, of progress, of human happiness. Thanks everlasting to the Infidels, they (the priesthood) are coming to be less harmful for want of power.

Who can compute the amount of intelligence, happiness, joy, and plenty that might hav blessed the earth, compared with what now is, had the clergy wielded their influence, used their position, their strength and ability, to make this world a primary heaven, instead of the exact opposit; taught that the "day of judgment," exact compensation for good or evil, was here and now, instead of a day of retribution; carried the torch of progress, instead of the fires of hell—the inquisition; taught love to man and no fear of God, only a fear of the consequences of wrong-doing; and "possessing the whole world," as was said by one reformer, they had "turned it all into joyfulness?"

What a world of happiness—the reward of virtue—with fidelity to natural, moral, and social laws, this might hav been! Let us plant hope where has grown despair, love in place of hate, solace for fear, peace for war, virtue instead of vice, light for darkness, and purity for the purple robe of sin. Make "heaven here and now." REFORMER.

Poverty and Piety.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In the Sun of the 4th inst. it is stated that—

"Prof. George P. Fisher, of Yale, says that the prevalence of religious skepticism and disbelief is by no means confined to communities in which newspapers and magazines abound, but is manifest in the furthest frontier settlements. He thinks that the concentration of attention upon the study of material nature, the wondrous inventions and improvements, the increase of material comfort and prosperity, are among the influences which hav indirectly produced the existing state of things."

Can it be possible that this celebrated scholar is opposed to the study of "material nature?" Does he object to modern inventions and improvements? And does he really believe that "the increase of material comfort and prosperity" among our brave Western pioneers is the cause of their "religious skepticism and disbelief?" Does Infidelity indeed result from a study of nature's laws? Are modern inventions and improvements opposed to ancient theology? Do faith and belief result from ignorance and poverty? Are the superstitious peasants of Spain and Italy, who believe, happier than our Western tillers of the soil, who do not? Is piety allied to poverty? and must the poor always believe and suffer? Is "material comfort and prosperity" objectionable and prejudicial to the professors of Yale College? Does their knowledge make them unbelievers? and do their riches destroy their faith? Does the same law apply to the college professor and the laborer? or are the latter "born with saddles on their backs," and the privileged few provided with whips and spurs to ride them by the grace of God? Faith First—Evidence Afterward.

I wonder if there is in all the universe a thing so supremely absurd as the idea that we are to be damned for our unbelief. Why will Christians still persist in ignoring the truth that there is as much virtue in doubting as in believing? How is it that they cannot see that evidence must precede belief, and that our belief must be in proportion to the evidence?

To hear Christians talk and teach, one would be led to suppose that it was optional with us—that it were a matter of choice, and only necessary for us to consult our selfish interests and make up our minds to adopt this or that.

Christians say my salvation depends upon my belief in their religion. Now it is just as impossible for me to believe in it as it is to touch the sun with my little finger. They claim also that God is just. Now how is it that they cannot see that he could not be just and damn me for not conquering impossibilities? Suppose I should be told I should be eternally miserable unless I believed that the sun revolved around the earth, what a fix I should be in, providing my salvation depended upon it, and how infernal it would be for a God to doom me for not doing what is impossible! Equally as absurd and equally as unjust is the Christian religion and the Christian's God.

If curses were ever justifiable I should want to sit up all night and curse such a God as that. Hear what Dr. Cullis says in his book called "Faith Works:" "Then as I read the Bible with eyes just beginning to open to its teachings of duty and privilege, the question came up as to its being true in every part, old and new, but the Lord led me to what has proved to be an end of all controversy in my soul on the subject, as I believe it would in every other soul if really adopted. I took the Bible in my two hands, closed it, held it up thus, and said, 'I do, and will forever, by God's grace, believe every word between these two lids, whether I understand it or not.' I hav had no trouble about it from that day to this. . . . I said, 'I will take every precept and promis in the Bible as my own, just as if my own name, Charles Cullis, was written in every one of them.'" "The question came up as to its being true in every part." This question should hav been solved intelligently by employing the reasoning faculties in its examination instead of smothering his conviction, shutting his eyes and the book, and swallowing it haphazard, even though it had been true "in every word between the two lids."

I hav seen invalids hold a spoon of physic in one hand and a cup of water in the other ready to follow the physic with water lest it should turn the stomach; and so with Christians—when they read the rib story, the Jonah-whale story, and the resurrection of corpses at the crucifixion of Jesus, they hav only to shut their eyes and wash it down by faith. But such "holy water" is not compatible to the mind of an honest man, who must know the whys and wherefores of things upon evidence before, not after, faith.

Apropos to the foregoing, I sometimes hear Christians argue like this: "Anyhow, if your position be true, I shall be as well off as you, and if I don't change my views, and remain a Christian, I shall be on the safe side in case you are wrong." As much as to say, "I don't know whether Christianity is true or not, but I will profess it and not let the Almighty know but that I believe it."

They claim that he knows the heart, and takes cognizance of every motiv, and yet they will profess what their reason, when exercised, repudiates, so that in case their secret better judgment and conviction should fail them they can fall back on the merits of their profession.

That man of intelligence who seeks to know the truth, that is honest, faithful, and true to his convictions, will repudiate Christianity every time.

Not the Devil, but Natural Law.

I think I fully comprehend the meaning of J. R. Perry, in his article which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th, entitled "All About the Devil." But where is the propriety of calling things that are good—laws that are necessary for the existence of the universe—the devil? Because man has mechanical ingenuity, whereby with certain appliances he overcomes certain laws, or forces, and hence meets with resistance, is no reason whatever that the resisting force should be called the devil. The resisting force is simply a law of nature that is a necessary principle of matter and therefore is good. I admit that a personal God and a personal devil are imaginary. But custom, if nothing else, would call evil, or the bad, devil if we personified it. The term evil, or bad, cannot with propriety be used as applied to resistance occasioned by inherent principles of matter. I cannot understand how any law of nature is bad, or can be considered or called an evil. By the law of gravitation, I may be hurled from the top of a precipice and killed; but no person on that account thinks of calling the law an evil. Man nor the universe could not exist without that law, and when occasionally a person is now and then injured thereby, all the animal creation are continually enjoying blessings therefrom.

The same principle will apply to all of nature's laws, forces, or principles.

There is nothing bad, wrong, or an evil, except the violation or transgression of law, which could not take place until matter assumed a form that contained an element of "Free Moral Agency." All the evil there is in the world is occasioned by the abuse of laws, truths, and principles.

If a man overeats, or eats improper food, he has abused, transgressed, and violated a law, which was wrong, and he suffers. The law was necessary; it was proper to obey the law, but the abuse was what was wrong. It is right for man to be economical. All nature is economical, never wasting anything. But when man is either prodigal to wasting everything, or miserly to cheating his fellow-men, it is abuse of a simply economical principle that pervades all matter, which is wrong. When a man uses his reason and inventiv power to plunder and rob, it is an abuse of those faculties, and again is an evil.

And I am bold to assert that there can be, and there is, no wrong back of animal creation, and that all the wrong that exists, all the evil that is witnessed, all the reason that is experienced, comes from the violation and abuse of principles pervading all matter that are necessary and good of themselvs. If this evil is to be personified, call it the devil; but do not call the law itself, or forces themselvs, the devil.

Presbyterianism.

"God having, out of his mere good pleasure, from all eternity elected some to everlasting life, did enter into a covenant of grace to deliver them out of the estate of sin and misery, and to bring them into an estate of salvation by a redeemer" (Presbyterian Westminster Question Book).

Can any one conceive the moral grandeur of this sublime doctrin? If God from all eternity elected some to everlasting life, he necessarily elected all the rest to everlasting death. Now, what is meant by everlasting life and everlasting death? I understand everlasting life to mean immortality, and everlasting death to mean total annihilation of body and mind; but the Presbyterians seem to giv a different meaning to these terms. The first, they say, is eternal salvation, while the other is eternal damnation. How happy it must make one feel to think that billions of years before the universe was illuminated by a sun or decorated with a single planet—countless ages before a solitary atom of matter had been created—the destiny of the human family was fixed; that a hideous hell in God's mind had been already invented and intended for most of the human race, and that human beings, even yet unborn, were then designed to make their eternal home in hell. But this is Presbyterianism; this is the doctrin which we must not destroy without replacing it with another; these are the "glad tidings"—tidings of damnation—preached from the Presbyterian pulpits throughout Christendom; this is the beautiful doctrin which consoles the dying and fixes the star of hope above the Presbyterian's grave.

I wonder how God decided whether certain unborn individuals should be saved or lost. Some think he decided our fate by playing poker with his son or by running foot-races with the Holy Ghost; but it is more likely that he said every millionth one born should be saved, and all the rest lost. But even after God had elected a few from all eternity to everlasting salvation all would still hav been lost had he not entered into the "covenant of grace" and made a second effort to save his elected few. It is not very clear to me how God's entering into a "covenant of grace" with himself and coming to this world could aid him in checking the eternal flood of souls which, like a great river, perpetually flows into hell. It seems to me an almighty and omnipotent God ought to be able to stay upon his throne and manage his people at the same time.

When God went into the redeeming business, why didn't he redeem all mankind? It was hardly worth while to redeem only those who, "out of his mere good pleasure," were elected to salvation thousands of ages before. Is it my fault if I happen to be one of the countless millions that were not elected to everlasting life? If Presbyterianism be true, I cannot change my destiny; my fate is sealed. Jehovah, thousands of years ere I was born, put upon my soul the brand of hell and marked the pit where I shall finally go. Now, who is audacious enough to destroy the consolation naturally arising from this doctrin? Who will multiply human sorrow by extinguishing the fires of hell and tearing from religion all the beauties of eternal pain? WM. SCOTT.

Death of Isaiah Fullerton.

Isaiah Fullerton, one of the oldest citizens of Erie county, N. Y., died at his home in Alden Thursday morning, May 3d, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Fullerton was born on the 13th of September, 1799, at Woodstock, Vt. He was a descendant of one branch of the Fullerton family that traces its ancestry back to Scotch origin, and was the fifth and youngest son of Arunah Fullerton and Lilly Stetson.

Isaiah inherited nothing save a sturdy spirit from his parents, but, as the sons of New England families often did, went out to work as soon as old enough to do a day's work. He saved his earnings, and in 1821 sought a home in the then far West. He bought a farm at Yorkshire Center, Cattaraugus county. Soon after he had located in his new home he returned to Vermont and married Miss Eliza Kendall, who is one year his junior, and who survives him. The frosts having repeatedly destroyed his crops, he became dissatisfied, sold his farm at Yorkshire Center, and finally, in 1825, he bought a tract of heavy timber in Alden, Erie county. He immediately began the arduous task of clearing his purchase and cultivating the soil, and a soil, too, that did not yield its favors to the sluggard. Later he enjoyed a safe and moderate prosperity. Having sold his farm in 1847 to Prof. James Hadley, Sr., of Buffalo, he bought another a short distance away, where he lived to the time of his death.

Mr. Fullerton was possessed of many of the Scotch characteristics, viz: frugality, industry, generosity, resolution, and scrupulous regard for the rights of others. He was tenacious of life, of honor, of preferences, and of purposes. He was not a man of wealth, but a man of substance and respectability. His inborn love of truth and of investigation were dominating traits in his character, and they activly declared themselvs throughout his long life. Being possessed of excellent social qualities, rare good sense, correct judgment, and a strong will, he commanded the respect of all who knew him, and was well equipped for any contest. Had his lot in early life been cast in a more Liberal field, he would doubtless hav proven himself a very strong man. He had no ambition for office. He held several local offices of trust only. He took an earnest interest in politics, and was well read in governmental affairs. He was identified with the Whig part—though an Abolitionist—until the formation of the Republican party, when he became a warm advocate and supporter of its principles. He was an ardent admirer of Greeley, Seward, Summer, Lincoln, and Garfield. In religion he breathed a Liberal air—a religion revealed by nature, not by a "book" or books. He felt that the present age was one of progress, of transition, and of revision; that old things were passing away and all were becoming new. He hoped to liv long enough to see order reduced from the chaos of conflicting ideas. He had no sympathy with clerical arrogance and usurpation, and many a time hav clergymen experienced the dire results of a defeat in an argumentativ combat with him. In short, he was a man of thought, liberality, and progress; well posted in history, science, ethics, etc. The Liberal cause has lost a man.

Mr. Fullerton leaves a wife and three children—two sons and a daughter—Dr. Henry F. Fullerton, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Mr. Herschell K. Fullerton, and Mrs. A. F. Pattison, of Alden.

How a Great Philosopher Died.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In connection with your editorial in the last number of The Truth Seeker, in reference to the death of Dr. George M. Beard, perhaps a portion of the accompanying letter of Dr. Adam Smith to William Strahan, Esq., in regard to the death of David Hume, the historian, may prove of interest to your readers. Gibbon said that "Hume died the death of a philosopher," and I believe that no one has claimed that he died the death of a Christian.

Yours with great respect, Peter Eckler.

Letter from Adam Smith, LL.D., to William Strahan, Esq.

Kirkaldy, Fifeshire, Nov. 9, 1776.

Dear Sir: It is with a real, though a very melancholy, pleasure that I sit down to giv you some account of the behavior of our late excellent friend, Mr. Hume, during his last illness.

Though in his own judgment his disease was mortal and incurable, yet he allowed himself to be prevailed upon, by the entreaty of his friends, to try what might be the effects of a long journey. A few days before he set out, he wrote that account of his own life, which, together with his other papers, he has left to your care. My account, therefore, shall begin where his ends.

He set out for London toward the end of April, and at Morpeth met with Mr. John Home and myself, who had both come down from London on purpose to see him, expecting to hav found him at Edinburgh. Mr. Home returned with him, and attended him during the whole of his stay in England, with that care and attention which might be expected from a temper so perfectly friendly and affectionate. As I had written to my mother that she might expect me in Scotland, I was under the necessity of continuing my journey. His disease seemed to yield to exercise and change of air, and when he arrived in London he was apparently in much better health than when he left Edinburgh. He was advised to go to Bath to drink the waters, which appeared for some time to hav so good an effect upon him that even he himself began to entertain, what he was not apt to do, a better opinion of his own health. His symptoms, however, soon returned with their usual violence, and from that moment he gave up all thoughts of recovery, but submitted with the utmost cheerfulness, and the most perfect complacency and resignation. Upon his return to Edinburgh, though he found himself much weaker, yet his cheerfulness never abated, and he continued to divert himself, as usual, with correcting his own works for a new edition, with reading books of amusement, with the conversation of his friends, and sometimes in the evening with a party at his favorit game of whist. His cheerfulness was so great, and his conversation and amusements ran so much in their usual strain, that, notwithstanding all bad symptoms, many people could not believe he was dying. "I shall tell your friend, Col. Edmondstone," said Doctor Dundas to him one day, "that I left you much better, and in a fair way of recovery." "Doctor," said he, "as I believe you would not choose to tell anything but the truth, you had better tell him that I am dying as fast as my enemies, if I hav any, could wish, and as easily and cheerfully as my best friends could desire." Colonel Edmondstone soon afterward came to see him and take leave of him, and on his way home he could not forbear writing him a letter, bidding him once more an eternal adieu, and applying to him, as to a dying man, the beautiful French verses in which the Abbe Chaulieu, in expectation of his own death, laments his approaching separation from his friend, the Marquis de la Fare. Mr. Hume's magnanimity and firmness were such that his most affectionate friends knew that they hazarded nothing in talking or writing to him as a dying man, and that so far from being hurt by this frankness, he was rather pleased and flattered by it. I happened to come into his room while he was reading this letter, which he had just received, and which he immediately showed me. I told him that though I was sensible how very much he was weakened, and that appearances were in many respects very bad, yet his cheerfulness was still so great, the spirit of life seemed still to be so very strong in him, that I could not help entertaining some faint hopes. He answered: "Your hopes are groundless. An habitual diarrhœa of more than a year's standing would be a very bad disease at any age; at my age it is a mortal one. When I lie down in the evening I feel myself weaker than when I rose in the morning; and when I rise in the morning weaker than when I lay down in the evening. I am sensible, besides, that some of my vital parts are affected, so that I must soon die." "Well," said I, "if it must be so, you hav at least the satisfaction of leaving all your friends, your brother's family in particular, in great prosperity." He said that he felt that satisfaction so sensibly that when he was reading, a few days before, Lucian's "Dialogs of the Dead," among all the excuses which are alleged to Charon for not entering readily into his boat, he could not find one that fitted him; he had no house to finish, he had no daughter to provide for, he had no enemies upon whom he wished to revenge himself. "I could not well imagin," said he, "what excuse I could make to Charon in order to obtain a little delay. I hav done everything of consequence which I ever meant to do, and I could at no time expect to leave my relations and friends in a better situation than that in which I am now likely to leave them; I therefore hav all reason to die contented." He then diverted himself with inventing several jocular excuses which he supposed he might make to Charon, and with imagining the very surly answers which it might suit the character of Charon to return to them. "Upon further consideration," said he, "I thought I might say to him, 'Good Charon, I hav been correcting my works for a new edition. Allow me a little time that I may see how the public receives the alterations.' But Charon would answer: 'When you hav seen the effect of these you will be for making other alterations. There will be no end of such excuses; so, honest friend, please step into the boat.' But I might still urge, 'Hav a little patience, good Charon, I hav been endeavoring to open the eyes of the public. If I liv a few years longer I may hav the satisfaction of seeing the downfall of some of the prevailing systems of superstition.' But Charon would then lose all temper and decency. 'You loitering rogue, that will not happen these many hundred years. Do you fancy I will grant you a lease for so long a term? Get into the boat this instant, you lazy, loitering rogue.'"

But though Mr. Hume always talked of his approaching dissolution with great cheerfulness, he never affected to make any parade of his magnanimity. He never mentioned the subject but when the conversation naturally led to it, and never dwelt longer upon it than the course of the conversation happened to require. It was a subject, indeed, which occurred pretty frequently, in consequence of the inquiries which his friends who came to see him naturally made concerning the state of his health. The conversation which I mentioned above, and which passed on Thursday, the 8th of August, was the last, except one, that I ever had with him. He had now become so very weak that the company of his most intimate friends fatigued him; for his cheerfulness was still so great, his complacence and social disposition were still so entire, that when any friend was with him he could not help talking more and with greater exertion than suited the weakness of his body. At his own desire, therefore, I agreed to leave Edinburgh, where I was staying partly upon his account, and returned to my mother's house here at Kirkaldy upon condition that he would send for me whenever he wished to see me; the physician who saw him most frequently, Doctor Black, undertaking, in the meantime, to write me occasionally an account of the state of his health.

On the 22d of August the doctor wrote me the following letter:

"Since my last, Mr. Hume has passed his time pretty easily, but is much weaker. He sits up, goes down stairs once a day, and amuses himself with reading, but seldom sees anybody. He finds that even the conversation of his most intimate friends fatigues and oppresses him; and it is happy that he does not need it, for he is quite free from anxiety, impatience, or low spirits, and passes his time very well with the assistance of amusing books."

I received the day after a letter from Mr. Hume himself, of which the following is an extract:

"Edinburgh, August 23, 1776.

"My Dearest Friend: I am obliged to make use of my nephew's hand in writing to you, as I do not rise to-day.

. . . . . .

"I go very fast to decline, and last night had a small fever, which I hoped might put a quicker period to this tedious illness; but unluckily it has in a great measure gone off. I cannot submit to your coming over here on my account, as it is possible for me to see you so small a part of the day, but Doctor Black can better inform you concerning the degree of strength which may from time to time remain with me. Adieu," etc.

Three days after I received the following letter from Doctor Black:

"Edinburgh, Monday, Aug. 26, 1776.

"Dear Sir: Yesterday about four o'clock, afternoon, Mr. Hume expired. The near approach of his death became evident in the night between Thursday and Friday, when his disease became excessiv, and soon weakened him so much that he could no longer rise out of his bed. He continued to the last perfectly sensible, and free from much pain or feelings of distress. He never dropped the smallest expression of impatience; but when he had occasion to speak to the people about him, always did it with affection and tenderness. I thought it improper to write to bring you over, especially as I heard that he had dictated a letter to you desiring you not to come. When he became very weak it cost him an effort to speak, and he died in such a happy composure of mind that nothing could exceed it."

Thus died our most excellent and never to be forgotten friend, concerning whose philosophical opinions men will no doubt judge variously, everyone approving or condemning them, according as they happen to coincide or disagree with his own; but concerning whose character and conduct there can scarce be a difference of opinion. His temper, indeed, seemed to be more happily balanced, if I may be allowed such an expression, than that perhaps of any other man I hav ever known. Even in the lowest state of his fortune, his great and necessary frugality never hindered him from exercising, upon proper occasions, acts both of charity and generosity. It was a frugality founded not upon avarice, but upon the love of independency. The extreme gentleness of his nature never weakened either the firmness of his mind or the steadiness of his resolutions. His constant pleasantry was the genuin effusion of good nature and good humor, tempered with delicacy and modesty, and without even the slightest tincture of malignity, so frequently the disagreeable source of what is called wit in other men. It never was the meaning of his raillery to mortify, and therefore, far from offending, it seldom failed to please and delight even those who were the objects of it. To his friends, who were frequently the objects of it, there was not perhaps any one of all his great and amiable qualities which contributed more to endear his conversation. And that gaiety of temper, so agreeable in society, but which is so often accompanied with frivolous and superficial qualities, was in him certainly attended with the most severe application, the most extensiv learning, the greatest depth of thought, and a capacity in every respect the most comprehensiv. Upon the whole, I hav always considered him, both in his lifetime and since his death, as approaching as nearly to the idea of a perfectly wise and virtuous man as perhaps the nature of human frailty will permit. I ever am, dear sir,

Most affectionately yours, Adam Smith.

The Liberal Club.

There was wild excitement at the Liberal Club on Friday evening, the 11th. Dr. Dio Lewis had been announced to deliver a lecture on "The Function of Civil Law in Human Government." At the commencement of his remarks it was found that what he was to say would apply chiefly to the question of prohibition. Great interest was manifested by members of the club. Dr. Lewis declared that there was no such thing as society; there were only individuals, and only as individuals had we any rights. At this Positivistic persons present began to stir uneasily, and Socialistically inclined individuals manifested a desire to ask questions. Dr. Lewis said questions were what he liked, but being assured that all would hav an opportunity to speak when he had finished, he went on, and delivered a discourse on the subject of prohibition which, if he had heard it, would hav made Mr. E. C. Walker, of Iowa, quite happy. We must learn, the speaker said, to distinguish between crime, which may properly be dealt with by force, and vice, which we should seek to eradicate by persuasion. A crime must hav the element of malice prepense, and injury toward another person. Vice is an injury we do ourselvs in a mistaken pursuit of happiness. The law cannot properly deal with vice, because vice is not a crime, and law has only to do with crime. Rum-selling and rum-drinking are vices, but the sale of liquor should no more be interfered with by law than the sale of potatoes. Gluttony is a vice fully equal, in the extent of harm it does, to intemperance in the use of alcoholic liquors. Yet no one believes gluttony should be punished by law. We all hav more or less vices, and if vices were to be punished with imprisonment the whole world would be in jail, and the last man would hav to put his hand out through a hole in the door and lock himself in. Suicide was not a crime; and, in answer to a question, Dr. Lewis said that if he saw a man, in his right mind, about to destroy himself, and if he believed that man would be better off out of the world than in it, he should turn his back and allow the deed to be consummated. If, however, he believed the would-be suicide to be laboring under temporary aberration of the intellect, he would arrest the act.

These views provoked much opposition, and several speakers proceeded to criticise a great deal that the doctor had not said. Mr. Roosevelt had seen a steamboat blown up on the North River through the recklessness of the captain, who had an ambition to show the world that his boat could not be beaten. He believed that captain guilty of a crime, although he bore no malice toward the passengers whom he had so suddenly and inconveniently elevated. Dr. Lewis said he believed so too; and the point being thus, to his great astonishment, taken out of his remarks, Mr. Roosevelt shook hands with the lecturer and sat down. Professor Eccles, who accomplishes the German dialect rather too successfully to be readily understood, rescued the previous speaker's argument, and enlarged upon it at considerable length, sedulously avoiding the question under discussion. Dr. Caleb S. Weeks, who has the faculty of always placing himself upon the right side of a question, brought the attention of the audience back from a Pennsylvania coal mine, where Professor Eccles had left it, to the function of civil government in dealing with vice and crime. He believed the line of demarcation between the two evils was not very clearly defined. Law should confine itself to dealing with the acts of individuals which menaced the safety and well-being of those whom it was designed to protect. Dr. Weeks's remarks were interrupted by the boisterous conduct of ill-mannered persons in the rear part of the hall, to whom he administered a rebuke the only fault of which was its mildness. It is evident that the Liberal Club is attended by people who go there with the intention of making a disturbance, and upon whom some other kind of club—a policeman's, for instance—would hav a salutary effect.

In following Dr. Weeks, Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews paid him a merited compliment. The doctor was a profound scholar, a deep thinker, and a thoroughly able man. He might lack the graces of oratory, but his ideas were sound, his heart was in the right place, and he deserved respectful attention. Mr. Andrews said that unfortunately there were not enough individualists in the club. Through the influence of Auguste Comte's ideas, drawn mainly from the Catholic church, the individual was lost sight of by the Positivists. He believed in cellular, tissular, and molecular individualism, down to the very atoms which go to make up a molecule. Mr. Andrews's remarks were so suited to the ideas of Dr. Lewis as to call out several emphatic "amens" from that gentleman.

But the interest of the evening was destined to culminate in the speech of a German young gentleman present who, as a stranger, demanded three minutes in which to answer Dr. Lewis. He confessed he had never before addressed an audience. It is believed that his first experience will not encourage him to ever address another. The thought which he was evidently desirous of expressing was that Dr. Lewis had no right to decide whether he should allow a person to commit suicide or not. The doctor, he declared with great warmth, thereby set himself up as an arbiter over the destiny of better men. It is not claimed, however, that the thought was very clearly brought out. The accent and gesticulations of the speaker were so irresistibly funny that the audience failed to restrain their laughter. His excitement increased, and the audience jeered him; calls of "Time!" were heard, and to get even with his tormentors, he abused the lecturer as long as he could make himself heard, and then, after a futil endeavor to carry away the hat of a member in a front seat who had laid his tile on the edge of the platform, and which in his agitation the speaker mistook for his own, he descended from the platform in ignominious defeat. Several other speakers followed, but failed to awaken enthusiasm. Dr. Atkinson made a conciliatory speech; Lawyer Chamberlain spoke slowly and calmly, and that brilliant and picturesque affliction, Professor Vaughan, "of Virginia," exhausted his rhetoric and poesy without effect. Dr. Lamb was equally unsuccessful in getting up further emotion. Dr. Lewis made his closing remarks to a comparativly somnolent audience, and people left the hall with the vision still before their eyes of a wildly excited Teutonic gentleman dancing about the stage, gesticulating with his head, sawing the air with his arms and hands, and delivering with great volubility a stream of broken English which came to the hearer as if it had just passed backward through a German sausage-grinder whirled by steam. The three-hundredth meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club will long be memorable on this account. G. E. M.

Priests or Ministers.

It is estimated that there are in the United States about seventy-five thousand parasites commonly called priests or ministers, who receive annually for their support about $2,000 each, contributed by mankind and womankind, amounting to one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, for what? Answer—Nothing.

Preachers are the drones of society. It is their habit to liv off the hard earnings of others. Idleness is their chief calling in life. But few of them are found who labor at honest toil for the support of themselvs or their families. Such men prefer that others labor, and that they may receive, at least, a very large portion of the benefits arising from it.

Preachers are robbers and plunderers of the people. Their salaries are but the result of a "pious" game of church stealing. How many preachers are there now in the world that are ever known to turn an honest penny or to hav earned an honest dollar? Money that should be earned by a preacher at honest toil would, we think, refuse to jingle in his pockets. It would feel ashamed of the kind of company it had been thrown into, and crave to be loosed from so peculiar an association.

Preachers generally are paid large salaries for preaching. No preacher was ever yet known to freeze or starve to death by reason of small salaries. By the very law of their being they are all, to a man, beggars. We never yet heard of one who was too proud to beg. Begging is a part of their daily business. It enters largely into their religion. In fact, it is one of their religion's chief corner-stones.

Preachers hav never yet been known to refuse to take money from the poor and needy of this world, as well as from the rich and affluent. They are no respecters of persons whenever their own pockets are to be filled with the "filthy lucre." Church-members must giv and provide for them, whether they are able to do so or not. Their salaries must be paid them, whether the widows and the orphans of the churches hav bread to eat or not. The poor man and poor woman must giv of their small earnings to them. Such people must not plead poverty, hunger, or nakedness, when such men's salaries are to be paid. If they do, they are taught they will be damned, and they believe it. The full payment of preacher's salaries is a part of all Christians' duties to obtain heaven.

We are opposed to supporting such a class of human leeches as preachers are, in their idleness. To do so is a crime. It is a sin against the good and welfare of mankind. We think such "pious" church vagabonds as they are should be made leave their pulpits and pursue the road to honest labor. Men and women hav no use for such a class of lazy and indolent human vipers as they are. They should become a stench in the nostrils of all mankind. If preachers are God's servants, as they say themselvs they are, God should pay them for their services, and men and women should not be compelled to do it. If God has hired them and sent them out into the world to preach his own particular religion he should provide for their support, and none else should be burdened with it.

Preaches are eye-sores in every community in which they liv. They set themselves up before the world as examples of piety, but they are almost to a man the most wicked and sinful of men. To be a preacher is to be a hypocrit. Hypocrisy is born of their religion, and preachers are the first to practice it. The more hypocrisy a preacher has the greater seems to be his influence over his congregation. A preacher with only a small amount of hypocrisy is seldom know to fare very well with Christians anywhere. Such ones are most generally kept very busy looking out over the world for a new location. But few spears of grass are ever known to grow under their feet.

Preachers are a curse to the world. It has been drenched often in blood by their teachings. They are the advocates of war—but they are seldom, if ever, known to engage themselves in one. They always prefer to remain at their homes, and let others go out upon the field of bloody strife to fight their battles for them. Preachers are generally the most base and ignoble cowards. They had much rather pray than fight. They are persuaded that God will hear their prayers, but do not think he will always protect them from bullets upon the battle-field.

We think men and women should begin to realize the fact that preachers are a nuisance and a plague; that they are lepers and vile men. People should not help so lazy, indolent, and profligate a class of men as they are. If people desire to have any communication whatever with the myths of the clouds, let them do so without the aid of any middle-men. Let them pray if they chose to do so, without the assistance of those whom they are called upon to pay for such services. Those who desire salvation at the hands of a God, let them obtain it without the intercession of preachers. We are in favor of a free salvation, whether it is to be obtained of a God or anyone else. We are not in favor of paying any class of men to procure it for us. The world can do well enough without preachers, and the sooner they are given to understand their services are no longer needed, the better off mankind will be.

DISGUSTED CHURCH-MEMBER.

Notes.

PROFESSOR L. E. HUGGINS, of Reading, Pa., having connected himself, as advertising agent, with Man, the League organ, will hereafter reside in New York. The professor is a phrenologist of wide experience and knowledge. We wish him success in his new capacity.

"FREETHINKERS," says the editor of the Observer, "are no more Liberal than we are;" and he adds, "Liberalism degenerates into licentiousness." If there is any force in logic, then Dr. Prime is by his own confession as far along on the road to "licentiousness" as the rest of us.

DANIEL TUTTLE, of Bucyrus, Ohio, died on the 8th inst. Mr. Tuttle had been for many years a laborer for the cause of Freethought, and devoted most of his time and means to the work of eradicating superstition. A few years ago he published a paper called the Divinity Physician, which many of our readers may hav seen. He spent the last portion of his life in poverty, though his condition was considerably ameliorated by financial aid furnished by liberal-hearted people through the instrumentality of Mrs. Slenker, to whom great credit is due for her labors in his behalf. Mr. Tuttle died in the faith in which he lived. The funeral took place on the 9th.

THERE is a movement on foot in the Rev. Mr. Virgin's church, in New York city, to evangelize stray Chinamen. Forty celestials attend the Sunday-school. Mr. Virgin finds it necessary to employ a teacher for each pupil, as no two Chinamen understand an idea the same. Some of them acknowledge "Melican man's god heap best," and promis, "Me lurnee speakee Linglish fust; then me lovee Jesus." The "Melican man's" God must be highly flattered by the compliment thus paid him; and the Son is also probably happy in the anticipation of the affection to be bestowed upon him when these children of the East shall hav mastered the English tongue.

MR. BEECHER said last Sunday that he years ago became convinced of the soundness of the theory of evolution, and found the seeds of that doctrin in the New Testament. He did not point out the chapter and verse where these seeds are disclosed, but he may hav referred to the way a being was changed from an indefinit and incoherent deity to a definit and coherent man, or how, through continuous differentiations and integrations, a large number of devils were turned into a herd of swine. It is a laudable enough endeavor for Mr. Beecher to try and put evolution into the Bible, but if it should be shown in his day that evolution as now understood is not after all the true theory of development, it would be somewhat embarrassing for him to hav to take it all out again.

THE people of Canada, or at least of some parts of Canada, show unmistakable signs of progression. For instance, Mr. A. H. Roe, a well-known Agnostic, has been elected from Lennox county to a seat in the provincial Parliament, by a good majority, over an orthodox opponent. The same compliment cannot, however, be paid to the customs officers of that dominion. Paine's "Age of Reason," forwarded from THE TRUTH SEEKER office to patrons in Canada, has been held in the Custom House on account of the heretical views therein expressed, and Voltaire's "Pocket Theology," another of our publications, has been declared obscene and held for that reason. The prime minister of Canada has told a correspondent of a Boston paper that he regarded "The Age of Reason" as a classic, and does not think "Pocket Theology" comes within the meaning of the law against obscene literature. The matter is to be tested in the courts, as one of the Freethinkers of Montreal has brought suit against the customs official of that city for seizing and confiscating Paine's and Voltaire's works. A Canadian edition of "The Age of Reason" is also to be brought out. What Canada evidently needs more than any other thing is a change in its Custom House officers.

MR. COURTLANDT PALMER, the stanch Liberal and Positivist, published in the New York Observer of April 26th an article on the Comstock postal laws, in which he took occasion to define, for the benefit of the Christian readers of that paper, the position of the Liberals of the country on the subject of the suppression of vice. He calls to notice the fact that because Freethinkers object to the laws under consideration on the ground of their unconstitutionality, it does not by any means follow that Liberals are opposed to the object of those laws; nor that because they resist one means of preventing vice, they resist all means. Five reasons are given why Liberals oppose these laws: (1) They are unconstitutional; (2) they are useless; (3) they are unnecessary; (4) they are unrepublican; (5) they are profoundly immoral. These points are supported by arguments which hav been made familiar to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER by Mr. Wakeman and others in a pamphlet on the "Unconstitutionality of the Comstock Laws," and which hav never been and cannot be refuted. The editor of the Observer undertakes a reply, but makes small headway. The failure of Dr. Prime is in not seeing the main points at issue—that the laws are not authorized by the Constitution of the United States; that they giv undue power to irresponsible persons; that they are capable of being so construed as to become a barrier to the liberty of the press, and that incalculable injury to innocent persons has been and must still be wrought under them. A quotation is made from F. E. Abbot, but as that individual has never shown himself capable of grasping the true merits of the question, his opinion has no weight. The Comstock laws are either a good or an evil. If they are the former, and are in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, they deserve to be supported. If they are the latter, and are unconstitutional, they hav no right to exist, and should be wiped out. The argument of Mr. Palmer has shown that there is but one side to this question. The postal laws of 1873 are an unmitigated nuisance, and all the sophistry of the Observer and of F. E. Abbot combined will not convince any reasonable person otherwise. They are the crowning evil of all unwholesome laws of this century. Their enforcement has been placed in the hands of an unscrupulous scoundrel. They hav done irremediable injury to upright persons. This government can never atone for the wrong done through them to the innocent. But it can prevent further harm from coming from that source, and to see that it does this is one of the first duties of American citizens.

THE New York Times says that "Herbert Spencer, Profs. Huxley and Tyndall, John Morley, and about 200 of the leading literary and scientific men of England hav signed a memorial to be presented to the Home Secretary protesting against the continuance of the imprisonment of Mr. Foote, the editor of the Freethinker, for blasphemy, and asking for his release. Sir William Harcourt, it is understood, will refuse the petition." In the second trial of Messrs. Foote and Ramsey in England the jury disagreed, after which a nolle prosequi was entered by the prosecution. Thus Mr. Foote and his friends hav only the first sentence to serve. They are suffering what is virtually solitary confinement, and the imprisonment is beginning to tell on their health. Public feeling against Atheism is strong, and it is occasionally shown by acts of persecution. For instance, during the past week, Mrs. Besant, the partner of Charles Bradlaugh, and Miss Bradlaugh, his daughter, were refused admission as students to the Woman's Botany Class of the London University. The reason given was that their presence might induce a disturbance in the harmony at present existing in the class. Mrs. Besant appealed to the council of the university, which is composed of persons of all shades of religious opinion. The council, however, confirmed the refusal.

THE Thirteenth Annual Convention of the American Labor Reform League met in Clarendon Hall, this city, on Sunday and Monday, May 6th and 7th. Mr. Heywood, the secretary, was the moving spirit. The meetings were well attended, and considerable interest manifested in the measures discussed. Addresses were made by Messrs. Heywood, Rowe, Thompson, Beeny, and others. The secretary presented, among others, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That since labor is the source of wealth and creates all values equitably vendible, accumulation, by interest, rent, or other speculativ increase, is robbery; that so-called debts, paid once in the form of interest, are morally cancelled, and the free use of land and other raw material, with unrestricted exchange in the products of service, are natural rights of all persons.

Resolved, That re-affirming the five points of our industrial faith—free land, free trade, free money, free travel and transit, the natural right of labor to unrestricted enterprise in all phases of production and exchange, we rejoice in tendency toward liberation of credit evidenced in rag-baby persistence, in the advance of citizen right assured in growing Liberalism here, and in death-throes of landlordism which upheave Europe; that, few in numbers, yet strong in reason and in the irresistible might of ideas, we shall work on until usury, rent, poverty, war—the great evils which vex humanity and trouble God—cease to mar the fair face of Mother Earth.

Lectures and Meetings.

FREETHOUGHT and Reform meetings are held every Sunday at 213 West Madison street, Chicago. Strangers are invited. Seats free.

MR. W. F. PECK is engaged to sing for the Pittsburg Liberal League during the Sundays of May. He will sing at the Linesville Liberal League camp-meeting in June.

W. F. JAMIESON gave five lectures at Neillsville, Wis., to increasing houses. He is to commence his lectures in Pipe Stone, Minn., the latter part of May. As he wishes to take a vacation during the months of July and August in Minnesota, he will accept calls for lectures for the month of June. Address him at Lake City, Minn.

THE fifth annual camp-meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists will be held at Flint, commencing Friday, August 17th, and closing Monday, 27th. The secretary, S. B. McCracken, of Detroit, wishes to correspond with two or three mediums of marked power with the view of securing their attendance.

THE annual meeting of the Friends of Human Progress will be held at Waterloo, N. Y., on Saturday and Sunday, June 2d and 3d. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich., H. L. Green, of Salamanca, N. Y., and a number of other speakers will be present to address the people. It is expected that there will be a large gathering of the Liberal people of central and western New York.

THE sixth annual meeting of the Spiritualists of Central New York will be held in the Universalist church at Lee Center on Saturday and Sunday, June 9th and 10th, commencing at 2 o'clock P.M., on Saturday, and closing Sunday evening. Mr. J. Frank Baxter, of Chelsea, Mass., the test medium, singer, and speaker is engaged, and other good speakers will be secured. Good hotel accommodations will be furnished at one dollar per day, and friends in Lee Center will accommodate all possible. The hall in the basement of the church will be used for a lunch room, and all who wish to avail themselvs of this privilege will bring their baskets and enjoy a good social lunch. Parties wishing to be carried from Rome are requested to send in their names to Mr. H. J. Hitchcock, of Lee Center, before June 5th. We hope to see all of the Spiritualists and Liberals present, and extend a cordial invitation to all to this feast of reason, for we will spare no pains to make this meeting one of the best since our society was organized.

A Definition of Science.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your issue of the 5th inst. I find an article from the pen of Samuel P. Putnam, entitled "What is Science?" in which he refers to the Colloquium, and to a discussion which has sprung up in that body between Mr. Wakeman and myself upon that subject. He then proceeds to state his own views, make definitions of his own, and to call on me to throw more light on the subject. Mr. Putnam is so graceful, so genial, and withal so forcible a statementist, that it is always a pleasure to deal with him; and if in the scientific domain he is not always accurate, he is earnest and true—that is to say, he is willing and desirous to be placed right.

Let us at once, then, set aside all questions of "Inspiration, Revelation, Intuition, or all higher forms of knowledge, if any such exist, than experience;" and set aside Metaphysics, in so far as that term means any of these things—that is to say, let us set aside all this as extraneous to the present discussion, without deciding anything for or against.

The difference between Mr. Wakeman and myself, for instance, lies wholly, so far as the discussion has as yet gone, within those narrower limits which Mr. Putnam prescribes to the inquiry, within the field which he holds to be legitimate. This point is not well understood. It is supposed that I am defending old and hackneyed theses of philosophy with which for the present I hav nothing whatsoever to do; whereas I am asserting very new and hitherto unappreciated aspects of the facts within the well-defined field of experience. Let Mr. Putnam, therefore, dismiss at once the idea that in provoking a discussion with me on the definition and distributions of science he is to be carried over any of the old ground fought over by him, doubtless, in his earlier battles of theological dissent. It is in his own arena, as this is defined in this particular case, that we will therefore proceed to the investigation of the subject.

I quote as follows from Mr. Putnam's article:

"The first definition that we giv to science is 'classified knowledge.' Mere knowledge is not science, but knowledge formulated, knowledge set in order.

"The main question, then, is, What is knowledge?—what do we actually know? Here is the battle-ground; do we know anything before experience? Speaking for myself, I say that we do not. All knowledge comes from experience.

"Well, then, what is experience?

"To this I answer that it is the human mind in contact with the outer world. There can be no merely subjectiv experience. The origin of all experience is a sensation from something other than the mind itself.

"The starting-point, therefore, of human knowledge, is a material sensation."

Let us admit, then, without re-examination, that science is "classified knowledge;" that mere or common knowledge is "not science;" that the question is rightly shifted and becomes, "What is knowledge?" and that this again becomes, "What is experience?" Admit that all knowledge comes from experience; admit, in fine, that experience is, then, the "human mind in contact with the outer world;" and to this last statement I must invite Mr. Putnam to rigorously abide. He proceeds to say there can be no merely subjectiv [that is, no merely interior or mind] experience, and adds, "The origin of all experience is a sensation from something other than the mind itself."

This last statement is a non sequitur, or something which does not legitimately follow; something, indeed, which cannot be true, if Mr. Putnam's definition of experience is true, which it directly contradicts. That definition is, "the human mind in contact with the outer world;" that is to say, mind and world begripped in a dynamic unity with each other. If so, it cannot be true that the origin of experience is either from the mind, merely subjectiv experience, or from the world, merely objectiv experience, either taken alone. It is from the begrip itself, from the dynamic unity of those two, and not from either as an independent entity. Mr. Putnam rightly says there can be no merely subjectiv experience. It is for the same reason just as true that there can be no merely objectiv experience, which nevertheless he affirms. Let him abide by his definition of experience, with all its logical consequences, and he will cease at once to look to the outer world as in any special or exclusiv sense the origin of knowledge. What he says is like saying that John is derived from the sex conjunction of his father and mother, and therefore he cannot be derived from his father alone, but that therefore he is derived from his mother alone.

Let us proceed by introducing a little more precision into the use of terms and into views of their united meaning. Mr. Putnam says again the starting-point of human knowledge is a material sensation. This, again, cannot be true. In the first place there is no such thing as a material sensation. All sensation is a mental phenomenon; but dropping out the word material, he affirms that the "starting-point of human knowledge is sensation." But the second paragraph after he says, "Sensation and Perception, then, are the origin of knowledge." In the next paragraph still he says, "From this point we reason forward to the accumulated knowledge of the race."

Where, I ask now, did this reason-element come in? Was it present in the sensation? or in the perception? or in both of them? If so, it must be added as a third something in this schedule of the origin of knowledge. If not, should it not be ruled out along with Inspiration, Revelation, Intuition, Metaphysics, etc.? We must hav no surreptitious interpolations hereabout. Reason must be accounted for from the start, or it must be drummed out of the regiment; and what sort of a system of knowledge must that be from which reason has been totally ousted? If, on the contrary, we admit it as legitimately in from the first, then Mr. Putnam has, within the compass of the four opening paragraphs of his statement of views, given us no less than three different, and fundamentally different, accounts of the origin of knowledge. First, it is Sensation alone; second, it is Sensation and Perception; third, it is Sensation, and Perception, and Reason. All the theories in existence diverge from just these differences of views. Which one of the three is, then, Mr. Putnam's own distinctiv view? or will he, which he might do appropriately, style himself a Naturismal Universologist, striving, somewhat blindly, to cover the whole ground and work a reconciliation of all views? On the whole, he seems rather to prefer to fall back upon Sensation alone as his favorit idea.

Having affirmed Sensation, he then asks, "What does this Sensation do?" and answers, "It makes the mind acquainted with objects — that is, perceives them, and with them their relations." Now this is precisely what Sensation does not and cannot do. It, on the contrary, only makes the mind aware of its own states. Half-conscious, somehow, of this fact, Mr. Putnam hastens to add: "That is [as if he were merely saying the same thing in other words], we perceive them and with them their relations." But in this addition is a new and an exactly opposit idea. Perception is not Sensation, is wholly unlike Sensation, is in fact the antithet or standing opposit of Sensation. How and when, therefore, does Perception itself come in? what does it really mean? and how is it joined on to that Sensation which was first taken as an adequate account of the whole matter? Still further, what are these relations which are now dragged in without being accounted for, and which are another new factor in this growing complexity? Where are they brought from, and what do they signify? He says that "we perceive them." Did they then exist ready-made? And were they lodged in the outer, objectiv world, or in the inner, subjectiv mind? Or did the mind create them out of its own entrails, and then look at its own product? There are several things here that will need to be thought of.

But here let me, too, venture upon definitions. It is always a dangerous matter unless one is an expert.

Sensation is the consciousness in the mind of those of its own states, which through perception it refers for their cause or suggestion to the outer world.

Perception is that mental state by and through which the mind refers Sensation to the outer world, and by and through which it therefore cognizes the existence of that outer world.

Reason is the begrip or dynanic unity of Perception and Sensation, in which they are both involved in a Ratio, or proper proportion.

Relations I will advert to farther on.

In respect to Sensation and Perception it may be well that I should fortify myself with some quotations from authorities. In respect to Reason my definition is so distinctiv, so Universological, that I could hardly hope to find it sustained by writers of any of the preliminary schools.

Sir William Hamilton (Reid's works, note B) says of Sensation: "It was limited first in the Cartesian school, and thereafter in that of Reid, to the Subjectiv phases of our sensitiv cognition." He adds: "Sensation proper is not purely a passiv state, but implies a certain amount of mental activity. It may be described on the psychological side as resulting directly from the attention which the mind givs to its own organism." Coleridge ("Church and State," quoted by Thompson, "Outlines of Laws of Thought," p. 104) says: "A conscious presentation, if it refers exclusivly to the subject, as a modification of our own being, is Sensation. The same, if it refers to an object, is perception." Thurot ("De l'Entendement," etc., tom. 1, p. 43) says: "To Sensation I owe all the knowledge I hav of my existence as a sentient being; to Perception, a certainty not less absolute that there are other beings besides me." Fleming ("Vocabulary of Philosophy"): "Sensation perfectly expresses that change in the state of the mind which is produced by an impression upon an organ of sense (of which change we can conceive the mind to be conscious, without any knowledge of external objects); Perception, on the other hand, expresses the knowledge or the intimations we obtain, by means of our sensation, concerning the qualities of matter; and consequently involves, in every instance, the notion of externality or outness, which it is necessary to exclude in order to seize the precise import of the word Sensation."

Perception is limited to the apprehension of external sense-objects alone. This limitation was first imposed by Reid and adopted by Kant.

In fine, then, as to the origin of knowledge, there is still another remarkable doubleness begripped, and which nothing short of Universology resolves. We may if we choose begin with Sensation and Perception, as the two abstract elements or factors of Reason, in which they are then synthetically combined (though I must notify Mr. Putnam that this is the metaphysical order); or we may in the inverse or physicoid order assume Reason as the one sole root of the tree of knowledge, and proceed thence analytically to resolve them into the two elements or factors of Reason, which are Sensation and Perception.

Perception refers, infers, confers, and so establishes our recognition of relations—which are connections between ideas, which are items or particulars within the totality of rational consciousness. These relations are three-fold (strictly four-fold). 1. The mind itself, by its own act, refers the sensations taking place in itself to an outer source or object, as having acted on the mind and produced the Sensation. Herein the mind contributes from itself two new elements of knowledge: (1) Its own inference of the existence of an outer world, which is all that we know or can know of the outer world, if the doctrin of Intuition be excluded. (2) The mind infers, and so institutes, as another factor of knowledge, the idea of cause, or causation, assigning still by its own act to the outer world, object, or thing, the causal function in the production of the Sensation, which it then regards as an effect from that outer cause. So we hav the first and fundamental or governing one of all relations established, which is that of Causation, or cause and effect. 2. The mind perceives other relations, not now as between the outer thing and the inner mind (nor the inverse of this, as when the mind acts outwardly upon the outer world through the will); but as between thing and thing without, objectiv relations; and, 3, as between sense impressions whatsoever and other such, within or in the mind itself. Hence there is a field for objectiv scientific classification, and another field for subjectiv scientific classification, which two, as Universology for the first time demonstrates, are exact counterparts, or in analogical repetition with each other.

Now all that I hav hitherto shown by my own reasonings and by quotations is in direct opposition to the popular ideas of common knowledge which spontaneously assign Sensation to the outer world, and Perception, if any distinction is made, to the inner; and these popular ideas are those which ordinary Positivism and Mr. Putnam along take up as if ultimate, and propound as if scientific, while yet he says to us that this common knowledge is not science! These first-blush impressions of the origin of knowledge are, then, what we Universologists would call Naturismal views (not scientismal). They are precisely like our first-blush, or Naturismal, impressions of the processes of nature, when we say, in our simple ignorance of any other thought, that "the sun rises," or "the sun sets." Then the astronomer comes along and says and shows (a Terminal Conversion into Opposits) that it is just the other way—the sun remains stationary, and the earth's disk sinks and rises. So Mr. Putnam's view undergoes a Terminal Conversion into Opposits—is turned topsy-turvy—by thorough logical analysis; that, so far from there being "no merely subjectiv experience," Sensation itself, to which he refers everything, and which he calls "material," and has as a "material" starting-point, as he imagins, is nothing but a mere subjectiv experience (except in so far as he is saved in his position by the Universological principle of Inexpugnability of Prime Elements) of which as yet he probably knows nothing, or not enough to use it.

But is the starting-point of knowledge sensation at all in any sense? Yes, historically, or as respects the origin of our experience in time, it is so; but primarily in this sense it is in reality, as has been shown, purely subjectiv (or of the mind itself). The mind's inference in Perception (which is the logical factor in the origin of knowledge) refers, on the contrary, the cause of the Sensation to the outer world. And thus it comes to happen that, to the common unphilosophical appreciation, Sensation identifies itself with the outer world, and hence also the phrase of common knowledge, "Material Sensation."

Thus it is that in the popular idea, which even science cannot ignore, Sensation is objectiv, Materialistic; realistic, fact-giving, qualitativ, concrete, and hence Naturismal; while Perception, inference, discursiv mentation (the first to giv us any real notion of an outer world), is then inversely assigned to the Mind itself, and regarded as Subjectiv, logical, idealistic, law-giving, quantitativ, abstract, and hence Scientismal. The popular view, an inversion of the hard facts shown by analysis, is nevertheless so radically grounded in our ordinary beliefs that Universologists accept it for ordinary purposes—precisely as the wisest astronomer, after all his better knowledge, comes back and joins the popular throng and talks of "sunrise" and "sunset" the same as other people. This is what we denominate technically Ulterior Quasi-Reconversion. This it is which brings us finally on high, artismal ground, into harmony alike with the unlearned world and with ordinary Positivists, authorizing the claim, however, that we are more positiv than the Positivists themselvs—inasmuch as from the primitiv naturismal simplicity we hav undergone, first, a thorough Terminal Conversion into Opposits, plunging us into the extremest logical and metaphysical analysis; and then an Ulterior Quasi-Reconversion, bringing us out upon the popular platform, drenched merely with the lingering results of our metaphysical baptism. It is this ultimate condition, and the compound begrip of all these three conditions in one, the Tri-Unismal resultant condition, which is meant by the philosophy of Integralism. Positivism means, on the other hand, observational generalization of the naturismal, primitiv, or simplistic type, which has never passed through the stage of analytical investigation. Comte said, perhaps boasted, that he had never read a work on metaphysics in his life. Here, then, commence both the real difference and the reconciliation between Universologists and a certain now prevalent imperfect Positivism affecting the definition and understanding of science, both accepting the popular basis, as I hav said. The Positivist of the hour—not Comte nor Spencer, the great leaders—givs the chief emphasis to the natural sciences, and would, if he could, restrict the use of the term science to that group; while it is the doctrin of Comte, who makes mathematics the fundamental science, and of Spencer, who affirms that quantitativ science is higher in rank and farther on than qualitativ science, and, finally and especially, of Universology, which takes up and givs a new and remarkable emphasis to this abstract point of view, and plunges, as I hav said, into the depths of logical and analogical analysis for a new factor of basis, that the emphasis belongs to the more especially scientific element which, it affirms, is that portion of knowledge which rests mainly on Perception and Inference, and thence upon Reason.

The first of these views is Naturism; the second is Scientism; and their begrip and ultimate reconciliation and harmony will be Artism in this behalf; while yet from the Universological point of view Naturismology (begotten mainly of Sensation) is a lower and subordinate department of the whole edifice of science; and Scientismology (begotten mainly of Perception) is a higher and superordinate branch; both, however, being legitimate and alike important departments—the question being one merely of order and emphasis. Abstract Science being logical, mathematical, and analogical, is now, from this point of view, about to come forward and assume a new and unthought-of importance and predominance—especially in the third one of these three sub-orders of abstraction (analogic).

I hav also mentioned a third and new element—that of Reason. Then what is Reason in this connection? What is it in every and all connections? It is, as said above, a third thing superadded to sensation and perception, but only as water is a third thing—a compound resultant from Hydrogen and Oxygen. It is the Artistic element, the finality, the completion, adaptation, keeping the just-enough or the reasonable quantity of the whole and the parts; fitness for the accomplishment of the end of being—the Reasonable amount of everything. Reason is a ratio, a due proportion, a suitage of the ingredients to the dose and of the dose to the case; and the begrip, in this case, of Sensation and Perception as its two elements, factors, or constituents.

And this is perhaps as much as is needed for the present dose.

Will Mr. Putnam hav the kindness to furnish me, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, a definition of Metaphysics, to the logic of which he will be willing to adhere? He informs us that Metaphysics is hereafter to be ruled out of science, under that name. Huxley says that Comte called everything which he didn't like Metaphysics. I hope that is not Mr. Putnam's meaning of the term. STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

An Inquiry About Mr. Cumberland.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As you are devoting a good deal of space to the discussion of Spiritualism, I would like to hav a little information, from some one that knows, about Mr. Stuart Cumberland, the so-called mind-reader and exposer of mediums' tricks. He has been lecturing in Canada lately, and gave two exhibitions in our city, which were warmly indorsed by the clergy and all the high-toned pious people. He is sweeping in his denunciation of Spiritualism, which he calls a pestilence and a curse to the cause of religion; and mediums all, without exception, are but tricksters. I would like to know Mr. Cumberland's religious views, and if any of your readers is possessed of accurate information, would like to hear it. A great deal is being said about the liberality of Spiritualists versus the illiberality of Agnostics. I giv a recent experience of my own. We were getting up a lecture by Mr. Watts about a month ago, and asked several Spiritualists to aid us (as we had aided them to bring Slade here last summer), and three of them refused, because they said he (Watts) was an Atheist, and they would not encourage Atheism. That is how much Liberality most of the Spiritualists round here hav. If Mr. Cumberland is an Agnostic he ought not to truckle to the preachers as he does, but perhaps he understands the secret of full houses is to be under their patronage. JOS. TEMPLETON.

A Pious Relic.

HOW THE CHRISTIANS OF "YE OLDEN TIMES" TREATED THEIR FELLOW-MEN WHO BROKE THE SABBATH.

From the Boston Herald.

The difference between the Sunday of 1880 and the Sabbath of 1798 in Massachusetts is greater than most people realize. Everybody knows, as a matter of fact, that the laws concerning travel on the Lord's day were, at the beginning of this century, of extraordinary severity, and, moreover, that they were strictly enforced, which is more than can be said of certain ancient statutes which still remain nominally in force in this state. But the theoretical knowledge of the thing is far from being a practical realization of it. The hundreds of well-to-do Bostonians who go out behind their trotters for a little ride on the mill-dam road of a Sunday afternoon, and the thousands who take an airing on the open horse-cars, without a twinge of conscience, cannot fully realize that eighty years ago men were arrested and fined for driving out on the Sabbath day in this commonwealth. A gentleman of this city whose ancestral home is in Wrentham, recently found among a lot of old rubbish in his attic a diminutiv note-book, bound in coarse brown paper covers, on the outside of which was inscribed, in an awkward handwriting, "A Book for Transgressors on the Sabbath." Investigation revealed the fact that it was the private note-book of a tithingman of Wrentham, Deacon Benjamin Day, in 1798. The entries were all in reference to various cases of Sabbath-breaking, with the names of witnesses, and occasionally the record of the result of trials. The names are all old Wrentham names, and there is no doubt of the genuin character of this literary curiosity. The first memorandum appears to be a condensed digest of the legal provisions for cases of breach of the Sabbath, entered for the guidance of the zealous deacon, who had probably just become a tithingman. It is as follows, verbatim:

"Sabbath, June, 10, 1798. Behave Audely or indecently 40s nor less 5s. Willful interrupt or Disturb s10 or 20s and to Demand of all such Persons the Cause thereof—together with their Homes and Plases of abode—and if any person shall refuse to giv answer—or shall giv a fals answer to such Demand he shall pay a fine £5 nor less than s20."

It appears that the new official found occasion to exercise his authority the very next Sunday, for the next entry is as follows:

"Sabbath June 17 James Curry of Providence coachman refused his Christian name.

Curry, Barker, Munson } Boston

Each refused to giv their Christian Names when requested in presence of Calvin Fisher."

It was a grievous case, but there is no record of fines or any other punishment. The following Sunday, June 24th, there was no trouble; the date alone is recorded. But a week later there was a bold infraction of the law which must hav been duly punished:

"Sabbath July 2 one Samuel Jones of Lime bound to Bridwater he said——"

Then follows the appalling record of the misdeeds of that immortal rascal, John Smith:

"Sabbath July 9 one John Smith of Walpole inholder Drove his Coach on Lord day and Refused to Stop or giv any accompte of his Home or business—I then entered a complaint to Jabez Fisher Esquire—unnecessary witness Dea Blake Mr Shaw——"

It is distressing to imagin the humiliating tableau formed by the tithingman, alternately threatening and beseeching the malefactor to stop and giv an account of himself, while the hardened Smith whips up his nag and disappears down the road in a cloud of dust; but there were other kinds of law-breakers that Deacon Day had to deal with, as this memorandum shows:

"Sabbath July 15 at Noon I went up the Gallery and found a Number of young men that were full of Levity viz Bacon Ruggles & Cobb &c."

After this there was apparently a long interval of peace, during which the tithingman found no occasion to make any entries in his little book. In 1799 there were but few breaches of the Sabbath. Under the date of Feb. 3d it is recorded that "Lemuel Pain, of Foxbury [Foxboro] Drove his oxon and Sled on the Sabbath and Sayd he was under a Necessity to travel." The same excuse was offered three weeks later by "Calvin and Luther Spencer from the state of Connetticut loaded with feathers in a two hors slay bound to Boston—they say for want of money, as they had but 4-6 if they could not sel their Feathers." In June of the same year "John Whipple of Providence and two gentle-men with him, traveled in the stage," and "2 of them would giv no accompt of their Home or Business." Paul Wares witnessed this heinous deed. It is set forth that, on the 20th of September, "Abijah Hall and Joseph Porter plaid at meeting, and the witness was B. Hawes." There is but one entry for the ensuing year, 1800, and that is a particularly naif paragraph which illustrates the growing irreverence of the nineteenth century:

"Sabbath January 20 Nathan Shoreman of Bellingham in a fore wheeled Carriage Traveld—I asked him the ocation of his Travling to Day he told me it was none of my business—Witness David Fisher juner and Pegge Kallock."

An impious epoch had dawned, and the tithingman was soon to be deposed. There are but few further entries. On the next page this memorandum is written:

"Franklin January 13 1802.

"Mr. Nathans had his trial before Pettiah Fisher Esq.

"Was fined for breach of Sabbath £34 s6. Witness and attendance &c £5 s2."

Perhaps the most astonishing entry of all is the last, which is as follows:

"About January 1802 Coll. Moses Whitney had 2 or 3 Balls in his Houss. About January 1803 he had a Dansing Chool in his Hous for about three Months, once a week—about Febr'y one ball—March 11 1803 one Ball."

What further enormities were committed by the transgressors of Wrentham on the Sabbath day hav not been recorded by Deacon Day. It is known, however, by old residents that a minister whose labors in the place extended over half a century of time (Parson Fisk) was once arrested for having visited his brother on Sunday. When the fifth and sixth regiments of Massachusetts volunteers left Boston for the front on Sunday, the 21st of April, 1861, the daily Advertiser said: "No tithingman attempted to arrest them." The tithingman had passed away, and his petty tyranny was but a memory. It is scarcely that now, except among the very oldest inhabitants.

Mr. Emary's Hopes and Misgivings.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: This paper, like its compeer the Boston Investigator, has long been celebrated for its sound common sense. The late D. M. Bennett (though estimated by the so-called learned world as not one among them) was the very embodiment of common sense. We wish to see this very essential element of sound common sense never to fade, or be lost sight of in our TRUTH SEEKER.

Lately transcendentalism, psychology, anthropomorphism, immortality, faith, and the unknowable, in all guise, mixed with learned phrases that need a dictionary at the elbow of the unhappy truth seeker as he reads his paper, leave the wretch to weep in a fog, instead of to learn. The Spiritualists are claiming the dead Bennett, and so are the Materlists. He belonged to neither. He witnessed phenomena which science at present cannot explain. He heard explanations which no man should be too ready to accept. To the Spiritualists he said, "I hope your theory is true." To the Materialists he said: "You are not infallible, and I await further developments. I don't know—I am Agnostic." Socrates battled the Sophists. Had Bennett lived, he would hav done so too. "Sound is a substance," say the Sophists of to-day. Bennett would hav said, It is a result, an effect, and not an entity. The Sophists say, "If there was no eye, there would be no light—if no ear, then no sound." Bennett would not hav indorsed such fashionable sophism. Bennett died, yet the sun shines though his eye is dim and sees it not. Should the whole race of man die out too, the sun would continue to shine. Should all living creatures cease to liv, still the thunder cloud would giv out its flash and roar, with none to see or hear, and the sun's splendor would be undiminished with no witnesses.

But returning to our topic in reference to pedantic learned phrases. We Western folks are illiterate, near in locality to the Indian, and not many grades above him in civilization. We do hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will in future aim to adapt its language to our limited capacity. In our simplicity we are equally abhorrent of slang on the one hand, and learned pedantry on the other. In cases of emergency we propose to fortify ourselvs with a Webster's unabridged, but any dictionary for obsolete phrases, newly invented or outlandish learned ones, or slang, we rely on the future good judgment of our TRUTH SEEKER to save us from fog and obscurity.

But the mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER and its readers is a higher mission than merely cultivation of good taste and good expression of language. The religions that point to the unknowable gods and demons are going fast out of date. A religion that aims to benefit here and now—a religion of humanity—is looming up in grand proportions; and let us hope that Bennett's main legacy to the world—his TRUTH SEEKER—will continue to do its full share to urge on a holy cause. MODERN estheticism appears to worry the Washington Republic, for it fears that "very soon from some pulpit in Washington we will be startled by an esthetic preacher announcing how 'Evie' ate the apple and gave also to her husband; how 'Mollie' choose the better part; how her sister 'Mattie' gave her attention to household affairs; how 'Ruthie' gleaned in the fields of Boaz, and how 'Sadie' by faith gave birth to Isaac at the age of ninety."

Christian Revision Councils.

Last week Mr. G. H. Gibson, of Loup City, asked a question which we inadvertently omitted to answer. The question was as to how many times and by what people the Bible has been revised.

The Catholic church claims to hav held a council in the year 50 to decide certain questions concerning the Bible, but there is no record of it, and it is certain that the church errs.

The Council of Nice was not strictly a revision committee, but was called by Constantine to discuss and settle the doctrins respecting the precise relations of Christ to God. This, all will admit, is a delicate matter, and needed a full council to decide. This conclave met in 325, and was composed of bishops from Europe, Asia, and Africa. There assembled 2,048 bishops, all of different sentiments and opinions. The records of the disputes of these fierce and bigoted bishops amounted to forty volumes. The conflict in the council arrived at such a pitch that the emperor, as moderator, for the purpose of preserving some degree of unity and propriety, was obliged to expel 1,730 of the exasperated and contentious bishops. The remaining 318 bishops then proceeded to determin which ones of the various writings were the inspired word of God. "This was done," says Papias, the Christian father, "by placing all the books under a communion table, and, upon the prayers of the council, the inspired books jumped upon the communion table, while the false ones remained under." But it is related that many mocked at this method, and the religious row continued as fierce as ever. Finally, most of the manuscripts submitted, after being sufficiently fought over, were rejected, whereupon Constantine affixed the seal of the empire to the remaining few, declaring such to be the "word of God."

The Council of Laodicea was held in 365. This was not an ecumenical (general) council, but its list was afterward adopted by the church, so that virtually it was an action on the general contents of the Bible. To show the great disorder, uncertainty, and chaos attending the formulation of God's unchangeable and infallible word, we quote from Keeler's "Short History of the Bible" regarding this council and the disputes following it. One of its decrees was as follows:

"Psalms composed by private men must not be read in the church, nor uncanonical books, but only canonical books of the New and Old Testaments. How many books must be read:"

"Then follows the list as we hav it to-day, except that the Old Testament has Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremiah, neither of which are now in the Bible; and the New Testament omits Revelation. Observe for the first time the tone of authority as to what must and must not be read.

"Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria (365 A. D.), was at enmity with Eusebius and the clergy of Laodicea, and when the latter declared that Revelation was not in the Bible, Athanasius immediately promulgated a list in which he declared that it was. In his canon he names, he says, the books in which alone were proclaimed the doctrin of godliness, and which no man must take from and no man add to. Yet he omitted Esther, which the church has since added, and he also inserted Baruch and the Letter of Jeremiah, which the church has since taken away. He expressly declared that Esther was not a part of the Bible, and placed it on a level with the 'Pastor of Hermas,' and a book called 'The Doctrin of the Apostles.' He closed by saying, 'Let there be no mention of apocryphal writings.' He had become tired of the controversy.

"Amphilochius, bishop of Iconium (365 A. D.), also of the Eastern church, omitted from the Old Testament Esther, but said that some thought it should be included. In his New Testament he givs the four gospels, Acts, and fourteen epistles of Paul, and adds: 'But some maintain that the epistle to the Hebrews is spurious; not speaking well, for the grace (it shows) is genuin. To proceed: What remains Of the Catholic epistles some maintain that we ought to receive seven, and others three only, one of James, and one of Peter, and one of John. . . . The Revelation of John again some reckon among (the scriptures); but still the majority say that it is spurious. This will be the most truthful canon of the inspired scriptures.' The reader cannot decide from that what he considered 'the most truthful canon,' but it shows again how entirely unsettled was the question as to what was the Bible and what was not, and the question was purely a matter of individual opinion. His closing words show that in his time no list was universally accepted.

"Gregory of Nazianzus (389 A. D.), gave as the New Testament the four gospels, the Acts, fourteen epistles of Paul, and the seven Catholic epistles, and he adds, 'In these you hav all the inspired books; if there be any book beside these, it is not among the genuin (scriptures)." He belonged to the Eastern church, and was thrusting at Revelation.

"By the 'seven Catholic Epistles' is meant always James, First Peter, Second Peter, First John, Second John, Third John and Jude. Why they are called Catholic Epistles no one knows. Any explanation of the name is an assumption.

"Epiphanius (403 A. D.) did not use Second John, Third John, Second Peter, Jude, and Revelation, all of which are in the Bible now; and in a synopsis of Scripture attributed to him the canonical list of the Old Testament omits First Chronicles, Second Chronicles, Esther, Job and Lamentations. We never hear that St. Chrysostom was liable to eternal damnation because he did not 'accept the Bible as a whole,' or 'believe that every word in the blessed book was inspired by God.' Another peculiarity of the list is that it repeats Ruth—showing how careless the fathers could be in stating what was in the sacred volume—and it inserts the Wisdom of Jesus, a book which is not now in the Bible.

"Theodore, of Mopsuestia, rejected the book of Job, the Epistle of James, Second Peter, Second John, Third John, Jude, and Revelation, all of which are now in the Bible.

"Theodoret, Bishop of Cyprus, rejected Second John, Third John, Second Peter, Jude, and Revelation.

"There are three great manuscripts of the Greek Bible extant, the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrine. They are the high courts of appeal in all cases of disputed texts, and their lists are, therefore, very important.

"The Sinaitic manuscript is one found by Tischendorf in a convent of St. Catharine, Mount Sinai, in 1859, and is probably the oldest of the New Testament codices in existence, dating back to the fourth century. It has the four gospels, the fourteen epistles of Paul, Acts, the seven Catholic epistles, Revelation, the 'Epistle of Barnabas,' and a part of the 'Shepherd of Hermas,' the last two of which are not in the Bible now.

"The Vatican manuscript, in the Vatican library at Rome, belongs to the middle of the fourth century. It ends by mutilation at Hebrews ix, 14. Up to that point it agrees substantially with the Alexandrine manuscript. What other books it may hav contained one cannot say. The Alexandrine manuscript, belonging to the fifth century, and written probably in Egypt, includes in the Old Testament Tobit Judith, Esdras, First Maccabees, Second Maccabees, Third Maccabees, Fourth Maccabees, the Wisdom of Solomon, and the Wisdom of Jesus, and in the New Testament the two 'Epistles of Clement,' none of which are now in our Bible.

"The Clermont Codex, a Latin manuscript, now in the imperial library at Paris, and dating back from the fifth to the eighth century, contains a list of the books read in the African church in the third century. Its Old Testament list omits First Chronicles, Second Chronicles, and Lamentations, which are now in the Bible, and inserts the Wisdom of Solomon, the Wisdom of Jesus, son of Sirach, Tobit, Judith, First Maccabees, Second Maccabees, and Third Maccabees, which are not in the Bible. And its New Testament list omits Phillippians, First Thessalonians, and Second Thessalonians, which are now in the Bible, and inserts the 'Shepherd of Hermas,' the 'Acts of Paul,' and the 'Revelation of Peter,' which are not now in it. The epistle which is now called to the Hebrews is there called the 'Epistle to Barnabas.'

"Hilary of Poitiers (368 A. D.) included the epistle of Jeremiah in the Old Testament, although it is not now in the Bible.

"Optatus, of Mela (370 A. D.), omitted Hebrews.

"In the early days books were read in the churches which were known at the time to be spurious, and which were not in the canon, and finally they obtained a place in the Bible. This was the case with Second Peter. Didymus, of Alexandria (392 A. D.), says that in his time that book was accounted spurious and was not in the canon, and that yet it was publicly read. To-day it is not only read in the churches but is accounted genuin and is in the Bible. And if any modern orthodox minister, believing as the ancients did, that it was spurious, desired to say so, he would not dare do it, since it would 'unsettle the faith of his congregation.' For this he would be dismissed, and the bread and butter of his wife and children would stop. It is thus that ecclesiasticism compels men to play the hypocrit, and teach as true what they believe to be false."

The third council of Carthage was held in 397. In 419 another was held at this place. Of these councils Keeler says:

"The reader would err greatly did he suppose that in these assemblies one or two hundred gentlemen sat down to discuss quietly and dignifiedly the questions which had come before them for settlement. On the contrary, many of the bishops were ignorant ruffians, and were followed by crowds of vicious supporters, who stood ready on the slightest excuse to maim and kill their opponents. The most shocking scenes that occur in the ward political conventions in the worst districts of our great cities are as nothing compared with what history tells us was common in these Christian councils."

This is corroborated by several Christian historians and Bible scholars, viz.: Dr. Philip Schaff, one of the revisers; Dean Milman, the celebrated historian, and many older writers and Christian fathers. Gregory of Nazianzus speaks of them as "assemblies of cranes and geese."

In early times the church was disturbed and rent by factions the same as at present. At a general council held at Ephesus in 431—a council marked, says Schaff, by "shameful intrigue, uncharitable lust of condemnation, and coarse violence of conduct"—both factions "came with armed escorts, as if going to battle, and were followed by great mobs of the ignorant rabble, slaves and seamen, the lower populace of Constantinople, peasants and bathmen, and hordes of women, prepared for violence; the city was patroled by troops, and Nestorius and John of Antioch had armed body guards to protect them from the violence of Cyril's party. The two bands fought in streets and much blood was shed, and at the reading of the imperial decree such a tumult arose that all the contending bishops were ordered under arrest. An effort was made immediately after to hold a council in Constantinople, and such was the fear of a riot that it had to be adjourned to the suburban district across the Bosphorus."

The violent proceedings of the council held at Ephesus in August, 449, earned for it the name of "Robber Council." The account says:

"Dioscorus presided with brutal violence. Fear of personal injury was so great that Flavian and his friends, composing one faction, hardly dared to open their lips, while Theodoret was excluded entirely. A communication, presented from Eusebius, was received by the crowd with cries of 'Let Eusebius be burnt—let him be burnt alive. As he has cut Christ in two, so let him be cut in two.' Three delegates from Rome were so terrified that they did not venture to read an epistle which they bore from Leo. One of the members preferred charges of unchastity against a bishop, but Dioscorus dismissed them with the remark, 'If you hav an accusation to make against his orthodoxy, we will receive it; but we hav not come together to pass judgment concerning unchastity.' The subject of the canon was, of course, not the only one discussed by councils. In fact, in many councils it was not referred to. Questions of belief occupied more time than it did. In this council the problem was, 'Did Christ hav two natures after the incarnation?' In this age, if a man should ask such a question, it would be regarded as the vagary of an unbalanced mind, and hardly compatible with sanity; but the men of that age found it worthy of their most earnest attention. Dioscorus and his party wished Flavian and his friends to sign a confession of faith that Christ had but one nature. Flavian refused to do so. At a given signal the doors were thrown open, a band of soldiers and an armed mob rushed in, and the terrified bishops of the Flavian party were compelled, by blows and at the point of the sword, to sign. Where before there had been two parties there was now not alone a majority, but almost unanimity. The decree having been signed, Dioscorus was no longer able to control his anger, and he struck the vanquished Flavian. Thus encouraged, a crowd of infuriated monks set upon the unfortunate bishop of Jerusalem, crying, 'Kill him! kill him!' and they beat and kicked him, and inflicted such injuries that death ensued shortly after. Dean Millman remarks significantly that this was not the last council defiled by blood."

The Council of Chalcedon, called at Nicea, in 451, was so unruly as to necessitate changing its place of meeting to where the emperor could reach it with troops and compel order.

At a council held at Constantinople in 785 the soldiery burst into the chamber and dispersed the bishops. A council at Nicea two years after, with gentle Christian amenity, called this council "a synod of fools and madmen."

The fourth Constantinople Council was held in 869. The five Lateran councils were held, respectivly, in 1123, 1139, 1179, 1215, 1512–17. The first and second of Lyons in 1245 and 1247; that of Vienna in 1311; of Constance in 1414–18; of Basle, 1431.

The Council of Trent, 1545, settled the canon for Catholics. After quoting the decree of this council, which was—

"The holy ecumenical and general council of Trent, . . . following the examples of the orthodox fathers. receives and venerates all the books of the Old and New Testaments, . . . and also traditions pertaining to faith and conduct, . . . with an equal feeling of devotion and reverence. . . . The synod thought proper, therefore, to annex to this decree a catalog of the sacred books, lest any doubt might arise concerning those that were approved of. They are the following: [Then are given the names of the books exactly as they stand in the Catholic Bible to-day; and the decree proceeds.] Now, if anyone reading over these books in all their parts, as they are usually read in the Latin Vulgate edition, does not hold them for sacred and canonical [observe "canonical," not "inspired"], and, knowing the aforesaid traditions, does industriously contemn them, let him be anathema"—

Mr. Keeler says: "That is when the doctrin originated that we must believe the Bible or be damned. More than fifteen hundred years after Jesus Christ was dead the superstition arose."

The Westminster Assembly, in 1647, settled the canon for the Protestants by making the list as we now hav it in the King James translation. It rejects the Old Testament Apocrypha, which was, however, for a long time printed with it as a kind of appendix, and many old Bibles hav it. In 1827, however, the British and Foreign Bible Society decided to no longer circulate it, and the American imitators soon followed suit.

It is impossible to name all the different translations of the Bible, for there hav been so many in existence that it is now all guess-work. The president of Hiram College, O., Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, relates that Griesbach collected one hundred and fifty thousand various readings of the New Testament alone. It was differently translated by every monk who had sufficient education to read and write. Previous to King James's translation of 1611 there were in use in the Protestant church many versions. They were founded on William Tyndale's translation. The "Great Bible" was published in 1539-41, in the reign of Henry VIII.; next was the "Bishop's Bible" of 1568 and 1572, in the reign of Elizabeth; next the authorized edition of King James I., and lastly, the revised version of the New Testament printed in our own time. The revisers are at work upon the Old Testament now.

It is thus seen that the Bible as a whole, and the New Testament in particular, is about as uncertain a book as there is in the world. The authors are mostly unknown, the date of writing is largely guess-work, the statements made are nearly all false, the claims made for them are wholly unreasonable, its alleged historical facts are improbable and impossible occurrences, and altogether it is a delusiv and deceiving book. On it has been built up a priesthood that draws millions of dollars annually from the people, without rendering an equivalent—a priesthood that depends upon cajolery and fear to hold its position. The priests hav established a theology which they hold over the ignorant as a slave-driver holds the lash over his slave—a theology repugnant to the kinder sentiments of humanity, which destroys love by sending its dearest objects to a fiendish hell, and outrages justice by giving a heaven to all the murderers and thieves who throw themselvs into Jesus's arms. Upon this most unsatisfactory book has been made to hang the future destiny of millions and millions of people—of those who were born and died before its pages ever saw the light, of those living since who never saw it or heard of it, as well as those who, knowing its history thoroughly, reject it as the crude work of unprincipled and ignorant ecclesiastics. It seems strange that God should only reveal his word and will to one nation, or set of men, and then damn every one else for not knowing what he has thus hid from them. But that he has, we learn from this book, and from those expounders of it who stand in the highways proclaiming that they, and they alone, hav God's truth to reveal. Supposing the seventeen hundred and thirty bishops, whom Constantine kicked out of the council of Nice, had remained and voted for a different set of books, where would all the believers who hav died be now—in heaven or hell? One gospel of Peter was long in dispute. Supposing it had been voted out as not inspired. What would the Catholic church be without the Petrine gospels? Paul's writings were fought over viciously. Where would the Protestants get their basic principles if Paul's friends had been in the minority? Surely the "everlasting things" of Christianity hang on a very slender thread! Why was not the "Wisdom of Jesus" continued as canonical? Nothing is so much needed for his reputation, as some evidence that he had a little wisdom. When God was inspiring authors, why did he not inspire copyists, printers, and proof readers?

Why should God's word be left by him to take its chances in ward primaries and politicians' caucuses? It was just as easy to make it plain as to giv it in the helter-skelter, hit-or-miss style in which we find it. There were also some fifty or more "gospels" forged during the first two centuries of the Christian era. All the leading Christians of the first three centuries were ignorant and unprincipled men—among them Origen, Jerome, Eusebius, Chrysostom—who did not scruple to "lie that the truth might more abound." When this is duly considered, it will at once appear why the New Testament is such an unsatisfactory work. Had the majority of these squabbling bishops voted against the received version, what is now esteemed by a portion of the civilized world to be God's word would hav been denounced as "mere fables and lying narrations." The fact is, the divinity of the so-called sacred word depends not on anything God has done or said (if he ever did or said anything, or ever did or does exist), but upon the unstable votes of wrangling and unprincipled churchmen. No book should be worshiped, and least of all one with such a spotted record as the Bible—made by men, sold by men for profit, changed by men to suit the growing and progressiv times, and finally doomed to be deprived by men of any other value than being one among the many of the world's religious books.

A Society that Needs to be Watched.

The National Reform Association is coming to the front again, making extra endeavors to propagate its Christian political principles. By a circular issued last week the public is informed of its intentions "to maintain existing Christian features in the American government, and to secure a suitable religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

A few years ago this society persuaded Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, to introduce and advocate such an amendment, and it came within two votes of passing the Senate. This defeat convinced the leaders of the movement that the time was not ripe for the scheme, and it was suffered to lapse into silence. Since then they apparently hav gained courage.

"During the present year this society has greatly enlarged its operations. Four district secretaries are devoting their whole time to the work, holding conventions, addressing churches and public meetings, circulating petitions and extending the membership of the organization. Within six months fourteen conventions and more than two hundred public meetings hav been held in behalf of this cause. The members of the association enroled during the current year and contributing to its funds are more than two thousand, and its list of officers includes many prominent and influential men. Felix R. Brunot, of Pittsburgh, is president."

Just what this clique want, and what they intend to obtain if they can, is thus boldly stated:

"Among the features of the government which this association aims to conserve are our Sabbath laws, the use of the Bible in public schools, prayer in the national and state legislatures, and the Christian law of marriage in opposition to the lax divorce legislation now so common. Some suitable change in the Constitution is deemed by this society to be indispensably necessary, since that instrument, in its present form, is extensivly regarded as an expression of the secular theory of government, and is constantly employed as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government."

Now, these changes are precisely the ones that should not be made.

The Sabbath laws are acts of religious tyranny. There is no difference in the days of the week in point of sanctity. One day in seven is needed for rest and recuperation by the toilers of the world, but their mode of spending it is no one's business but their own. If they choose to devote the day to worldly sports and pastimes, the church people hav no right to interfere. A weekly holiday is not a Christian institution. They hav no patent on it. Every law looking to its enforcement as a religious festival or day should be abrogated.

The Bible should be kept from the public schools because, in the first place, government has nothing to do with religion. The schools are for the purpose of providing the young with an education that shall enable them to get a living for themselvs and not become burdens upon the state. Secondly, because it is unfair for the religious minorities to hav the religious majorities force their peculiar tenets upon their children. All classes are taxed to support the schools, and all should hav equal rights therein and derive equal benefits therefrom. This, as we said last week, would necessitate all religions being represented or none. As the former is manifestly impracticable, the latter is the only choice. Third, the Bible is an improper book to be placed in the hands of the young without an impartial explanation of its true character. It biases the mind and weaves an influence around the young that years are insufficient to eradicate. How often do we hear the testimony of strong men of the mental suffering they underwent before emerging from the darkness of the fear of hell and dread of an infinit torturer! Religion is a matter for mature judgment to decide upon. With hundreds of thousands of people educated as Christians denying Christianity in toto, with other religions surpassing it in age, grandeur, and number of adherents, its divinity is certainly not well enough established to justify its dogmatic teaching as the whole truth. So long as there is one person whose child is in the public school who denies its truth, so long should the Bible be excluded. The rights of one are as sacred as the rights of a million.

No child should be taught that which in manhood's years he will regret having learned. No one regrets having studied mathematics, geography, history, grammar, astronomy, geology, physics, or any of the solid and beneficial studies, but there are thousands in this country alone who bitterly regret the hours spent in learning that they were sinners doomed from all eternity to hell fire. This specter clings to their minds and makes bitter every innocent joy. Only when they temporarily forget their religion can they be happy.

The Bible abounds in records of impure and improper transactions, with accounts of historical slaughters, religious massacres, bloodshed, carnage, and death. These are there as a part of God's word, and the children naturally conclude that what is good in God cannot be bad in them. This leads to cruelty and immorality on the part of the young. A child reads the stories of David and Bathsheba, of Absalom and Tamar, and at once new thoughts crowd in upon the mind, and are liable to find expression in acts. The offering of Isaac by Abraham has led to many murders. Freeman, the Pocasset murderer, traces his insanity to his conversion, and now that he sees where religion has led him, renounces it altogether. If men commit hideous acts under the influence of the Bible, certainly a child cannot be expected to escape.

The study of the Bible is confusing to the mind of a child. No one expects him to understand it. He reads in it accounts of the creation, of the sun standing still, of the earth's corners, etc., accounts which the teacher says are false, and he wonders and puzzles what it all can mean. And especially are the children of a republic misled by the Bible. It tells of the divine right of kings, when there are no kings, and supports an aristocracy which our political teachers tell us is the very bane of government of, for, and by the people. It degrades labor to a punishment, and elevates idleness into service of God. It makes this world a prison pen, with an infinit fiend for a jailer, and no escape for the majority but to a worse condition. It teaches no reliance on good works, on honest acts, on charitable impulses, on benevolent deeds. For self-reliance it substitutes abject servility, and makes faith in the improbable, implicit belief in the impossible, the only passport to heaven. Boys read of men's crimes, girls of women's degradation. Such teachings must be injurious, and proof that they are is found in Christian countries being, in spite of civilization, more immoral than pagan nations.

Prayers in our public assemblies are a farce, and the money spent on them is a shameful waste. They serve no good purpose whatever. If there be a God, they are an insult to him; if there be none, they are empty sound, or vaporous stump-speeches directed at the legislators—lobbyists' petitions in the name of God. The employment of chaplains is a sop thrown by politicians to the churches. Most legislators stay away until the prayer is delivered, and although they hav no scruples about wasting the people's money on prayers, never hear them themselvs. Of all the prayers uttered in our halls of legislation, we never heard of one doing any good—of a legislator who stole less or regarded the wishes of the people more for having heard it.

As to marriage, it is a civil contract between man and woman, with no more divinity to the ceremony than there is to the subsequent quarrels. The church insists on its being considered a sacrament, and on supervising it, because it thereby gains a strong hold on the family. It is an impudent intervention of a class who seize every opportunity to add to their perquisits and liv without work.

We hav called attention to this society that Liberals may be on their guard against it, and whenever one of these secretaries puts in an appearance be enabled to oppose him in all possible ways. George Washington said, "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion;" but it looks as though the Infidels will hav to work hard to make these words good for all time. Religion is a matter with which the state has nothing to do, and religious people must be taught to let the state alone. As long as Christians are protected equally with Infidels, common justice would seem to require them to be satisfied. They already force us to pay taxes to protect property from which we derive no benefit, and which we regard as a positiv evil, and now they want to make us fall down and worship their God according to law.

Advocating Peace.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The abusing of Spiritualists by Materialists, or Materialists by Spiritualists, is a war from which no benefit can be derived, and is destined to bring dissensions into the Liberal camp, and break the harmony which should exist. Then in discussing these all-absorbing subjects (which should be open to free discussion) let us ever be courteous in our manner, and speak with respect of those who may differ from us. I do not uphold friend Winter or any Materialist in using harsh or abusiv names toward our friends the Spiritualists, although to me Spiritualism is as much of a delusion as the old myths of Jewish theology; yet that is no reason why I should not admire and treat an honest Spiritualist with respect. We should all remember the fact that no two things in nature are exactly alike. Friend Noe brings forward the often-used argument that Winter does nothing but make assertions, and has no evidence to substantiate Materialism or disprove Spiritualism. Are you not aware, friend Noe, that all the burden of proof lies alone with your side of the question?—that Materialism is but the negativ? We may all hope for a life beyond the grave, but that is no evidence, and we as Materialists hav no belief in any hereafter, simply because we cannot become cognizant of the fact by the faculties we possess. Now how Spiritualists gain knowledge of the fact (if fact it is) that we liv again, and that this world is but preparatory to another and higher life, is beyond the comprehension of the poor benighted Materialists. Here I would ask, What means of knowledge hav you that we all liv again of which we are not in possession? You say Winter's article "is made up largely of assertions." Hav you not fallen into the same common error in your answer when he asks you what you know about the future? I read, "I can tell you, after thirty-two years of investigation at a cost of over three hundred dollars in money, I do know that friends that once lived in the grosser body, and died as it called, do still liv, and can and do communicate. This I do know, Winter, and I know it by investigation, and by hearing the facts demonstrated to me." Is not this a bare assertion when you say, "I do know?" I see no evidence or proof in what you hav said that proves a life beyond the grave. You say, "It is a demonstrated fact." So it may be to you, but to me it is not; and because you think or imagin you see beyond the dark curtain at the latter extremity of human life, do you believe all others should see the same? No, friend Noe, being demonstrated merely to your mind is no proof to myself or Winter; and if you would hav us believe you must so demonstrate it that we can understand. If a truth it should not be difficult of demonstration. Come, now, bring along your facts as you hav them, and no longer base your belief on "I do know." You say that friends that once lived and died liv again. This may all seem true to you, that you hav met your departed friends and conversed with them, but I rather believe it the fancy of your imagination. If your friends come back and hold communion with you, why do not my friends do the same? I am sure my parents, who loved me so well while on earth, and whose love I tried to reciprocate, would, if they could, come back and talk to their boy, who was but a child when they died; but not one word or sign has been revealed to me from them. So ever it is: none but Spiritualists hear from those who hav departed this life. "Ah," you will say, "we must believe before any manifestations will be made." That is just like the Christians, when they say you must hav faith and believe before you can understand the works of the Creator.

If there are spirits, and our friends we think dead still liv in another world, they would be as likely to come back and visit with old associates, although Materialist, as would the friends of the Spiritualist. If not, why? Again you say, "To say life is the result of organization is no more than any stupid dolt or ass can assert, and it won't do." Now, Brother Noe, I would like you to point me to one instance where you find life without organization; and it appears to me like silly chatter to talk of life as we understand it without. Life I believe to be a certain inherent property of matter, which, by having certain powers or forces brought to bear upon it, will be manifested, and at the same time an organization is formed. All inanimate and unorganized matter I believe capable of becoming a part of an organized, conscious, animate, and sentient living being, but no powers outside of nature and nature's laws are necessary to bring about the thing called life. By experiments we find that by bringing together certain unorganized elements which hav an affinity for each other, life is formed, and a new organization started. For instance, who believes there is life in an ovum before fecundated by the fructifying principle of the male? But the moment these two elements are brought together, conditions being natural, life commences. That is the time life enters the fœtus, and not at four and one-half months, or time of quickening, as Brother Noe believes. So it is with all animal and vegetable life. It begins the moment these two elements are brought together, favorable conditions being present.

No, we do not think life is created out of nothing; but I believe it to be the manifestation of vital operations in certain of nature's compounds, and when this compound is destroyed life is no more.

If you believe that life or spirit livs after death, and is independent of matter, has it not always lived, and are there not millions of people living in spirit-land whose bodies are not yet born, who can just as well talk and converse with us as those who hav lived and died? Would not a married lady who was desirous of offspring, but from some physical deformity could not bear children, like to converse with and perhaps sing a lullaby to a spirit child? Why cannot the spirits of friends who hav died tell us what happened while in spirit land before birth as well as after death?

Brother, if life is something independent of matter, and the organized bodies but machines through which it works, is it not true that all animal as well as vegetable life is immortal? If not, where do you draw the line of distinction between mortality and immortality?

Spiritualism has doubtless done, and is still doing, a large amount of good. It has assisted in dispelling the dark fogs of superstition, and I think it may be considered the broad stepping-stone from the foul church of Christianity to the natural and open field of Materialism. Many who are now Spiritualists were once Christians, and, their minds being so warped, they cannot make so great a change. Having held the idea that man was immortal, total annihilation seems repugnant to them, but what is there about eternal sleep that is repulsiv to us? What condition could bring us more joy than eternal rest, more happiness than eternal sleep? Are your questions answered? If not, perhaps Winter will do so, for I think him equal to the task; but as you challenge the whole Materialistic fraternity, I thought I would write a few words. As my communication has grown long, I will giv way to more trenchant pens.

Giving the Clergyman the Lie.

Under the nom de plume of "A Freethinker," Mr. Thomas Lees, in the Cleveland Sunday Sun, shows the Rev. Mr. Hildreth of that city and his brethren of the cloth up in their true light. He says:

"Rev T. F. Hildreth is reported as saying in his Sunday night sermon on 'The Certainty of Eternal Punishment, or Ingersoll's Foolishness:'

"First—'The devotees of Ingersoll you will find in the rum shops, in the brothels, and in all the dens of infamy in the land. You will find that they are those who, under the guise of honesty, overthrow public morality and decency. . .

"Second—'If every man in this city of Cleveland were a Christian, we should need no jails, no police, and there would be no crime.

"Third—'When Christ is preached, crime hides itself.'

"In answer to the first let me ask 'Who are the devotees of Ingersoll?' In one sense, probably, all Freethinkers, numbering in the United States about 8,000,000. Can any other such large class show a better record than they? Is it a fact that the rum shops, brothels, and dens of infamy, throughout the land, are peopled by this class? What proof has this 'reverend' to offer in support of this unqualified statement? If he has any, I ask him to furnish it. If he has nothing but his bare assertion, he was not justified in making it, and I refer him to Webster's definition of the intransitiv verb—Lie—which is 'to utter falsehood with intention to deceive another when he has a right to know the truth, or when morality requires a just representation.'

"In the absence of proof for his statement, I cannot but think, under this definition, that the man was guilty of the charge of lying, for the very reverse of this outrageous statement is the truth; for the poor devils who are to be found in 'rum shops,' 'brothels,' or other dens of infamy, are really offshoots of, and backsliders from, the church, as they invariably call on Jesus when jailed, and especially when about swinging off the scaffold. Nearly every crime committed is perpetrated under the idea of future forgivness, under the idea that 'Jesus will settle the bill;' while the Freethinker, or Ingersollite, stands self-reliantly and squarely by his every-day deeds, believing there is no escape from sin through atonement. He sees salvation only through right living, expecting happiness here and hereafter (if there be any) only through honest, industrious, temperate, and virtuous lives.

"Where is the criminal, especially the convicted one, who dares boldly proclaim himself a devotee of Ingersoll's? Where is the poor abandoned drunkard, where is the debased prostitute (male or female), where is the murderer, who will boldly take Ingersoll's position? I will venture to say there are more Ingersollites in the church than in the jails. Go ask the sot, the prostitute, the murderer to join you in the praises of Ingersoll, and they would tremble, and shrink from you and your 'blasphemous Bob.'

"The average criminal, fearful of his own record, relies entirely on forgiveness and salvation through Christ, and hence his life of continual sin.

"Could all sinners be brought to realize their true condition; that their salvation depended wholly on themselvs, they would perhaps pause in their terrible career.

"This doctrin of atonement is positivly an incentiv to crime that 'the certainty of eternal punishments' does not and cannot prevent, because every sinning coward hopes to shoulder his sin sometime or other before death on 'Jesus.'

"I must here tell the reverend gentleman that 'the ones that overthrow public morality and decency,' are those who are tainted with the immoral teachings of Christianity summed up in the lines:

"While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return."

"The second proposition (in substance, if all were Christians, there would be no crime) may be true in its broadest significance; but where Christ and church are cunningly used as synonyms, nothing could be farther from the truth. To the church plan of salvation is largely due the crime, and hence the necessity for police and jails; the church really offering a premium on sin and crime that is not warranted by anything Christ ever said.

"Now let us see as to the truth of the third and last proposition: 'Where Christ is preached, crime hides itself.' Christ is preached from the pulpits, therefore the monster's head ought never to be visible there. If it is, then Rev. T. F. Hildreth is again falsifying. 'Facts are stubborn things.' I shall summon the press to testify, which, though largely subsidized by the church, yet often furnishes a healthy antidote to poison so liberally dispensed by these 'reverend' gentlemen.

"In carefully computed statistics gathered from the newspapers published within the great 'intellectual belt' of this nation, the reports of the crimes of preachers from May, 1876, to May, 1882, are as follows (names, crimes, time and place can be given if desired): Total crimes brought to light and charged against the clergy, 1418 cases, 798 cases of which were crimes against women, principally for adultery (292), seduction (163), bigamy (36), rape (20); the other 620 charges being: drunkenness (52), larceny (52), deserting wife and children (44), lying (42), swindling (44), embezzlement (39), and so on through the minor crimes.

"Two years ago statistics told us there were about 700 ministers in our different state prisons. Does this 'reverend' critic know that while the average crime is two and a half per cent in the entire population of this country, the ministers furnish the calendar of crime with thirteen and a half per cent, and the ministers of the church Mr. Hildreth represents are credited with over six per cent of all the ministerial crime committed, nearly half as much as all other denominations put together, and the entire church with their 70,000 ministers furnishes over eleven per cent more than any other class of people? Does this look as though 'Where Christ is preached, crime hides its head?' Is it not a fact that they who depend on character and not Christ for their salvation stand highest in the moral scale? Unitarians, Spiritualists, and Infidels number quite 15,000,000 in this country, and no other three classes can probably be found carrying so low a percentage in the statistics of crime. More gratuitous insults were never flung into the faces of an intelligent community than this Methodist minister crowded into his sermon last Sunday.

"It comes with a very good grace from such a preacher as Mr. Hildreth to say 'Where Christ is preached, crime hides its head,' although it often may be the case until it is found out; for, recollect, the above statistics only show the discovered crimes of the preachers, which of course are but a small percentage of the total, for the minister, of all others, hides his crimes carefully, and his co-workers and parishoners often assist him to conceal them, while the common drunkard, petty thief, and other criminals are under the strictest police surveillance. In conclusion I would suggest, if eternal punishments are so certain, that this 'reverend' confine himself closer to the truth when preaching, or he may fall into the pit he is zealously digging for others."

A Heavy Curse.

From the Theosophist.

As a specimen of condensed and concentrated episcopal malice, the following anathema recently sent by the pope to various bishops with orders to be read to their parishioners, and hurled by the archbishop of Santander (Spain) against Spiritualists in general, and certain editors in his diocese especially, is truly edifying and Christian. The "accursed ones" are men whose only crime is to hav dared to proclaim their preference for civil and religious liberty over priestly domination. Matching well those famous excerpts from the bulls against Liberals issued by the late Pope Pius IX., and collated by Mr. Gladstone a few years ago, this latest inspiration claimed to be received through the Holy Ghost merits a prominent place among them. We translate it verbatim from the original, as found in the St. Petersburg Rebus, and dedicate our translation to our good friends of the society of Jesus—that meek and all-forgiving ideal of every divine and human virtue.

BULL OF EXCOMMUNICATION.

"May Almighty God and his holy saints curse the Spiritualists and their journals, with the perpetual malediction launched against the devil and his angels! May they be accursed like Judas the traitor, and Julian the apostate; and may they perish like Nero. May the Lord judge them as he judged Dathan and Abiram, and command the earth to swallow them alive. May they be crushed and swept away from the face of the earth, and all memory of them disappear for ever and ever; and may they be seized with terrible death and hurled alive, they and their progeny, into hell for damnation everlasting, so as not to leave a seed of themselvs upon the surface of the globe. May the few days that are yet in store for them be full of gall and bring on incessant disasters and unhappiness to the accursed ones. Let them suffer hunger, thirst, and nakedness, and be visited by every unclean disease and pain, through wretched poverty and misery. Accursed be every bit of their property, and every blessing and prayer, instead of benefiting, be changed for them into a curse. Let them be cursed everywhere and at every hour; cursed day and night, sleeping and waking, in eating, in drinking and during fast; cursed when they speak and when they keep silent; cursed at home and abroad; cursed on land and on water; cursed from the top of their heads down to the soles of their feet! May their eyes be blinded, their ears deaf, their tongues dumb and rooted to their palates! Cursed be every member of their family and every limb of their body! Let them be cursed from to-day and for ever! Let light be changed for them into darkness before the face of the creator, on the great day of the last judgment! May their sepulcher be that of dogs and asses! May famished wolves prey upon their corpses, and may their eternal company be that of Satan and his angels!"

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE; or, the Divorce Question. By Alfred E. Giles. Reprinted from the Banner of Light. Price, 15 cts. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

Mr. Giles is the author of several works on matters of contemporary human interest, and the present pamphlet on "Marriage and Divorce" is timely and valuable. It is a question which is bound to come before the people for solution whether or not the church and state shall continue to exercise authority in the domain of the family, and whether they shall continue to hav it in their power to say who may and who may not be divorced. The Catholic church, it is well known, sanctions divorce on no grounds whatever. With that body marriage is a sacrament, a bond indissoluble except by death. No priest of the Catholic church will solemnize the second marriage of a divorced person, even though the divorce has been obtained according to the laws of the state. In such instances the marriage is illicit, adultery is committed, and excommunication overtakes the high contracting parties. No right-thinking person agrees with the Catholic church in this regard.

State laws are more liberal, and open other avenues besides that of death by means of which those involved in unhappy marriage may find liberation—adultery, cruelty, desertion, and other offenses. But the question, we take it, which Mr. Giles raises is whether the present state laws shall hav the final word, or whether marriage shall be made compatible with human conditions; whether divorce, being wrested from the church, shall remain in the hands of the state, or whether it shall, by virtue of less stringent laws, be made more voluntary on the part of those concerned. This, we judge, is the drift which his argument takes, since it is the logical outcome of the wider freedom for which he pleads. This treatis appears to hav been called out, like Professor Westbrook's work with the same title, by the movement now on foot among the clergy of New England to so bedevil the laws of marriage and divorce as to get the family relations practically into their own hands. Mr. Giles has made an eloquent protest against this ursurpation. His pamphlet should be in the hands of every freedom-loving person of the Eastern states, and people in other parts of the country may by its perusal be forwarned and forearmed against an encroachment which might become general if it should succeed in New England. It goes without saying that Mr. Giles is a scholarly and finished writer, and handles his subject as only one who is familiar with the logic of history could. Messrs. Colby and Rich hav performed a good deed in placing "Marriage and Divorce" in its present convenient form for general distribution.

DEEP BREATHING, As a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, and of Curing Weaknesses and Affections of the Throat and Lungs, Especially Consumption. By Sophia Marquise A. Ciccolina. Illustrated. Translated from the German by Edgar S. Werner. New York: M. L. Holbrook & Co. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Price 75 cents.

Up to the present time, the author of this work informs us, voluntary deep breathing is not discussed or mentioned in any physiological work; nevertheless the importance of this method of lung and chest expansion must be clear to anyone who will giv the subject a moment's thought. In the preface, written by M. L. Holbrook, a few facts are instanced which make this plain. Mr. Holbrook says:

"Where respiration is full and vigorous, as for instance in most birds, life is energetic. Where it is feeble, as in snakes and frogs, life is torpid. Man livs in proportion as he breathes, and the activity of the child is in close relation to the strength of its lungs; so, too, is the calmness, dignity, and power of man in proportion to the depth and tranquillity of his respiration. If the lungs are strong and activ, there is courage and boldness. If feeble, there is cowardice and debility. To be out of spirits is to be out of breath. When eager and full of enterprise, we consume large quantities of air; when weary, we yawn; when frightened, we are breathless and aghast. However well we feed ourselvs, if we do not breathe enough, we do not take on good conditions, but become feverish and irritable."

The investigations of Sophia Marquise A. Ciccolina regarding deep breathing were originally published in the Dutch language. She was induced to write upon this subject from the fact that after three months' study in a celebrated conservatory of music she "lost her voice," that is, was unable to use it for singing, which she had formerly been able to do with more than ordinary facility. The most celebrated singing-teachers of Paris, whom she consulted, advised her to "rest; don't sing for awhile." After three years of resting, this advice lost its force with her. But she persevered in seeking her lost voice, and at last succeeded in finding it under the tuition of the great Wartel. Here she was unknowingly habituated to deep breathing, with the happy result alluded to. She also by practicing deep inhalation and holding the air recovered from a sickness which the physicians called "a nervous asthmatic affection of the respiratory organs," and has since had the happiness of relieving a number of asthmatic persons by the use of these respiratory gymnastics. She believed she should not withhold from mankind this great secret of art, and turned to physicians, and succeeded in imparting her ideas to many of that class, all of whom expressed themselvs as greatly interested; but as none would take up the pen in the good cause, she determined to use her own. After giving a short treatis on the uses for which the lungs were evidently designed by nature, and presenting a few just strictures upon the ways in which those organs hav been neglected and abused, the author proceeds to show how natural deep breathing can be learned, and illustrates it by means of cuts. This method is briefly as follows:

"To learn deep breathing, be as passiv as possible; that is, assume a position in which all the voluntary motor muscles are inactiv. Lie flat on the back, perfectly horizontal, without even an elevation of the head. Shut the mouth and draw the air in through the channel provided by nature—the nose. As a result of bad habits, most persons will raise the upper ribs. Yet this expansion will soon yield to a movement of the lower ribs, and this again will gradually cease by continued practice, as will every distension of the ribs. All these faulty movements will be superseded by a bulging out of the abdomen, whose outward swelling will be proportioned to the amount of air inhaled."

This style of breathing, it is claimed, is soon mastered by children and men with most gratifying results; but women who are victims of false training and vicious custom will require a longer time. Deep breathing, we are warned, should not be joined with other bodily movements. When, as in walking, we contract the abdominal muscles for the locomotion of the body, we should not strive to force them into the relaxation necessary for deep breathing. Pupils of singing are advised to always breathe through the nose.

The method of breathing attempted to be introduced is that of complete abdominal respiration in which the ribs remain perfectly motionless. That this can be accomplished to the great benefit of those suffering lung and throat affections is the author's firm conviction.

The publishers hav added to the work in question an appendix of interesting facts concerning the air—ventilation, draughts, etc.—subjects to which a proper amount of care and attention is not generally given. Those things which we obtain with the least effort we are apt to regard too cheaply; and as we get air without money and without price, we grow careless as to the quality and quantity of that which we take into our lungs.

The experiments and methods of relief mentioned are those which everyone can try. They are not attended with expense, danger, or drugs. Singers with failing voices, or persons with affections of the respiratory organs, might find much information of value to them in this little work on "Deep Breathing."

TRUTH: A Poem in Three Parts. By Edwin N. Kingsley, "Truth Finder." 40 pp. Price 25 cents. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

Mr. Kingsley has in the little book before us attempted to answer the question, as he states it in rhyme:

"If orthodox religion you despise,
What will you giv us in the place of lies?"

The answer is simple enough, and may be given in one word—Truth. But the author goes on to elaborate, showing both what the falsehoods are which he would displace, and what the truths are which he would substitute for them. The former he finds in the Bible; the latter, in the schools of nature, science, and philosophy. Mr. Kingsley is a Spiritualist, and believes that the facts of evolution support the theory of a future life. Beyond the grave, he holds, there are

"Lands of immortals and unfading flowers,
Ambrosial fruits and aromatic bowers;
Celestial lands of everlasting love,
Delightful 'mansions' in bright worlds above,
Where perfect beings, beautiful as light,
Fill human spirits with supreme delight,
And shining rivers, seas as smooth as glass,
Reflect the lovely beings as they pass."

The imagery of this is beautiful, the thought comforting, the poetry excellent. It is not an isolated poetic gem—the book is full of them. Take the author's thoughts on death:

"When dying strife obstructs the failing breath,
When the heart sickens, and each pulse is death,
Truth will sustain the moral and the just,
Grace their last moments with a perfect trust;
And when the storms of mortal life are o'er,
These join the millions who hav gone before.
Truth givs this hope, this precious, soothing balm,
For storms of life an everlasting calm."

Again, on the immutability of truth, we hav the following, among many other verses of equal merit:

"Truth changes not, like all of earthly things;
Death lays his cold and icy hand on kings,
And in the dust are undistinguished laid
The crown and scepter with the humble spade.
When states and nations, kings and kingdoms, fall,
Eternal truth will triumph over all.
And this is truth, the laws of matter will Man's highest aspirations all fulfil."

A picture of the Jewish Jehovah, as described in the Bible, and the author's accompanying remarks are interesting features of the book. A very amusing scene at a class-meeting is also given with fine effect.

"The Grave," a short prose essay with which Mr. Kingsley closes, is worthy of notice, and is full of agreeable thoughts. The versatility of the author enables him to write prose or poetry equally well, though perhaps throughout the poet gets the better of the philosopher. "The Grave" is intended as a tribute to the late D. M. Bennett, of whom he says, with the rest of us,

"Upon our shoulders may his mantle fall
To giv the precious, perfect truth to all."

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD. A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Deathbed of Thomas Paine. Did Bishop Fenwick Write It? Price, 5 cents. Published and for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

This refutation of the slanders concerning the last hours of the great Paine was originally published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 7, 1883. It was made necessary by the contemporaneous circulation by the religious press of a letter purporting to hav been written by Bishop Fenwick, of Boston, who died in August, 1846. The letter contains intrinsic evidence of forgery. Not alone are its statements contradictory of all truthful testimony regarding the scene which it was alleged to hav been written to describe, but its authorship is likewise open to doubt. Whether the letter itself is genuin or apocryphal, its statements are clearly untruthful, as the author of the pamphlet in question has fully shown.

The price at which "A Roman Catholic Canard" will be sold is five cents, a sum which will merely suffice to cover the expense of mailing. It is printed in an attractiv form and in large type. The importance of the question involved, and the wide prevalence which incorrect information upon the subject has attained, make it desirable that this pamphlet should hav a wide circulation. Hence the nominal price at which it is offered. Send for it, read it, and pass it along.

BOOK NOTES.

OUR genial friend Putnam is getting a good many opinions—good, bad, and indifferent—of his "Golden Throne." This is the Chenango Tribune's, a paper published at Smyrna, N. Y.:

"We lately received from THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York, the book "Golden Throne." It is tastily bound in cloth, contains over 150 double-column pages, printed on extra heavy paper, and is sent postpaid for only one dollar. The author, Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, of New York, is a writer of marked ability and is the author of several other books. The story is well told, and the numerous characters are made to perform their parts to a reality. The story originates in the quaint little mining town, Golden Throne, and those who go to make up the little town's history are placed before the reader throughout. It illustrates the rapid growth of mining towns. It contains beautiful panoramas in the descriptiv scenes of nature, which, as the writer draws them before the eye of the reader, seem in every way real. Tall mountains, rushing torrents, bleak hills, barren rocks, luxuriant foliage, all are brought up to the mind's eye. There is a graphic scene of an attempted lynching, and finally a trial; the jury of rough miners, the accused, the eloquent appeal for the innocent, and the acquittal. Next comes the infuriated and rum-soaked rabble, who, not satisfied with the verdict of the jury, are bent on lynching the accused; the escape to 'Frisco of him who proves to be the heroin of the story. There are characters expressing science, villainy under the guise of religion, etc., etc. There is a daring adventure in mid-ocean; a terrible storm and shipwreck; safety from being wrecked on an island; the rescue and return home; a terrible fire, etc., a description of which would fill a column. The book, as we hav stated, is only one dollar, and the lesson it teaches and the knowledge it promotes are worth a thousand. It is an honor to any library. Send for it."

This is the Banner of Light's:

"The story opens in a mining region, once the scene of great activity and source of vast fortunes, but at this time deserted by the thousands who once swarmed there, and occupied but by few adventurous men, who, dissatisfied with amenities of civilized life, fraternize with the almost lawless freedom it givs them. Many of the events the author narrates are seemingly improbable, but we judge his purpose to be not so much to tell a story as to impress certain truths upon the minds of his readers concerning the hypocrisy attendant upon the popular religions and religionists of our times, and to portray what he terms 'the poetry and romance that lie in the scientific conception of the universe.' The book is purely Materialistic, the spirit of Ingersoll imbuing it; one of its best passages being a pen-and-ink portrait of the great iconoclast before a public audience."

NOTICING Caleb Weeks's "Songs of the Morning," the latter paper says:

"A hymn-book in two volumes is something of a curiosity; but here we hav it, half of it at least; this, the first volume, containing upward of two hundred original hymns, songs, and doxologies expressiv of Spiritual truths and Liberal views, including responses to popular old hymns 'which were,' says the author, 'formerly sung with religious fervor, and some of Moody and Sankey's, resurrected with a changed body and a new, live soul of truth and rational philosophy.' Mr. Weeks is well known as a public singer among the Liberals and others."

"Jugged" According to His Merits.

"TONGANOXIE, KANSAS, April 18.—Rev. J, Comstock, Second Advent preacher, was arrested to-day, charged with rape of a thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. Anderson, of Reno township. At the preliminary hearing he was committed for trial and sent to the county jail at Leavenworth."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In aid of the good work; and against all manner of imposition, more particularly that practiced by the class of impostors termed preachers, shepherds, leading too many lambs as above, and others more willingly, I send you this paragraph to help swell the already full to overflowing list of like acts. D. D. LAKE.

Letters from Friends.

STOCKHOLM, May 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, $1 50 for the fourth volume of the Round-the-World trip, and the balance for the Bennett Monument Fund. I will giv $5 if there will be a Bennett Hall erected, as proposed.

Yours truly, E. PETERSON.

CHESTERFIELD, May 8, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed money for a three months' trial subscriber. Hoping the grand old TRUTH SEEKER may double its circulation every year until all shall feel and enjoy its saving influence, we all join our heartfelt sorrow with THE TRUTH SEEKER family on account of the loss of our loved D. M. Bennett. KITTIE E. GLASS.

MOTOR, April 27, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I notice by the tab on my paper that my time has expired, and I cannot think of reading as good a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER without knowing it is paid for. Inclosed please find $3 00—$2.50 on my subscription, 25 cts. for "Answers to Christian Questions," and 25 cts, for anything else you may please to send me.

Yours, H. WADE.

BANGOR, May 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1.00 to hav your paper continued. I like it the best of any paper I hav ever taken, and am anxious for its arrival every week. I will try and get you a few more subscribers, as some of my neighbors are as well pleased with it as myself, as any man of common sense that reads it cannot fail to see its intrinsic excellency. DR. W. G. WILD.

MULDOON, April 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on my paper that my subscription expired the first of April. Please find inclosed $3 -$2 to square my book account, and $1 for the Monument Fund. I will leave this part of the country soon on a prospecting tour for gold or silver. You will hear from me again if the Indians don't scalp me. Giv my sympathy to Mrs. Bennett. GEORGE WINGERT.

DRIFTWOOD, May 3, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: I inclose $2, being $1 each from Walter Scott and James Coyle in favor of the monument toward D. M. Bennett. There is no one in the town who takes the paper but myself. Hoping that the monument movement will be a success, and that it may stand in commemoration of your husband for years and years, showing the good deeds of the honored dead, I am Very respectfully, WALTER SCOTT.

HAMBURG, May 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1 for two trial subscriptions. It takes a good deal of talking to get subscribers here. I hav lent my TRUTH SEEKER to readers, and tried to get subscribers, for I think it is the best paper to spread Freethought. I hav been reading it for seven years, with a number of other papers, but find yours the best, and I would rather giv up all the rest than giv up THE TRUTH SEEKER.

JACOB NUESSLE.

LIVERPOOL, April 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5.00 for the following purposes: $2.00 for Father Hacker, of Berlin; $1.00 to Man, and the rest for my account.

I wish to giv something for the Monumental Fund to commemorate our friend Bennett. I would like to see something in the shape of a hall or building for some useful purpose, and propose to contribute some fifty or perhaps one hundred dollars when the friends get ready to move in the matter.

Yours respectfully, C. S. STERLING.

HONOLULU, HAWIIAN ISLANDS, May 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Those who would redeem society by giving woman the right of suffrage get the cart before the horse. It is well known that there is a very much larger number of women than men in America whose souls are wound up in orthodoxy, who are groping in the darkness of superstition. Now, in my humble opinion, to giv her equal political privileges with man, while in her present condition, would result in a political calamity, for the great majority of women realize no higher responsibility than allegiance to what their pastor, priest, or Bible tells them, and to their phantom god beyond the clouds. It is highly probable "that female suffrage would elect a bishop for a president, fill Congress with preachers, and put God and Jesus Christ into the Constitution." The proper course to be pursued "to free woman from wasting her energies on phantoms is" to educate her in Freethought literature. Let us all labor faithfully in this grand work, and I trust it will be but a few years ere woman will become free, in a great degree, from this nightmare of superstition. When she becomes thus free, and not till then, should the responsibility of suffrage be conferred upon her. LYMAN SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, May 6, 283.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed you will find my subscription for one year, also $1 to be placed to the Monument Fund. I am very much obliged to you for kindly continuing to send me the paper, notwithstanding my arrearage. I am greatly attached to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and one would hardly suppose but that our noble captain. D. M. Bennett, was still at the helm. I think Mr. Macdonald is doing splendidly, and hope he won't let the Spiritualists steal away our noble martyr Bennett from us entirely. Keep up our Materialistic flag inscribed "The Truth Seeker" proudly floating from our mainmast, and all will be well. M. W. ROWE.

LEWISTON, May 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The article on Sabbath, Sunday, etc., is exceedingly interesting, with an irresistible point. The Sabbath certainly is Saturday. I should like to see this article in pamphlet. I will call your attention to a brief dissertation I hav written on the "Number Seven," which will probably appear in Der Erz Druide for May and June. It treats critically on the pagan Saturday and Sunday. In regard to the keeping of Sabbath, i. e., Saturday, the pagan theory was not much different from the Jewish, but the pagans neglected its close observance. I paid more attention to the day of the feasts and games and rejoicing—Sunday. CORAVAR AMERIG.

NEWBURYPORT, May 5, 1883.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: I see to my shame I am sadly behind. I inclose $5 to make up.

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

[Mr. Parton is never behind. If we should send THE TRUTH SEEKER to him forever it could not repay the many acts of kindness he has performed in its behalf. He has been a grand friend to the paper, and his best words came at a time when it sorely needed friends. His name is a tower of strength to the cause of mental freedom and his utterances glow with the light of sincere honesty. He sees the issues and is brave enough at all times to meet them. Through all of orthodoxy's mud he divines her purposes and thwarts them with the shining sword of truth.—ED. T. S.]

SACRAMENTO, May 2, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I hav delayed writing you for a month or so, thinking I should receive the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" before this, but hav not seen it yet. I presume I shall, however, before long.

You will please find inclosed $20, which please place to my credit. I find no other Liberal paper that begins to compare with THE TRUTH SEEKER, so you may consider me a life subscriber. I hope the monument for Brother Bennett will be started soon and completed, The longer it is delayed the harder it will be to accomplish the object of this noble undertaking. I would like to liv long enough to see a Bennett Hall built in New York city and dedicated to D. M. Bennett, and a portion of it set apart for THE TRUTH SEEKER office, etc. If such a thing could be accomplished, I will agree to giv from one to five hundred dollars toward it, although I should never expect to see it in my lifetime should it be built, as I am now sixty-nine years old.

I shall send to you from time to time for books. For that reason I thought I would like to hav a small fund in your hands so I will not hav to send the money every time I want a book.

Yours truly, N. D. GOODELL.

ANN ARBOR, April 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I am thus far on my way home from the Spiritualistic and Liberal convention held at Flint. This was the third annual convention of that class of thinkers since they became a legalized body. It was held a little out of the regular order of time contemplated by their constitution, in consequence of the informal proceedings of some of the officers of the association in not calling the convention at the regular and stated time as designated in their by-laws.

With the exceptions of one or two little interruptions from the secretary while a member was speaking, the convention throughout was a very harmonious and, I trust, profitable one, and arrangements for further work were considered.

As an officer of the association had been advertising and circulating different Spiritual papers in the convention and to those in attendance—among which was that vile and slanderous one, the R.-P. Journal—your humble correspondent took it upon himself to present the claims of THE TRUTH SEEKER, whose late proprietor and editor had been one of the chief advocates of free speech, free press, and free mails, and whose body now lies moldering in the grave because of his faithfulness in standing up against these church encroachments on our liberties; and because of his manly course in this direction, the Christian church, through its minions in the government, arrayed itself against him, and through spite and malice had him incarcerated in a felon's prison; and while here, bound hand and foot, as it were, this same slanderous sheet lent its pages to the Christian church to help them, if possible, to blot out THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its editor. How sad is this story!—and this sheet all the while pretending to be Spiritual and Liberal! O Shame, where is thy blush?

And yet, when I see this sheet in the families of our Spiritual and Liberal friends, this, too, is sad; but then I conclude that they are not familiar with the history of that paper and its two last editors and that when they become better informed in regard to its character, they will not care to encourage its continuance until it brings forward fruits meet for repentance.

Inclosed I send you the names, with the money, for five new subscribers. I remain, as ever, a friend of human progress and mental liberty.

S. D. MOORE.

MEDFORD, May 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR of the loved and hated TRUTH SEEKER—loved by all free souls, and hated by bigoted sectarians bound by creeds of old traditional notions that lead to bewilder and dazzle, to blind the eagle intellect of finite soul, that should be free as the bird that flits the air, untrammeled by a cage.

Now, as talking to a friend is only thinking aloud, permit me, if you please, a say of much in little (in your valuable paper) of truth, as I understand it, when comprised in a nut-shell of developed reason, to clear away the fog of mystery:

There is no mystery in nature,
It dwells in finite mind,
As may be plainly seen, I think,
By reference to the blind
Of undeveloped mind.

Hence, as the sun in the firmament, surrounded by the worlds in space, so stands the word development as king among all the words in the English language; as by the power of development all nature receives its animus of life to develop matter from and of the great "I am" universe of power, as water is congealed into ice by science's laws, that rule the universe of worlds in endless space.

I herewith send you $3.00—$2 50 for the paper, and 50 cents for the books named below. E. W. A.

MR. MITCHELL TO MR. PECK.

NEWPORT, May 4, 1883.

TO JOHN PECK, OF NAPLES, N. Y., My Friend: I can not satisfy myself without sending you my last blessing for your grand words in the ever-blessed TRUTH SEEKER. Your incisiv thrusts into the old rotten hulk of theology are truly refreshing. and show that you are master of the situation. To some no doubt your words seem harsh and uncalled for, but I do not feel so. When one thinks what a moral monster the Christian God is, and that for millions of years he has been making human beings to roast in fire and brimstone through all eternity all for his own glory, strong as your words are, they fall far short of picturing in its true colors the horrid religion and incarnate fiend that Christians worship as God. Every person who has not lost his reason must execrate way down to the very depths of his soul this essence of infernalism—God. He has been eternally minding everybody's business but his own, and is an unmitigated nuisance.

I dislike profane language, but it is music to my ears to what the insane ravings of Christian prayers are. The barking of a dog at the moon is a thousand times more sensible than the prayers of Christians to a God they know no more about than the dog does what the moon is made of.

It is important to abolish intemperance of all kinds. War must be done away with, and so must all kinds of slavery; but none of these terrible evils will be banished from the land until this curse of curses, the Christian's God, is annihilated. There never was a villainy concocted on earth but what can be traced to God.

So, in closing, I thank you, my brother, for your important words, and I thank the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER for his good sense in printing your letter in the grandest paper in the world. I truly hope your pen will not stop. And I also want to thank Mr. A. B. Bradford for his very important and instructiv paper in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th, entitled "Materialistic Immortality."

Very truly yours, SEWARD MITCHELL.

PITTSFORD, May 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks for sample copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I shall try to add to my list of papers. It is doing a grand work. I was very much pleased with the articles "The Hive of Nations" and the new version of "Dies Irae," and especially with the list of radical books and tracts. These are the bombs of dynamite that make sad havoc with superstition. Please send by return mail the inclosed list of Truth Seeker Tracts.

Being very much interested in the effort to change the present system of dating from the birth of Christ, I hav written the inclosed for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

YEAR OF SCIENCE.

I notice there is considerable agitation in favor of changing the "year of our Lord" to the year of science. I think if it can be established it will do more to break up superstition than we at first would think. As the exact date of the "Anno Domini," like all the rest of theology, is very uncertain, I think it would be an excellent plan to hav it changed, if we can agree in same date. The A.D. has been estimated by different commentators to be from one to five years out of the way, so that we do not know whether we are living in the year of our Lord 1883 or 1888.

I am not in favor of dating from the signing of the Declaration of Independence, as that would be a national affair. Instead of the Era of Man I would prefer the Era of Science, or the Year of Science. I thought of a few suggestions, and I would like to hear from others. If you want to go back for martyrs, why not take Socrates, as he was the first martyr of science; or Bruno; or take Voltaire, as he has done more to start a break from the church than any other man, for really you might call him the first great Apostle of Liberty. Say, start from the birth of Voltaire, or take Thomas Paine; but if you take the French Revolution, that will make another national affair. But if we did, we might call it the "Year of Liberty," as that was the first strike of Infidels from the tyranny of the church.

I am in favor of dating from the birth of John Guttenberg, or the year in which printing was invented, as that has been the power that has advanced science and civilization, and has done more for the cause of liberty than anything else. What sort of liberty would we hav to-day if it wasn't for the printing-press? That is what is keeping mankind from the dark ages, and saving him from misery and superstition. FRED. WHITTAKER.

PATCH GROVE, May 5, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I inclose $2.50 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, for I enjoy reading the paper very much. I enjoy communing with advanced minds more than anything else in life. Besides, we should keep ourselvs posted as to the encroachments of the church. And only for such papers as THE TRUTH SEEKER we would soon find ourselvs bound hand and foot, slaves to the power of the church, without the power to move only at the behests of some priest. Do you think I am saying too much?—that I am an alarmist? that I am borrowing trouble? I do not. Look at Ohio. If enough TRUTH SEEKERS had been read in that state do you suppose that her legislature would hav passed the act requiring healers to pay a tax for healing, or trying to heal? Why, they should offer a reward for healing. And what a spectacle to see a state like Connecticut only saved from the same fate by the efforts of one man. Surely the price of liberty is the eternal vigilance of its votaries. And the saddest of all is the fact that so few seem to care; so long as their personal liberty is not interfered with they don't care who else goes to prison, only so that they or theirs are not meddled with. It is enough to make the bones of Paine rattle in his grave. Oh, how I hav gloried in the brave, warm, live patriotism of Bennett and Heywood! Oh, for more such to stem the tide before it is too late—in time to arrest another internecine war; for if the encroachments of the church go on as they hav for the last twenty years, less than twenty more will bring U. S. Grant's prophecy at Des Moines to pass. First, during the late "unpleasantness," when everybody was busy, and all attention was taken up with watching the battlefield, they stole a march on us, and got "In God we trust" put on the coin of our country. How my blood boiled when I first saw that. Well I knew what it meant, and I never heard a man cry out against it. Next, they got the president (Mr. Lincoln was the first, I believe) to issue a Thanksgiving Proclamation. These were only entering wedges—feelers, as it were, to see what the people would do about it. And what did they do? Only here and there a man had a word to say about it, and that only for the most part in private. Had they, like a disturbed beehive, ran together and swarmed in conventions and public meetings, and uttered loud protests against the first innovations, and demanded a stop there and then, we might expect with some confidence that our country's peace would be preserved at least for another generation. But as things are going, what may we not expect? THE TRUTH SEEKER is Mr. Bennett's best monument, and I hope it will long continue.

Yours, MRS. MARY T. B. HUMPHREY.

MR. WINTER MEETS HIS MATCH.

PALMER, May 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been reading T. Winter's tirade against Spiritualism in THE TRUTH SEREKE of May 5th, and am sorry that any man of seventy years of age should become so psychologized by his repeated efforts to annihilate the various facts connected with a spiritual philosophy as to denounce all persons nature has constituted mediums as frauds.

I hav read quite a quantity of Mr. Winter's previous coarse, cheap, efforts to disgrace the phenomena which so strongly prove disembodied intelligence, and hav always thought them possessed of too little argument and too much slang to be worthy of notice from reflectiv minds; but as many of the people who read THE TRUTH SEEKER do not stop to discriminate between arguments and denunciation, it is perhaps well that this arrogant Infidel be occasionally rebuked, and invited to come down from his high pinnacle of understanding, as regards the mysteries of the universe, and reason somewhat in regard to evidence in these matters.

If I could offer no explanation for a fact in nature, or a phenomena which points to a fact by all analogous reasoning, I would be exceedingly slow to make myself ridiculous by denouncing as lunatics careful, thoughtful persons the world over, who from lack of vanity, and humble search after truth as it is every day manifested in nature, are every day coming nearer the solution of the sublime mysteries which hav so long puzzled humankind.

Mr. Winter claims to hav investigated the "unblushing deceit." I would be ashamed to make such a statement, and afterward pen such a mass of nothings concerning Spiritualists who happen to get sick. His words show he as yet understands very little of the philosophy of a continued existence. He also declares this world is good enough for him. Now I always think when I hear a Materialist make such a statement, that he must be a person of small aspirations, and still smaller in his commiseration for all the unfortunately organized creatures in the world, who possess no shadow of a chance to realize their ideal life in this state of existence.

Every well-informed honest person knows that very few Spiritualists are ever found in the insane retreats. Many are upborne through the fiercest fiery trials of life by their faith, while Materialistic persons often resort to narcotics and ending their lives by suicide when trouble overwhelms them. Materialism offers a premium on all the rioting of ascendant appetite, because it is another established fact that the moral nature and the finer sensibilities can all die out, and yet the physical nature be strong and vigorous, and the intellect activ.

A Spiritism which teaches temperance, honesty, industry, and frugality, with humility of understanding, has nothing to fear from the pointless invectivs of a whole phalanx of Winters.

MRS. M. C. GURNEY.

RESPONSIBILITY OF KNOWLEDGE.

VINELAND, April 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Men capable of exerting public influence are responsible for unjust laws. All who hav sense to know women cannot be equal or exert noble influence while weakened and annoyed by disabling costume, are responsible for favoring the dwarfing usage. While forbidden any part in affairs of government, women are far less responsible than men for vicious usages not legislated upon. Biding men's laws make them partakers, and if responsibility for accruing evils attaches in that, it must be for not rebeling and suffering penalties men empower themselvs to inflict. Conduct that statutes do not direct, public opinion, taking their hue, controls quite as arbitrarily; customs are formed by it, women cultured to it. All of both sexes, having strength of mind, are responsible for not resisting evil opinions, usages, trades, etc. Failing to do this has created the monopoly system that runs through commerce from Gray to Gould. Statutes left women their choice on two vital points, which would hav given them equality long ago had they chosen the free side instead of succumbing to slavish opinion. Their only apology is, they who make and administer law hav the vantage ground in all things. Statutes do not compel women to ignore reason on clothing and obey fashion kings. But say-so cries yield, and win smile for smile. They comply, and win poverty, disease, vice, and chaotic crisis, effects of irresponsibility. Resistance would hav given health, character, hope of equity, and sound offspring. The penalty, ignorant sneer and professed scorn, worth should firmly ignore. In this case the knowing are responsible. not the weak, having no example among those they rely on.

Statutes do not compel women to marry, or rear children in any other relations, but compels liability to bear in marriage, and "say-so" brands them if they do not marry. They comply, and homes and country full of sickly, covetous sons, who condemn their sisters' rights and aspirations—said sisters inheriting dispositions to seek artfully for what they hav no opportunity to obtain properly. Resistance would exempt from motherhood, with the too frequent consequent knowledge and remorse of multiplying miserable lives, in which high and joyous uses are prostituted to sordid, sensual, and tyrannic ends, and free from the poignant reflection of abetting unjust rule. This case also foots up in favor of rebellion, if responsibility exists. I claim it does with the knowing, since the penalty is not death. Of course it is extenuated by general injustice, but is sufficient to prompt women of ability to guide by example, and lead their sex out of the "say-so's" of falseness.

These two vital cases which law has left open to women's choice, furnish the field for their assertion and preparation for all rights. Until they make them of avail they render it more difficult for law to aid them, and complaint is useless. I know women who avail themselvs of both cases, but many are needed; and men of mind are selfish if they do not earnestly encourage.

A few at first must make changes in the light of science, and, gathering numbers, thrust frauds back. On these points only can we exert power and command justice. Writers hav hinted at social resistance, but left me alone to utter clearly, as they hav to practice fearlessly in the first case, which, and only which, qualifies to act in my case; as physical derangement wrecks the integrity of all faculties, its soundness bears honor in all.

MARY E. TILLOTSON.

RUSSELLVILLE, May 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is a long time I hav been wishing that some one would do just what I see in my last TRUTH SEEKER that Mr. Francis D. Lacy has done. I must read his book. I judge from what you say that I shall find it to be a step in the right direction. A natural religion based on moral principles and scientific facts is certainly just what the world needs. It is the only religion worth having. It is as old as the universe. It is the true light for which men hav been searching for ages. It is the one to which the great Thomas Paine pointed us. It is plainly the coming religion. Coming? Yes, but not into existence. It is as old as the planets. It is coming into the minds, the hearts, the affections of the enlightened people of this advanced age, and those taking form, the grandest, the most lovely of any since the earliest dawning of our history. It is destined to dethrone superstition and supernaturalism, with all their numerous family of priestly humbugs. The theological design argument is one upon which most of us hav floundered for awhile, but no true naturalist can stay there long. Just as soon as we are able to see that matter is eternal, down goes the design argument as taught by orthodox theologians, for if matter is eternal the laws governing it must evidently also be. I think Mr. Lacy's head is level on the God question. If there is a God surely he is a natural one and must be a universal natural intelligence or intellectuality, and I believe that God is the soul, the life, the laws, the sum and substance of all things, visible and invisible, but of course when I address him I address his intelligence, not his coarser nature. There can be nothing above or below nature. Nature is all, and nature is God. I see that a good many Liberals wish to cast the whole God question into the corner with the unknowable, and say that it don't at all concerns us, and would hav us believe that this is the most advanced view of the case. Bosh! balderdash! flumgumery! They had just as well try to stop the sun in its course as to try to persuade men to abandon the belief in a supreme being. There are only a few men in the world so constituted as to be able to ignore the idea of a God, and when I say this I don't mean that they are endowed with superior ability, either mental or physical. They say that the God idea is the center around which all superstitions revolve. I would just suggest that it must be a superstitious God, something like Jehovah, in order to be an appropriate and effectual center for a system of superstitions to revolve around, and that it is not at all necessary that all gods must be superstitious because all the old ones hav been. (When I say the old ones of course I mean the man-made ones.) I hope Mr. Lacy all the good luck imaginable in his labors, and I also hope that there will be many able pens to join in and assist in the great work. Much depends upon it. As soon as I feel able I will send for the book. I am very unsettled at present. Am thinking strong of returning to California soon, but am not decided yet. This country is too orthodox for me. Otherwise I am very well pleased with it. We hav got the regular old bull-headed orthodox down here. They don't want to hear anything relativ to religion, but just that which their daddies and mammies taught them. I am now in the darkest corner of the United States that I hav ever been in, still there are some well-informed and very fine people among us.

Please find inclose $2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. Now I believe I hav written all I want to. Yours, WM. L. WORLEY.

Ninety-four Dollars' worth of Sympathy.

From the "Town Tattler" in Meriwether's Weekly.

On one occasion Colonel Ingersoll was walking down Pennsylvania Avenue with one of the wealthiest men in the city, where they passed a building in course of construction. Just as they reached it, one of the workmen fell from a scaffolding before the third story upon the pavement below. He was terribly hurt, but conscious enough to know when he was lifted, and that he was to be carried to the hospital.

"My family," he groaned; "I shouldn't mind but for them. What will happen to 'em?"

The gentleman with Ingersoll was loud in his expression of sympathy for the unfortunate follow.

"Well, how sorry are you?" asked Ingersoll.

"Oh! there is public provision made for such cases, and I pay my taxes to keep them up," replied the millionaire.

"Well, there's no public provision for his family," said Ingersoll, and pressing up to the man he slipped his purse in his hand and hastily retreated from the thanks showered on him. The purse contained $94, said to be the only cash Ingersoll then had in the world.

THE Kansas City Times says that its prayer for rain went to press in the morning at 3 o'clock. Before 6, cooling and refreshing showers had descended. To which statement the Chicago Inter-Ocean retorts: "That is the first well authenticated instance on record, where a Democrat prayed for water, since that recorded in Luke xvi, 23–24."

St. Babcock.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: It's a long time since I hav written anything for the press. I would like to write individual letters to to Elmina, Leland, Putnam, and about forty others, but as I am getting old and with poor health, I feel that I had better bid one and all of my Liberal friends farewell and stop.

At the Watkins Convention I contributed ten dollars for a charitable purpose with the remark that it was of the money which I was saving for Rev. J. E. Richards, who had sued me for $10,000 damages as the result of having expressed my honest opinion as to his religious belief. Well, notwithstanding the church influence, the jury was very good and knocked off $9,900; so that when I think of the Christian tearers of human flesh and robbers of innocent men and women in the past, I feel that I hav been very well treated, and that the world is progressing.

I am not a first-class scholar, but think that with perhaps a little strain on my intellect, and considerable heavy brain work, I shall be able to make use of language as chaste and refined as did some of the gentlemen who wrote the manuscripts for the holy Bible. So I am now writing MS. which I design to pack away in an old chest, and if I can make it mouse-proof it is possible that five hundred years from now they may be found and put into a Bible, or the Bible, as "The Book of St. Babcock."

And if there is anything in this world that I pride myself on, it is writing poetry. I always use an inspired pen, which I get at the bookstore for that especial purpose. As a specimen, I send you just one "gem," or rather a copy of one, taken from the sacred old chest; and if Prof. Peck should ever sing it I hope the audience will giv respectful attention to the inspirational melody of the product of the inspired pen.

M. BABCOCK.

THE VILLAGE PARSON—PREACHING AND PRACTICE.

Tune, "Rosin the Bow."

There was a parson who every day,
Like Daniel, to his God did pray;
He prayed by day and he prayed by night,
That men might do just about right—
(Spoken) As a Christian duty.

He wanted flocks to so stick their stake
That they would not miss heaven's gate;
Then with him at the head they all would Go right through that gate, if they could.
It would be so nice.

And with love and prayer he and his band
Will pass through that gate or be damned;
And to love your neighbors, sing, and pray,
He thought was the only right way
To pass.

He believed in hell, and spent his time
Saving poor souls that stank with crime;
But he changed his tune after a spell,
And gave one man regular hell—
Just for a change.

The man had said something he didn't like,
So he sued him with all his might;
And, for one who truly loved his God,
The good parson went it rough shod:
He sued him for a big pile of money.

Brothers and the sisters all were there,
In court, to hear the good man swear.
The suit came off—'twas in November;
But when sworn he couldn't remember
If "Love your enemies" is the word of God, or not.

But how the folks did giggle and stare
To hear the little parson swear
That solemnly he did understand
To kill witches is God's command!
Oh, my!

And he swore that he believed in hell,
Where brothers and sisters must dwell;
And he seemed to think it the best way
To just wade right in for big pay
For a pretended damage to his character.

But he'd not suffered as pretended,
So his character was mended
By the jury, who said: "O sir, my!
"You hav estimated too high;
"You will hav to take one cent on the dollar.

"But, parson, suppose it shall prove true
That the man is better than you;
And if in fire he must roast and stew,
What, dear sir, will become of you?
"We pause for a reply."

But the strangest thing yet for to tell
Is that this believer in hell
Never manifested a desire
To save this man's soul from hell-fire;
But he did try to get his money.

[Our Opinion.]

But, parson, there isn't a God so wild
As to damn and roast his own child;
Then, my dear sir, let's giv a big yell:
"No hell, no hell, there is no hell!"

But what, dear sir, hav you been about—
Not to know that hell is played out?

Every good man should be a crier
Against the doctrin of hell-fire.

And all good parsons a rule should make
Not to sue a man for Christ's sake;
But should remember that Christ's teaching
Wasn't law, but love and good preaching.

P. S.—If a minister sues an Infidel for $10,000 for libel, and don't get near half enough to pay his own lawyers, how much does he make, and how much does he add to the glory of God, and to the credit of his own character, and to the credit of the church?

DEITY ANALYZED

THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.

By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.

Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptures appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attacks the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—L Hutchison.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man!
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute. Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full glit, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y38

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,
Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!
Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.
☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.
"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"
Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

WHEN the Lord came down, in the cool of the day, to walk in the garden, and discovered man had got his eyes open, he became very angry and stated the matter thus: "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life and eat and liv forever;" therefore the Lord in his anger turned him out of the garden, and made him go to work for a living. Now, who lied in this business? If there was a lie out, who told it? It seems God's anger was aroused, not because man was to die on the day that he ate the apple, but that his eyes had become opened to know good and evil, and his fears were excited lest he should eat of the tree of life and thus liv forever. Who, we ask, told the lie? It surely was not the devil. Every word he said was strictly true.—D. M. Bennett.

IN the end, the people who now murmur and ridicule what they do not understand will be grateful for the real manhood that has been revealed to them. In the end, truth alone will command respect, truth alone will prevail; and in the end, in the far-off time, truth shall make every heart of man its empire and its throne.—Felix Adler's Radical Pulpit.

THE thing that is uttered from the inmost parts of a man's soul differs altogether from what is uttered by the outer parts. The outer is of the day, under the empire of mode; the outer passes away, in swift, endless changes; the inmost is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

I DENY the existence of such a being as the Hebrew Jehovah, or Calvin's God, who walked and talked with men; who destroyed them purposely with flood and fire, earthquake and plague; who turned a woman into salt; made an ass speak [whoever wishes to see this miracle repeated may step across to Brooklyn and enter the Tabernacle, carried on by the Rev. DeWitt Talmage. One visit will be enough for most people]; killed fifty thousand and seventy men for looking into the ark; stopped the sun and moon in order that a Hebrew "filibuster" might slaughter the Canaanites; saved a drowning prophet in a whale's belly; and who makes "decrees" for the salvation of some, and allows others to inhabit an eternal hell.—R. C. Adams.

O THOU, wha in the heavens dost dwell,
Wha, as it pleases best thysel',
Sends one to heaven and ten to hell,
A' for thy glory,
And no fer ony guid or ill
They've done afore thee!

I bless and praise thy matchless might,
Whan thousands thou hast left in night,
That I am here afore thy sight
For gifts and grace,
A burning and a shining light
To a' this place.
—Burns's Holy Willie's Prayer.

IF we are to seek no subterfuges, if we are not to halt between two opinions, if our yea is to be Yea, and our nay Nay—if we are to speak as honorable and straightforward men—then we must recognize the fact that we are no longer Christians.—Strauss.

PEOPLE cannot think at all without differing; they cannot think earnestly without disputing. But can they not differ and dispute without hating? Can they not seek the truth with the ardor of earnest minds, without detesting one another? That is the question.—Frothingham's Radical Pulpit.

WE do not work on Sunday because the Commandment forbids it; the Germans do not work on Sunday because the Commandment forbids it. We rest on Sunday because the Commandment requires it; the Germans rest on Sunday because the Commandment requires it. But in the definition of the word "rest" lies all the difference. With us its Sunday meaning is, stay in the house and keep still; with the Germans its Sunday and work-day meanings seem to be the same—rest the tired part, and use the means best calculated to rest that particular part.—Mark Twain's Tramp Abroad. [There are two pages more on the Sunday question, and I do not know any author or preacher who speaks more soundly on that vexed subject. One would hardly go to Mark Twain for enlightenment on theological matters; but yet one might "go further and fare worse." This explanation of, and apology for, a rational use of Sunday occurs in the twenty-fourth chapter of "A Tramp Abroad," and if we had a society among us for diffusing information on the Sunday question (such as they hav for years had in England), it could not do better than print this gospel of Mark and scatter it over all the land. But, alas! we are far from this yet! Superstition has fixed its talons too deep in the body of this nation to allow us to hope for ourselvs, though we may do so for future times.

We shall not liv to see the day,
But p'raps our blessed babies may,

In this belief let us labor and toil, and, at the same time, "rest and be thankful."—Hylax.]

MATTHEW XX, 17-19. Language such as this, definit, positiv, explicit, and circumstantial, if really uttered, could not hav been misunderstood, but must hav made a deep and ineradicable impression on all who heard it, especially when repeated, as it is stated to hav been, on several distinct occasions. Yet we find ample proof that no such impression was made; that the disciples had no conception of their Lord's approaching death, still less of his resurrection; and that, so far from their expecting either of these events, both, when they occurred, took them entirely by surprise; they were utterly confounded by the one, and could not believe the other.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

LORD, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth [or affirmeth] to his own hurt and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.—The Fifteenth Psalm.

Odds and Ends.

THE following dialog was overheard the other day: He: "Araminta, je t'adore." She: "Shut it yourself."

IN Connecticut an old lady aged seventy-two is learning to play the piano. It is seldom that such a viciousness of spirit breaks out at that advanced age.

"NOW is the time to subscribe," said the cross roads editor as he led his wealthy bride to the marriage register and shoved a pen into her trembling hand.

JACK (admiringly): "You are a trump, Marian!" Miss M.: "Why do you call me such a name as that?" Jack (triumphantly): "Because of your taking tricks."

"IS the howling of a dog always followed by death?" asked a little girl of her father. "Not always, my dear; sometimes the man that shoots at the dog misses him," was the parent's reply.

A TEN-YEAR-OLD boy cleared a dollar in Plainville, one cold day, recently, selling holders. A holder is one of those cloth things that lie under the stove while you are picking up a hot lid-lifter with your bare hands.

A VISITOR from the country, who had been "doing" the sights of London, when asked what he thought of the cathedral nave, said: "What! the fellow who took the shillings? I didn't know you called things so exactly by their proper names in London!"

THE SUPPRESSION OF SPRING.

Said Winter to Summer: "'Tis quite clear to me
That the seasons are badly adjusted;
The season called Spring, you must surely agree,
Is one with which all are disgusted.

"Her vanity's something immense, and her wiles
Are wanton, deceitful, and fickle;
The farmer who trusts to the creature's false smiles
Will find himself soon in a pickle.

"That she is a blot upon nature's fair plan
Is a fact, and the world ought to know it;
Besides, it is she who inflicts upon man
That terrible bore, the Spring poet."

"Your head is quite level," sweet Summer replied;
"Miss Spring has gone wrong, I am thinking.
Just see how she staggers from side to side;
No doubt in the world she's been drinking.

"She steals weather from me, and steals weather from you,
And that's how she picks up her living.
I am known to be very warm-hearted, 'tis true,
But cannot be always forgiving.

"To think how the twicked young creature is praised,
When her temper can never be trusted,
And what mountains of song in her honor are raised,
When she ought to be—yes, sir—be bu'sted!"

Said Winter: "There need be no quarrel or fight;
Let you and me closely caress her,
And thus we can squeeze out the life of her quite,
And silently, surely, suppress her.

"When Spring is put decently out of the way,
We two will no more be derided;
Then I will take March, and you shall take May,
And let April be fairly divided." —New York Sun.

GETTING ALL THE GOOD OUT OF A GAS METER THAT IT WOULD STAND.

He was trying to sell the stranger his house and lot, and after the prospectiv purchaser had wandered through the attic, and nosed around the kitchen, and poked into the closets, and rattled the windows to see if they were tight, and smelled of the cistern water to see how much dead cat it would assay to the gallon, the owner of the property took him down into the cellar, which he had spent all night in whitewashing. The meter, which was stuck up on a shelf in one corner of the cellar, attracted the stranger's attention.

"How much does your gas cost you a year?" asked he.

The householder gave a knowing wink, poked the stranger in the ribs and said:

"You don't look like a man who would giv the thing away, and seeing as you are going to buy the house anyway, I don't mind telling you. It don't cost me a cent."

"It don't?" said the stranger with evident surprise.

"No, not a red," said the other, "and it is all owing to a little observation on my part as to the working of that meter there. I'll explain. You see when I first moved into this house I was doing a good business, and so I had everything fixed up in tony style, chandeliers in every room in the house, kitchen included, and other luxuries to correspond. But after awhile my business began to run down, and I had to shut off on expenses. My wife suggested that we economize on the gas bill; so I bought a lot of lamps, and we stopped using the gas burners, except in the parlor when we had company. When the man with the lantern came round to look at the meter, I fairly kicked myself with joy to think how it would astonish him. But it didn't.

"The bill for that month was just as big as it was the month before, and when I squealed, there was the meter to back them up. I couldn't get around that. Well, next month I thought I'd experiment. So I put the lamps away in the garret, and used every gas-burner in the house. Kept two chandeliers in the bedroom going day and night, just for luck. Bill for that month just the same. Then I thought I might as well be getting all the good out of that meter that it would stand, so I tapped a hole in the pipe and ran a connection over to our next neighbor, and let him hav all the gas he wanted for ten per cent off. Inside of two months I was supplying the whole square, and it didn't cost me a cent more than it did to supply my house and stable. I'll turn this little monopoly right over into your hands. It's a little dangerous, but, if you've got the nerve, your gas needn't cost you a cent, as I said at first, and—"

"My gas isn't likely to cost me anything, anyway," said the stranger, interrupting him for the first time.

"Why?"

"Because," said the stranger solemnly, "I'm the new secretary of the gas company."—Boston Courier.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 3m52

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity! All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Vol. 10. No. 21. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, May 26, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE pope has decided that no priest who has participated in the agitation in Ireland shall be made a bishop.

THE American Art Association of this city opened their gallery on Sunday, the 20th, and were rewarded for their enterprise by four or five hundred people in attendance.

SAYS Texas Siftings: "It is inconsistent and unjust for the United States government to keep a guard of soldiers on duty at ex-President Garfield's tomb, while no guard is kept over ex-President R. B. Hayes, who is twice as dead as Garfield."

THE new "married woman's property act" in England encourages a woman to lend money to anybody except her husband. It enables her to sue him and to be witness against him. It also renders her liable to maintain both her husband and her children.

THE recent raid on Mott street Chinamen in this city is believed to be purely a matter of religious prejudice and persecution, as the complainants are members of the Young Men's Catholic Association, and the investigation does not bear out the charges made.

THE Virginia Episcopal Convention of ministers, after considering the question, advises separate organizations for white and colored Episcopalians. They hav an idea that an eternity of amalgamation in the next world will suffice without a previous mixing of the races in this.

MANY book-sellers are complaining that they hav a large quantity of dead stock on hand in the form of the revised New Testament. Having satisfied their curiosity, the people no longer buy. It will be many years before another edition of the revision will be made necessary by the demand.

POPE PIOUS the Ninth's personal effects hav been sold by auction in Rome, much to the annoyance of the faithful, who consider that the late pope's family ought to hav preserved every atom of his belongings as a relic. There was a miscellaneous collection of crucifixes, sacred pictures and images, portraits of crowned heads and celebrities, missals, etc., but the public was not very eager to buy, and in many cases the things fetched even less than their intrinsic value.

DR. MARY HOWARD, an American woman doctor in China, recently attended the mother of Prince Li Hung Chang, and although she did not save her life, showed so much skill that she was called in to treat the wife of the great minister. From all parts of North China letters from the wives of mandarins and high officials entreat her to come to them or to "send other wise women from America." Eastern women of rank die of obscure diseases rather than submit to operations performed by male surgeons.

THE people of Illinois pay $12,000,000 annually for schools and $20,000,000 for whisky. On the average, in cities and towns, there are fifty saloons to one thousand children of scholastic age; so that these grand forces for influencing character may be said to be at work on a gigantic scale, the one teaching the youth how to behave and the other how to smoke and drink. The Republicans say the smokers and drinkers vote the Democratic ticket, but do not giv them credit for compelling the liquor dealer to pay the license, upon the strength of which the schools are conducted.

DURING the fiscal year the exports of agricultural products were three times as great in value as all others combined. The value of manufactures exported was about one-seventh of that of the exports of all sorts, and the value of mining products, including mineral oils, about one-fourteenth. During the last sixty years the value of the agricultural products has always been about three-fourths of that of all the exports, and in the great grain year of 1880 the proportion reached the enormous figure of over eighty-three per cent. A table of freight charges in the last report of Bureau of Statistics upon foreign commerce indicates that the average freight charges for wheat from Chicago to New York had gradually fallen off to about one-third of what they were in 1868, not only by rail, but by lake and canal and lake and rail.

FOUNDLINGS hav a very hard time in many other institutions besides the one at Tewksbury. Out of one hundred and twenty-five of them admitted last year into the Chicago Home for the Friendless, no fewer than nine-seven died in the institution itself, and enough others to make the total over one hundred soon after being given away to private individuals. This is not quite so bad a showing as that of Tewksbury, where, within a given period, every foundling but one perished; but it is still a very bad one. Probably similar institutions in other cities would reveal a state of things much like that which exists in Chicago.

ITALY is now trying to come to the front in the matter of political emancipation for woman, and so sets a good example for more enlightened nations. A movement is on foot to organize the provincial and district electoral laws, with a view to insert therein the right of suffrage for women. Like the men, they must be of the age of twenty-one years, and are also expected to contribute taxes of the minimum amount of five francs, besides furnishing the proof of being able to read and write. As an act of courtesy, women complying with the foregoing conditions will be allowed te send their written votes in a sealed envelope to the commissioner at the polls, their signatures being attested by a mayor.

THE oldest tree in the world, says Knowledge, so far as any one knows, is the Bo tree, of the sacred City of Amarapoora, in Burmah. It was planted 288 B. C., and is therefore now 2,170 years old. Sir James Emerson Tennent givs reasons for believing that the tree is really of this wonderful age, and refers to historic documents in which it is mentioned at different dates, as 182 A.D., 223 A.D., and so on to the present day. "To it," says Sir James, "kings hav even dedicated their dominions, in testimony of a belief that it is a branch of the identical fig-tree under which Buddha reclined at Urumelaya when he underwent his apotheosis." Its leaves are carried away as streamers by pilgrims, but it is too sacred to touch with a knife, and therefore they are only gathered when they fall. The King oak in Windsor Forest, England, is 1,000 years old.

THE Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has just dealt a hard blow to ceremonial marriages as essential to legality. Two cases of desertion were before it, and the husbands were made to support their acknowledged wives, although no ceremony had been performed by priest, parson, or civil magistrate. One of the parties married themselvs in this wise: They agreed to liv as husband and wife. The man said: "I am your lawful husband;" the woman responded: "I am your lawful wife." They clasped hands, and he said: "We are married." They thenceforward lived together, a child was born to them, and the husband sought to get rid of the support of both, but the court declared the marriage valid and the child legitimate, and ordered him to take care of each. Such decisions, making marriage a pure civil contract, are checks upon the licentiousness of men, and protect the rights and interest of wives, and conduce in every way to morality. There are too many persons who imagin no marriage legal unless ceremonial, and seek to take advantage of it on that ground. Interested ecclesiastics do much to poison the minds of husbands by their talk about the necessity of religious ceremonies at marriage.

THE Turkish authorities on the importation of foreign literature, we should judge, possess but little more intelligence than the officials of the Canadian Custom House, though their discrimination may be superior to that of the Kanucks. A copy of Moody and Sankey's volume of hymns lately reached one of the Turkish post-offices in Armenia to the address of an American missionary. As a matter of course, Moody and Sankey must pass under the eagle eye of Bukhsheesh Effendi, the governor-general's factotum, who knows a few words of English. He was all the sharper on this occasion because he had very recently passed by inadvertence a book consisting of letters from one of the New York papers, the author of which roundly denounced the misgovernment he had witnessed in Armenia during the campaign of 1877. And this volume was addressed to the same quarter as the present hymn book. "Dogs," exclaimed Bukhsheesh Effendi, as he turned over the leaves. "Hold the Fort! What fort? Treachery, as I liv! May Satan seize them!" They were patriotic songs for the use of the Armenians, those hymns, and the musical notation proved it; and that particular song, "Hold the Fort," must hav reference to an intended insurrection. So "Hold the Fort" was cut out by order of Bukhsheesh, and the expurgated volume sent to its destination.

PROFESSOR BREWER of Iowa College, in the Home Journal, writes as follows on the subject of spelling reform: Persons who hav never read an old English book hardly imagin how much our spelling has already been improved. They may learn with surprise that all the words printed below in italics are taken, letter for letter, from a book by John Evelyn, written two hundred years ago. The changes produced by the dropping of useless letters are so like those proposed by reformers now, that they can be stated in similar language, as in the following imaginary rules of the old spelling reformers: Drop silent e in such words as goe, noe, soe, the verb doe, and the pronoun wee; also, at the end of such words as foode, selfe, looke, tooke, prevaile, whome, againe, betweene, owne, soone, solemne, deare, doore, feete. Drop e in onely, and before the suffixing in such words as makeing, dureing, closeing, writeing, leaveing, dyeing. When a word ends in a double consonant, as a great many in "all" and double t, omit the last letter, as in att, hatt, gett, yett, hitt, visitt, hott, butt, principall, naturall, disposall, bedd, gemm, penn, friendshipp. For summe write sum, for œconomique economic, for allwayes always. These reforms, accomplished a century ago and tested by experience, hav been a saving of time to penmen and printers, and no loss of beauty to the page, as judged by our eyes. No one would undo them. And the changes proposed by the Philological Association in 1881 will probably be yet more commended when they become familiar.

MR. RICHARD PROCTOR, the well-known English lecturer on astronomy, once tried the experiment of wearing a corset, and thus decribes the result: "When the subject of corset wearing was under discussion in the pages of the English Mechanic, I was struck," he says, "with the apparent weight of evidence in favor of tight lacing, particularly by the evidence of some as to its use in reducing corpulency. I was corpulent. I also was disposed, as I am still, to take an interest in scientific experiment. I thought I would giv this matter a fair trial. I read all the instructions, carefully followed them, and varied the time of applying pressure with that 'perfectly stiff busk' about which correspondents were so enthusiastic. I was foolish enough to try the thing for a matter of four weeks. Then I laughed at myself as a hopeless idiot, and determined to giv up the attempt to reduce by artificial means that superabundance of fat on which only starvation and much exercise, or the air of America, has ever had any real reducing influence. But I was reckoning without my host. As the Chinese lady suffers, I am told, when her feet-binding are taken off, and as the flat-head baby howls when his head-boards are removed, so for a while was it with me. I found myself manifestly better in stays. I laughed at myself no longer. I was too angry to laugh. I would as soon hav condemned myself to using crutches all the time as to wearing always a busk. But for one month of folly I had to endure three months of discomfort. At the end of about that time I was my own man again."

News of the Week.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S health is said to be declining.

AN unusually small crop of maple sugar is reported by Delaware manufacturers.

BEER was denied the people of New Jersey last Sunday by the closing of all saloons.

SIX anarchists hav been arrested in Paris for circulating sedition among the troops.

COLONEL INGERSOLL commenced his address to the jury in the Star route trial last Saturday.

CAREY, the Irish informer in the case of the Phenix Park murders, has been released from custody.

LEVI D. JARRARD, ex-senator, and county collector of Middlesex, N. J., is missing. His accounts are ten thousand dollars short.

Two hundred thousand dollars damage was done the Pennsylvania Railroad's property by a fire at Hackensack meadows, N. J., on Saturday last.

MR. FRENCH, president of the board of police commissioners in New York, declares that there is not a gambling-house open in the city. The statement is doubted.

DANIEL CURLEY, the second criminal to be hanged for the Dublin murders, was executed on the 19th. "I am happy and at peace with God," were among his last words. The gallows is a great evangelizer.

DENISON, Texas, was struck by a tornado last week. The Baptist church was totally demolished, and a fine schoolhouse nearly destroyed. The power that rides upon the storm is no respecter of houses.

TYNAN, the alleged Number One of the Irish Invincibles, is living with his family in Brooklyn. His extradition has not yet been demanded. Tynan's offer to surrender to the British authorities was declined.

WORSHIPERS at Peterborough Cathedral in London were much alarmed last Sunday by finding on the steps of that edifice a box with a fuse attached. The affair is considered a hoax, as the substances contained in the box are not known to be explosiv.

A MOST destructiv cyclone passed through Racine, Wis., last Saturday. One hundred and fifty houses were destroyed, and nine lives are known to hav been lost. A wide extent of country in Illinois was at the same time devastated and many persons killed.

RUFFIAN DUNNE, of Chicago, who slew Prize-fighter Elliott, has been acquitted. The elite of the Chicago disreputables gave the distinguished homicide a reception on the evening of his acquittal. The verdict of the jury is savagely criticised by the press of that city.

IT appears from facts brought out in the sale of the Rev. Anna Oliver's church in Brooklyn that the name of that lady is not Oliver but Snowden. Why she preached under an assumed name is not known. Perhaps matters connected with the name of Snowden might explain if made public.

MOODY and Sankey exhibited themselvs at Cooper Institute last Sunday evening. The millionaire flunkey, Cyrus W. Field, who recently made his name disagreeable to Americans by erecting a monument to Major Andre, the British revolutionary spy, was on the platform. By supposed divine intervention Moody lost his voice in the middle of his sermon.

CONGRESSMAN PHIL THOMPSON, of Kentucky, who shot the man who had seduced his wife, was acquitted by the court that tried him. While this verdict may hav a salutary effect on that class of men who hav no respect for family ties, it establishes a precedent which those who are inclined to believe they hav a grievance like Mr. Thompson's will do well not to depend on to clear them if they commit murder outside of Kentucky.

The Individual and Society—Dio Lewis's Lecture.

Dio Lewis gave us a quite radical lecture before the Liberal Club, and discoursed wisely and wittily concerning a very important subject. He maintained that society as such had no rights, that all rights were purely those of the individual. The single individual has as many rights as a million individuals put together into what is called a state. This, I think, is a true statement. The rights that one must respect are those of the individual man. The least individual in society is crowned with as many and as sacred rights as all the others. The true authority of society is located in the man, as an individual, and not in a community. I am as much bound to respect the rights of one as of a thousand bound together in a social compact. The social compact does not create or endow the community with any rights that did not before exist in each man of himself. I know that there is a superstition abroad that somehow or other the state has rights which transcend those of the individual, and that the state has a certain authority and power which the purely individual man does not possess. This I deny, and assert that all the rights that I am bound to respect are those of each individual, and a combination of individuals does not create any superior ground or relation for the existence of rights. As Dio Lewis says, you examin society closely and you find that it vanishes into the individual. It is the individual that makes society, and, as Mr. Andrews profoundly declared, it is in the everyhood of society that we find its right, and not in its allhood. This is a far-reaching distinction. To affirm that society, simply as such, has rights in virtue of its allness is to create a new despotism as degrading in the end, and as crushing, as any of the old despotisms. The individual is the supreme thing, and not society. The society exists for the individual, and not the individual for society. Blackstone himself declares that the state is for the protection of the citizen. This is the ground of its existence. It has no existence in itself. The individual has. He is in himself an original being. Society is not. Individuals create society, and therefore society is the subordinate agency. It is a mere convenience. It has no essential authority, and it has no real life except as individuals make it. It is the individual that we are to develop and make powerful and transcendent in the new life of man. This is the mighty problem of modern civilization, in the vast combinations of man with man, to respect not the mass, but the men that compose it. Otherwise we create a slavery as terrible as that of the Inquisition. It is not the happiness of the mass, as such, that we are to seek, but the happiness of the multifarious men and women, each of whom is superior in essential dignity to the mass simply as such. The idea must be obliterated that society exists in and for itself, and has an authority that the individual does not possess. This is a remnant of the old "God-idea" and divine idea of government, that it is a sort of supernatural institution. It is a natural institution, and as such derives its authority from the consent of the governed; and not of the majority of the governed, but every one of the governed. Each individual man I meet is clothed, to my mind, with as much authority and reverence as the most imposing social fabric. This is the American idea, and unless we maintain it we shall not develop anything original in the history of the world.

Another idea of which we must disabuse ourselvs, as the doctor says, is that there is or can be any such thing as a law-making power. Law cannot be made. It can only be discovered and unfolded. Law is the expression of a natural relation and right that has always existed, and the state has no determining power in the matter. Its function is solely that of interpretation. In all ages the state has undertaken to make crimes. It does so in our country. What to-day is innocent is to-morrow adjudged worthy of punishment along with genuin crime. To make an artificial crime is as despotic as to make an artificial arithmetic and compel men to abide by it. We are to obey only those laws which spring from the nature of things. Legislation, as some one says, should only be the bringing forth and carrying forward of the law which exists, not by the mandate of society, but by the conditions into which men naturally come in the process of social growth. Society cannot make law; it can only express the sovereignty of the individual and the moral power of that sovereignty.

In expressing these and similar views, Dio Lewis has placed himself upon the right side of the great battle of the future—the battle between the individual and society. As now organized, society claims altogether too much; it does not realize that it must be forever subordinate to the individual, and labor for the individual, or else its labor is worthless. The grandeur of the individual makes the grandeur of society. Unless we hav noble men and women society is absolutely a failure. The greater personality each develops, the greater is the social progress of the whole. The individual must be the master of the situation, or civilization will be a greater curse than barbarism.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Logic and Liquor.

If I believed in a system of compulsiv education I should at once demand the inclusion of logic in the curriculum of our public schools. Had such a course been adopted years ago my critics would be much fewer. At least, my old friend Hays, of Vinton, Iowa, would never hav written the letter which appears in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 24th. In that letter he makes clear only one thing, and that is the fact that he does not understand the fundamental principle upon which he predicates his own personal rights.

My first proposition was "that each individual naturally possesses the right to control his or her own person." Mr. Hays does not directly deny this, but he seeks to find it defectiv, logically, by showing that this means freedom of choice, and freedom of choice means freedom of action. This is true, in fact was the very truth I was attempting to make plain. Again I ask, does Mr. Hays deny that man should hav freedom of action? If he does deny it, then he affirms my right to make him a slave, if I hav the physical power so to do. The practical denial of my first proposition is the negation of every human right. If man has not the right of choice and the right of action, then there is no right; everything depends upon mere physical force; it is just as right for the strong to rob the weak as it is for an animal to eat when it is hungry. If I am not right, then Mr. Hays has no right to differ from me, assuming that I possess the superior physical power.

But Mr. Hays says that if man possesses this right of action he has a right to "commit any crime in the list of crimes." How can one man possess a natural right which is not the equal right of all other men? My proposition implies the right of all men to the life which is theirs, but how can all men hav a right to life if that right to life givs one man the right to take that of another? A principle cannot thus destroy itself. I did not assert the right of some particular man to freedom of choice and action, but the natural right of all men. But crime invades that right, and hence crime is not a right, and the right to commit it is not logically deducible from my proposition. Crime is a denial of right, and hence cannot hav birth in a right. When a man commits a crime he destroys the liberty of his victim, which he cannot rightfully do under my proposition.

When each person is guaranteed, and has de facto, the right named in my proposition, crime will hav ceased. Does not Mr. Hays perceive that when I affirm his right to control his own person in every respect I deny to myself any right of invasion of his person? How can his right to the peaceful possession of the fruits of his toil exist if that right givs some one else a right to rob him? And yet this is the illogical and absurd position assumed by my critic. And does he see now that my use of the word "honest" was perfectly legitimate? If he does not, he is, and I say it with the utmost respect and kindness, utterly incapable of logical reasoning.

He also says that "where there is no law there is no transgression." If by this he means statute law, human law, it is absurd in the extreme.

Mr. Hays, in commenting on my proposition, says, "If this is the true position that man occupies, then he is not responsible to anyone except himself for any act he may choose to commit." As I hav shown, just the opposit of this is true. Man is responsible to every man whose rights he invades. But if Mr. Hays's implied denial of man's right to freedom of action is true in nature, then indeed is man accountable to no one but himself for his crimes, and might is right. Mr. Hays can take either horn of the dilemma he chooses—either subscribe without reserve to my proposition, or cease to complain when a man stronger than himself robs or maltreats him.

Yes, we are all the subjects of nature, and we intend that her penalties shall be the only ones visited upon us for our transgressions against ourselvs. We may also be the slaves of our own imperfect organizations, but we are determined that we will no longer be the slaves of our fellow-slaves.

My critic continues: "You hav not as yet intimated that it (alcohol) is nature's own beverage, or that it was even a good substitute." No, and no one who can reason ever supposed that it was necessary for me so to aver. Mr. Hays, so far as I am aware, has never intimated that Catholicism is nature's own religion, or even a good substitute. Therefore I infer he is in favor of suppressing it by law. Eh?

Mr. Lydiard next. He says that the venders of "rich and racy" literature generally like a "money compensation for their goods in advance," and that probably Mr. Heywood "would not try to force his business where it would not pay him." That is, he would not send any to Mr. Lydiard. In the first place, Mr. Heywood does not deal in "rich and racy" literature, and then it is quite true that the uneducated masses, rich and poor alike, cannot appreciate "Cupid's Yokes" and "Leaves of Grass;" cannot see any principle involved in selling the Comstock syringe. And Mr. Lydiard again avers that he cannot see any good motiv in Mr. Heywood's doing as he has done. It is true his motiv is a very trifling and inconsequential one; he only aims to vindicate the right of publication, to establish woman's right to herself. Of course these are very small matters—mere bagatelles about which we should not expect Liberals to much concern themselvs. An appeal to names counts for but very little with me, but if Mr. Lydiard will turn to Mr. Bennett's last articles on the Heywood case he will learn to his surprise that Mr. Bennett took a position directly antagonistic to that now occupied by Mr. Lydiard. But I need say no more on this subject, for Mr. Putnam has anticipated all that I might say, and said it so well that it seems even Heywood-haters like Mr. Lydiard might be convinced of the value of Mr. Heywood's services, the justice of his claim, and our duty to render him every assistance possible.

The gist of Mr. Lydiard's latest argument for prohibition is that the world is growing worse each day; that moral influences and science are utterly incapable of stemming the tide of intemperance; that the comparativ degree of liberty we now enjoy is productiv of evil to such a degree that we must take a step backward and remand the individual to the care of an arbitrary power outside of himself. He fails to inform us how those who individually and in free association, having at their command every resource of science, art, love, wealth, and yet being unable to diminish the sum total of intemperance, are going to reach that result when combined in a government and being compelled to depend upon force, that is, hate. But if we hav too much liberty here, we hav too much in every department of life, for evil everywhere prevails; evil which good men say is on the increase. If tyranny is the only cure in one case, why not in all? "If Mr. Walker is not standing up for intemperance he is standing up for a state of things which begets it, and no amount of Jesuitical reasoning can extricate him from that position." Evils exist in spite of liberty, not because of it. Freedom is good for man, and only through freedom shall we attain the higher, nobler conditions. The desire for liberty has ever been the great uplifting force of the world. Prohibition is the deadly foe, not alone of liberty, but of liberty's children—temperance, truth, candor, honesty, virtue, order. Mr. Lydiard deliberately casts aside every tendency to progress, and appeals to law, which ever retards the march of man.

Yes, every special tax must go. Their abrogation would be a grand temperance measure. Your excessiv taxes in every way aggravate the evil you seek to destroy. Through fraud, perjury, stealing, murder, adulteration, and in many other ways, they curse the people.

All arguments for prohibition are necessarily denials of the right of self-government, but it has remained for Mr. Lydiard to say openly that there is no longer any hope for man save through the avenues of despotism. He utterly despairs of science, love, and liberty, and turns with blinded eyes and wildly groping outstretched hands toward the throne of authority as to a temple of deliverance. Pity him do we all in the ranks of humanity's army, but our pity will not permit us to spare his sophistries, or bow the knee of servility before the tyrant King Majority, whom he sets up for our worship.

E. C. WALKER.

Is Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic Right?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As I look at this question, its chief concern is not what an individual may be pleased to do in his own house, and at his own pleasure, always excepting that he harms no one by his doings, but that he shall not do, openly and publicly, that which is liable to injure or wrong some member of a community.

"A man's house is his castle"—if he choose to manufacture alcoholic stimulants there for the fun of thing, why, nobody could, or should, prevent him; but when he puts his manufactures upon the market, and it is a patent fact that those manufactures are demoralizing and debasing to communities, then, it seems to me, the law should come in as a check to stop such evil influence.

The liquor interest benefits but three classes, manufacturer, wholesale and retail dealers. It is a source of revenue to these parties, but how is it with the consumer?

He pays his money for an article that simply gratifies a craving for a moment, lightens his pocketbook, does no good, but injury, and, if persisted in, is sure to bring, soon or late, misery, ruin, degradation, not only upon himself, but upon his family and friends.

But man should be left free to choose as he will, it is said.

Not when he chooses evil instead of good—not when, by his choice, incalculable evils follow in his train, and drop upon the innocent who are connected with him.

The same right that is accorded to prohibit the indiscriminate sale of arsenic, laudanum, and other poisons, should extend to alcoholic liquors. They are dangerous to the public welfare, and that should be sufficient cause to prohibit their free use among the people.

We hav a law that forbids a dram shop to be opened in the vicinity of a school-house. Why? Because of its contaminating influence upon the flexible mind of youth, and this very fact shows that there is a wrong in its use, and that it has no power for good in the community.

In the city where I liv there are some three hundred open rum saloons, supported principally by workingmen, and I hav noted the fact that such workingmen rarely, if ever, attain to homes of their own. Their earnings go into the till of the rum-seller, while they and their families remain in poverty, in rags, and in wretchedness. Those workers who abstain from intoxicating liquors, on the contrary, are well dressed, hav a bank account, and pleasant, comfortable homes.

Now, for these, whose appetite for strong drink has obtained the mastery, to their detriment and the detriment of their families, should not the strong arm of prohibition be thrown around them as a check and restraint?

And for those who would coin money out of the diseased appetite and inflamed brain, should not the law say unto them, Thou shalt not?

I hav yet to see the first man in normal health who would be willing and glad to see his son or daughter drinking freely of intoxicating beverages, or freely dealing out the same to men, women, and children. This is significant as showing that naturally the thing is an evil, and as an evil should be prohibited. SUSAN H. WIXON.

P. S.—I was very much pleased with the article by W. H. Gantz in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 14th. It is very comprehensiv and true. S. H. W.

Victims of Christianity.

RELIGIOUS FANATICS WHO HAV KILLED PEOPLE FOR THE SAKE OF THEIR OWN SOULS.

From the New York World.

Even four years after the commission of the crime, it seems, public interest in the case of the Pocasset murderer has not abated. Few, however, of the many thousands of people who hav been thrilled by the terrible tale of the offering up of little Edith Freeman are aware that similar human sacrifices hav been by no means infrequent in the United States. One of the earliest recorded crimes of this description was committed at Gardiner, Maine, about the beginning of the century by James McCausland, a Revolutionary soldier living at Pittston, on the opposit side of the Kennebec. He was a day-laborer, and unable to read or write. There was an Episcopalian church at Gardiner which he sometimes attended, but his religious conversion was affected by an itinerant preacher, and it turned a head not of the strongest. It became impressed upon his mind that he could only obtain salvation by making a burnt-offering and a blood-atonement, and, brooding over the subject, he at last received, he felt, a divine revelation that the church at Gardiner was the appropriate altar and a woman living on the banks of the Cobbessecontec, a few miles above the village, the predestined victim. His mind, however, was not fully decided until on visiting the church at midnight he heard a celestial voice: "Young man, push on!" This removed all his doubts, and having saved the "holy things," as he called the Bible, prayer-book, and pulpit cushion, which he removed and concealed under the roots of a fallen tree, he carried a shoe-full of live coals to the church and set it on fire. It was soon consumed, and launching his canoe he paddled up-stream to the house of the woman selected as the sacrifice. There lingered some doubt upon his mind, but he went in the belief that God would show him a sign and provide him with an instrument. Opening the door, he found two men lying on the floor of the log hut asleep, and the woman sitting by the bed, in which was a sick person. A flash from among the embers of the fire on the hearth revealed a butcher's knife sticking in a log just above her head. This solved the doubt, and stepping over the sleepers he took down the knife and drew it across the throat of the nodding victim, who awakened in eternity; then he made his way to the canoe and back to Gardner, where he gave himself up, testifying to the innocence of a man who had been accused of burning the church by showing where he himself had concealed the "holy things." McCausland was convicted on his confession, which he insisted on making, but was never executed, or even sentenced, but remained in prison until his death, nearly thirty years afterward. He felt no sorrow for his deed, as through it his sins, he felt, had all been forgiven, and hence, he argued, if he should be released he would not repeat the act —indeed, there could be no further revelation.

A more horrible instance of human sacrifice livs in the annals of New Haven, where, in 1855, was a small sect of fanatics—the Wakemanites, so called from their prophetess, Mrs. Rhoda Wakeman, a woman of seventy. She had convinced her followers—respectable farmers and farmers' wives living in the outskirts of the city—that thirty years before she had been killed by her husband and received into heaven, where she had remained seven hours, being finally sent back to earth by God to prepare the way for the second advent of Christ. Among her followers was one Justus Matthews, who, having been irregular in attending the prayer-meetings of the sect, was declared by the prophetess to be the "man of sin" mentioned in the scripture. The evil spirit which possessed Matthews was, she said, very annoying to her; not only did it hinder the coming of Christ, but it might cause her death, and so bring on immediately the judgment of all mankind, without any millennium at all. Matthews himself became convinced of the truth of this and avowed his willingness to submit to proper treatment for the removal of the fiend. On the evening of Sunday, December 23d, he went to Mrs. Wakeman's house, where were gathered most of the fanatics, including his sister, Mrs. Wakeman's half-brother, Samuel Sly, and Miss Hersey. While a prayer-meeting was held in the upper story Matthews was placed in a room on the ground floor, where a fire was built for his comfort, his sister blindfolding his eyes and tying his hands behind him. From 9 o'clock till 1 in the morning he remained in that condition, while the others occupied themselvs in prayer, visiting him from time to time and pleading with him to renounce the evil spirit. Finally they persuaded him of the necessity for sacrificing him, and Sly, going into the room where he was sitting, brained him with a club of hazel wood, which he had procured as possessing singular efficacy against evil spirits, cut his throat, and jabbed a dozen holes in his abdomen with a common dinner-fork, in order to let out the fiend. Miss Hersey helped him to wash the blood from his clothing and to hide the club and knife; then they joined their fellow-disciples in prayer. Sly was convicted of murder and the woman as an accessory, but his sentence was commuted, and he died in prison some eight years ago. According to Sly, the power of all departed spirits since the fall of man was concentrated in one Amos Hunt, upon whose death the millennium would come in the twinkling of an eye. Hunt is now a practicing clairvoyant in Connecticut, and figured in the Mary Stannard murder case. On New Year's day, 1856, a more terrible tragedy was wrought by another Wakemanite—Charles Sanford, the nephew of Mrs. Matthews, who brained and decapitated an old farmer named Umberfield, and Enoch Sperry, father of the well-known Connecticut politician. He was convicted, but died in prison of small-pox. Several of the Wakemanites still liv at New Haven.

A little more than a year afterward—in February, 1857, the case of Giles Hitchens, of Concord, startled all Delaware. Hitchens was a farmer, somewhat eccentric, but with the reputation of being peaceful, and most certainly of an affectionate disposition toward his wife and their only child—a boy of eighteen months. He had attended a Methodist protracted meeting and received religion one night in that February, and his mind had been greatly excited by the preacher's sermon on Abraham and Isaac. He could not sleep, and arising early went to the woods to pray, when he heard a voice bidding him imitate the patriarch's command—kill his child and offer its blood as a sacrifice. Twice he prayed and twice the command was repeated, when having prepared a keen knife he stole the sleeping child out of the house without alarming its mother, and carrying it into the woods laid it on a heap of leaves, while he prayed, and, like Abraham, waited for a sign. He had hoped that the Lord would appoint some other victim, and the hope was strengthened when a little dog pattered up and sniffed around his feet and at the sleeping infant, but there came no sign, and taking up the child he cut its throat and held it by the feet to pour out its blood as an offering; then took it back to the house—a ghastly burden, streaking the mud with gore—and laid it on the bed beside his horrified wife. Hitchens, who gave himself up peacefully, was acquitted on the ground of insanity, and after remaining some years in an asylum was set at liberty. His wife dying, he remarried, and is still living in the house he occupied at the time of the murder.

Another sacrifice of a similar nature was averted at Portsmouth, N. H., through the precautions of the father, taken while his mind was yet clear. A religious hypochondriac named Goodwin had read the accounts of Freeman's crime and had become possessed with the idea that the divine wrath was impending over him and could only be averted by the sacrifice of one of his children, and he warned his friends to keep a watch upon him, and hinder him from carrying his purpose into execution, should the temptation ever seem to be becoming irresistible. They were able when they found him reviving the subject and paying particular attention to one child —his favorit since its elder brother's death—to induce him to go to an insane asylum. A similar sacrifice was reported from Iowa in 1880, and shortly afterward came the account of the excesses of the murderous fanatics in Arkansas who butchered several persons to carry out their doctrin of "blood atonement." Their prophet, one Mattlock, was killed in the spring of 1881, but whether by his followers as a sacrifice, or by lynchers, was not ascertained. The latest offering of this nature took place at Los Angeles, Cal., in December last. One John Smith had been converted by a Methodist clergyman, and had for several months devoted himself to poring over the Bible, till finally he not only convinced himself that he ought to make a human sacrifice, but brought his wife and their only child, a boy of thirteen, to acquiesce in his views. "When he talked to me," said the woman; "and persuaded me that a good wife ought to think as her husband did, I got so as to take whatever he said as the truth. He made us fast and when Ben asked him if God had ordered us to starve he said yes. When he announced that the boy must be killed we both remonstrated, but finally thought it was all right. On the day appointed for the ceremony he called Ben out of the house and told him he had to die for our savior. The little fellow knelt down and I got on my knees by his side; John raised the knife, looked hard into the boy's face, and then drove the knife into his breast." Though the woman persisted in believing that the deed was justifiable, she broke down on recalling the sight. "I am always thinking of Ben," she said; "I am always hearing him in the night asking to be brought in and laid on his bed, and begging for a little water before he died."

Notes from the Field.—Gilman and Carbon.

After a brief sojourn in Chicago I came to Gilman, where a course of lectures was given, the arrangements for which were made by A. W. Beery, the leading Liberal of the place.

The shadow of the Braidwood horror which had just occurred was resting upon eastern Illinois. An incident that took place at this disaster forcibly illustrates the difference between rational and Christian prayer—between a manly self-reliance and reliance upon an imaginary God. One who escaped from the mine relates that in rushing for the entrance he stumbled over a man who instead of saving himself, as he might easily hav done, was on his knees imploring his God to rescue him. But God was probably engaged in watching sparrows at the time, and failed to notice the supplicating miner. And thus while the one who prayed with his legs was saved, the other perished, a victim to the idiotic teachings of priestcraft.

Sunday evening, Feb. 18th, I closed my engagement at Gilman, and at midnight took the train for Carbon, Ind. We should hav reached Carbon in the morning, but a wreck and floods delayed us, and it was night when we arrived there. On our way we passed through Paris, the birthplace of THE TRUTH SEEKER. What a vigorous oak has grown from the little acorn planted there ten years ago!

At Carbon I gave three lectures to crowded houses. Every evening some were turned away for want of room. There are many Liberals in and around Carbon, the leading spirits of whom are Oldham and Kerr.

An old lady with a sweet Calvinistic face attended my last lecture here. She listened attentivly, and was evidently soon convinced from the nature of my discourse that I was predestined to eternal damnation. To expedite matters as much as possible she wanted me taken out at once and hanged. The audience, however, was not disposed to gratify her desire, and the lecture went on.

Before leaving Carbon I received and accepted a challenge from the Rev. W. F. B. Treat, of Bloomington, to debate the following propositions:

1. Resolved, That the teachings of the Bible do, when faithfully followed, make men better and happier than they would be without them.

Treat affirms; Remsburg denies.

2. Resolved, That the teachings of Infidelity do, when followed, make men better and happier than they would be without them.

Remsburg affirms; Treat denies.

The debate will take place at Carbon in August or September, and will last four days.

The New Democratic Platform.

The New York World builds the following political platform:

1. Tax luxuries.
2. Tax inheritances.
3. Tax large incomes.
4. Tax monopolies.
5. Tax the privileged corporations.
6. A tariff for revenue.
7. Reform the civil service.
8. Punish corrupt office-holders.
9. Punish vote-buying.
10. Punish employers who coerce their employees in elections.

The World should add:

Tax churches.

Tax sectarian charitable institutions.

Tax ministers the same as other people.

Eject chaplains from legislativ assemblies, prisons, asylums, and other institutions supported by public money.

Abolish religious services and the use of the Bible in public schools.

Do away with religious fast days.

Substitute affirmation for oath taking on the Bible in the courts.

Repeal the Sunday law.

Repeal sumptuary laws.

No public money for Catholic protectories and Protestant reformatories (otherwise known as religious grist mills).

Repeal of all laws favoring the Christian religion above other religions.

Then we shall hav a platform worth standing on.

Notes.

A CORRESPONDENT at Burlington, Mo., writes us that, although it is rather early for the circus season to open, Joe Cook, the clown, has been posturing and prevaricating in that vicinity.

MR. BRADLAUGH, we learn from the London Times, does not, it is understood, intend to giv the government or the House of Commons any further trouble on his account just at present. He is now entitled to enter the House and sit below the bar, without voting or speaking. He is also permitted to enjoy other privileges as a duly elected member. He would, no doubt, forfeit some of these privileges if he came after the late adverse decision into collision with the authorities. Mr. Bradlaugh will hold meetings in the country, and from time to time appear in his usual seat in the House. He was after his speech at the bar visited by a large number of Liberal members, and congratulated on the tone of his remarks, and especially on the explicit manner in which he vindicated the government in the matter of his several contests in Northampton.

THE Rev. J. M. Buckley does not countenance some kinds of story-telling in the pulpit. He relates that he was one day sitting in the pulpit with a brother clergyman, when the latter told the following story:

"Children, there was a certain man who had two wives. Now, this may be true, or it may not; but, whether it is true or not, I will tell it. One wife was young and the other was old. The young one wanted him to hav black hairs like hers, and the old one wanted him to hav gray hairs like hers. So the young one pulled out all the gray hairs that he had, and the old one pulled out all the black hairs that he had; and betwixt the two he hadn't a hair left. But this is contrary to the text, which says that 'gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth it not."

At the conclusion of the narrativ, says Mr. Buckley, "we arose and left the pulpit." From this we are led to infer that had the story been less demoralizing he would hav taken the pulpit with him.

THAT body of irregular-minded females known as the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions met last week in Brooklyn. The wife of Joe Cook was present and addressed the meeting. She said the main obstacle to Christian missionary work in India was the circulation among the nativ people of the writings of Ingersoll and other Western Infidels, which are much read in some of the large cities. It took much exertion, she said, on the part of the missionaries to counteract the influence of these writings. It is to be noted that since the around-the-world trip of the late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER this has been a common complaint among those interested in the work of evangelizing the East. Mr. Bennett's lecture to the people of Ceylon on Christianity and Buddhism has been translated and circulated in the Sinhalese language, as hav also the lectures of Mr. J. E. Remsburg, M. Babcock, and others. The Theosophical Society of Colonel Olcott, having its headquarters at Bombay, also claims thousands of adherents. There are several Freethought papers published in that quarter of the globe, and many Buddhists are activ Freethinkers. If the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions hav any funds to apply to bettering the condition of mankind in general, they can find use for them nearer home. India has too much religion already.

DR. HOWARD CROSBY, according to the Hebrew Leader, believes that the original tables of stone on which the Ten Commandments were written will be found in the excavations under Jerusalem. The editor of the Leader does not venture to indorse this view, but thinks that when the vaults under the temple are illuminated by electricity "some astonishing discoveries will be made." These gentlemen are undoubtedly familiar with the statement made in Exodus xxxii, 19, to the effect that Moses "cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount." So if the stone slabs on which the finger of God traced the Ten Commandments repose among the ruins of Jerusalem, they must hav been conveyed to that locality in a basket, and considerable cement will hav to be wasted before the fragments can be stuck together in their original form. For those who believe the Commandments still exist, the search for them is a commendable one, and to help along the great work, if Dr. Crosby will scratch around and discover the pieces, we will agree to furnish the necessary glue.

RELIGION and temperance are looking up. When powerful poets throw their weight in favor of any cause, that cause is bound to get a big hoist. Some unknown genius has come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty with the appended poem:

We will not buy,
We will not make,
We will not use,
We will not take,
Wine, cider, beer,
Rum, whisky, gin;
Because they lead
Mankind to sin.

We will not curse
Though many dare
Open their lips
To curse and swear.
Our words shall be
Both pure and plain;
We will not take
God's name in vain.

This is intended as a sort of double-barreled pledge for Christian people to subscribe to, hav framed, and hang up in the front room. How would something like this do as a kind of following out of the same line of thought?

We will not steal
A neighbor's hog,
We will not shoot
Another's dog.
We'll liv in peace,
Avoid all strife,
Nor fool around
A brother's wife.

We will not rob
The Sunday-school,
Nor call our fel-
Low-man a fool.
We'll giv the cause
Of Christ a boost,
And go on high
Where angels roost.

THE Literary Churchman is pretty vigorous in denouncing the folly of the men who hav taken it upon themselvs to "try" the Rev. R. Heber Newton for heresy. Here goes the Churchman:

"Mr. Newton can be only either acquitted (wholly or in part) or condemned. If he be acquitted, then—his enemies being judges—all our church standards will be justly ridiculed. If he be condemned, the church will lose a man whom she can ill spare. But not that only or chiefly. She will—so far as five New York clergymen can do it—hav pronounced biblical criticism a forbidden science. She will no longer be trusted as honest when she pretends to deal with rationalism. She will hav excluded from her ministry in the future all earnest thinkers who cannot promis, at the age of twenty-three, that they will never change their opinions on what used to be open questions. We hav good reason to know that there are many Newtons. If Mr. Heber Newton be silenced, they also may hold their peace. But the iron will enter into their souls; and sooner or later the ministry of the church will be left to men who can find complete mental satisfaction in picturesque processions and parochial routine."

But the Churchman is wrong in condemning this trial. It is eminently proper that Mr. Newton's orthodoxy should be tested. He was not hired to tell the truth, but to preach Christ and him crucified, and the inspiration of the Bible from lid to lid. If he does not confine himself to this, his employers, according to the terms of the agreement, hav a right to discharge him from their service.

MR. CHARLES WATTS, of England, who recently spent a few months lecturing in this country and Canada, received a very flattering reception from his English friends upon his return to London. We learn from his paper, the Secular Review, that on Wednesday evening, April 25th, the Hall of Science was well-filled with an enthusiastic audience to welcome him home. The eloquent "Saladin" (W. Stewart Ross) presided, and opened the meeting with a brief address, in which he said:

"In the history of our movement Mr. Watts has rendered his name historical by being the first to leave these shores for the express purpose of propagating under the Star Spangled Banner that Freethought which is so dear to all of us. Like the primitiv Christian apostle, he took with him neither purse nor script; but, nerved by apostolic zeal and armed with the charmed Excalibar of his eloquence, he went forth, conquering and to conquer. We lent America one of the ablest and best accredited of our Secular propagandists; and, with profuse and graceful thanks, America returns our loan with acclamation and laurels."

Mr. Watts gave a lengthy and interesting account of his visit to America, closing with a high tribute to our educational institutions. In these he saw the hope of America. The Marquis of Queensberry was present and moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Watts, which was seconded by Mr. Arthur Moss, and carried amid much enthusiasm. A vote of thanks was also accorded Mr. Ross, for the efficient manner in which he had conducted the Secular Review during Mr. Watts's absence. We are glad to observe that the Secularists of England hav shown, by their welcome to Mr. Watts, that they appreciate worth in a fellow-man and know how to honor it.

THE pope has issued a circular letter against the Irish agitators, and more particularly against the effort to raise a fund for Mr. Parnell, the leading spirit of the Irish revolution, and the act is likely to get him into trouble with his spiritual slaves. Some of them evince a determination to rebel. Over the water the talk is hostil, and in this country it is violent. Congressman Finnerty of the Third Illinois district publishes the Citizen, which recently printed this editorial headed "Boycott the Pope." We hope the Irish will hav the good sense to do it, but as few of them read much we do not look for any great or immediate change in the relations between the Vatican and its slaves. Says the Citizen:

"Of all the productions of papal interference in the affairs of Ireland that hav marked the policy of the Vatican, from the days of Adrian IV. to those of John XXII., and from the reign of that pontiff to the present time, the last circular addressed by Leo XIII. to the Irish bishops and clergy, in regard to the Parnell fund, is the most intolerably impertinent. If the Irish people submit cravenly to this latest Italian lash, the whip being furnished by the pope's worthy ally, Victoria, by the grace of God, and so forth, queen of Great Britain and Ireland and empress of India, they will forfeit the respect or the world at large. But what are they going to do about it? may be asked. We reply, let them hold public meetings throughout every diocese in Ireland, pass resolutions sternly denouncing any more of his holiness's unholy intervention in Irish politics, and tell him, once and for all time, firmly and respectfully, to mind his own business as the head of the Catholic church. They might supplement this action by resolving not to contribute a single cent of Peter's pence while Leo XIII. occupies the papal chair, or at least until he quits his palpable and scandalous alliance with the arch enemy of the Irish nation and race. In a word, we advise our countrymen, if they hav any respect for themselvs or for Ireland, to boycott the pope and teach him a lesson that may be serviceable at least to his successors. Cut off some of the monetary supplies of Leo XIII., and teach him, without being misunderstood, that the Irish race cannot be bulldozed into slavery by the bayonets of England, or by the thunders of Rome. We hope the Irish bishops and clergy will hav backbone enough to resent this Roman outrage on their patriotism. Ireland will stand by them against Pope Leo and every other foreign busybody, be he Saxon or Italian."

MR. ANTHONY COMSTOCK has been deprived of his little brief authority as a special police officer. A young man named Rickard was standing on the landing of the elevated railway station at City Hall last Saturday gazing at the new East River bridge, when Anthony came rushing up in great haste to catch a train that was about starting. He collided with Rickard, and shouted, "What are you obstructing the passageway for?" Rickard inquired what he wanted to know for, and Comstock, after threatening to throw him over the railing, arrested him and carried him off to the Tombs. Rickard was immediately discharged by Justice White. Sheriff Davidson said to a reporter: "Mr. Comstock's authority as an officer is based on a special deputy sheriff's warrant and badge, and he committed a most unjustifiable outrage. He had no right to arrest the man. This affair shall not rest here. I shall revoke Mr. Comstock's authority. Mr. Rickard has been in my office for nine years and bears a good character. He is not a man to be treated in this way." On Monday Comstock wrote Sheriff Davidson a long letter, in which he attempted to excuse his conduct on the plea that he had misunderstood his rights. He received in reply the following:

"MR. ANTHONY COMSTOCK, Sir: Your warrant as special deputy sheriff is hereby revoked and you are expressly forbidden to exercise any authority under or by virtue of said warrant from and after this date. Yours, etc.,

"A. V. DAVIDSON, Sheriff."

If it should occur at the coming coronation of the czar that Alex should be segregated by dynamite, the Russians could scarcely do better than send to this country for Comstock to fill the vacancy thus caused. Once crowned as czar of All the Russias, his future would be assured. Prodigal indeed would be that people which would waste dynamite enough on him to blow him into eternity.

THE June number of the North American Review opens with an article by Joseph Nimmo, Jr., Chief of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, on "American Manufacturing Interests," in which is given a singularly full and instructiv historical sketch of the rise and progress of manufactures in the United States, together with a very effectiv presentation of their present condition, and of the agency of tariff legislation in promoting diversified industries and encouraging the inventiv genius of the people. Should this author's advocacy of protectiv legislation prove distasteful, the reader finds the needed correctiv in an article by the Hon. Wm. M. Springer, on "Incidental Taxation," which is an argument for free trade. D. C. Gilman, president of Johns Hopkins University, writes of the "Present Aspects of College Training," as affected by the increase of wealth and luxury, the development of natural science, and the influence of a larger religious liberty. Edward Self presents some weighty considerations on the "Abuse of Citizenship," as exhibited in the machinations of the dynamitists against a friendly power, in disregard of the obligations of American neutrality. Prof. Isaac L. Rice criticises some of "Herbert Spencer's Facts and Inferences" in social and political science, and Christine Nilsson contributes "A Few Words about Public Singing." Finally, there is a symposium on "The Moral Influence of the Drama," the participants being, on the one side, the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, well known as an opponent of the stage, and on the other, John Gilbert, the actor; A. M. Palmer, theatrical manager; and William Winter, dramatic critic. Fifty cents a number; $5 a year. Published at Lafayette Place, New York.

Lectures and Meetings.

JOHN E. REMSBURG will make the tour of Colorado's principal cities and towns in June. The following is a list of his appointments as far as arranged: Denver, 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th; Colorado Springs, 6th and 7th; Pueblo, 8th and 9th; Canon City, 10th and 11th; Salida, 12th; Buena Vista, 13th; Leadville, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th; Kokomo, 19th and 20th; Golden, 21st; Georgetown, 22d and 23d; Central City, 24th and 25th; Boulder, 26th and 27th; Longmont, 28th and 29th.

W. S. BELL, of Boston, has recently finished a course of lectures at Boulder, Col., before the Boulder Club, where he gave great satisfaction. At the end of his first lecture, we are informed, fifteen persons came forward and joined the club, which at the beginning of the course had seventeen members, and at the close had forty-seven. Mr. Bell is doing effectiv work. As he is on the way to California, Liberals in that direction will hav an opportunity of securing his services for lectures.

THE Freethinkers of the city of Rochester, N. Y., hav raised $150 with which to pay for the finest hall in the city for the Freethinkers' Convention, and also money sufficient to pay a magnificent quartet of singers for the occasion. The following committee has been appointed to take charge of all the local arrangements: Moses Hayes, chairman; C. F. Farlin, M.D., secretary; E. H. Gault, treasurer; Anson C. Allan, Mrs. C. Austin, Mrs. E. H. Gault, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. A. C. Allan, Mrs. Dr. Butterfield. The hall is to be grandly decorated with flags, evergreens, house-plants, and flowers.

On Wednesday, the 9th, Mr. Joseph L. Andrew delivered, at the school-house in Prescott, Iowa, the first Liberal lecture that had ever been listened to in that town. The room was filled. The local Methodist minister was in attendance, and an invitation to reply or ask questions was extended to him, but he did not avail himself of the opportunity thus afforded to defend his creed. He, however, replied to the lecture the succeeding Sunday in a sermon on "The Religion of Christ." Mr. Andrew, who is an ex-Methodist minister, writes to inform the Liberals of Iowa and the surrounding states that he is in the field, and will deliver a course of lectures at Corning, Iowa, and, if he can find an opponent, will enter a debate. He reports that the ministry of that vicinity are rather reticent. He judges that they are aware of the weakness of their cause, and realize how easily their hypocrisy may be exposed. Mr. Andrew may be addressed at Corning, Adams county, Iowa.

The Universal Peace Union will celebrate its seventeenth anniversary at the Friends' meeting-house, Rutherford place, this city, on June 1st, at 10:30 A.M. and 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. The objects of our Quaker friends "comprehend the establishment of peace through the removal of the causes and the abolition of the customs of war. Wherever there is oppression, injustice, wrong, or any obstacle standing in the way of peace, the Union seeks to remove it by the moral forces of reason and affection. The military system (itself a form of despotism and oppression), and reliance on carnal weapons and deadly force, are opposed by the Union as detrimental to civilization. Mediation, arbitration, and conciliation, are presented as justly claiming the attention of mankind. Arbitration is commended for the prevention of strikes and other difficulties between capital and labor, as well as in national and international affairs. It is already becoming recognized as one of the leading methods of law for the adjustment of difficulties and the protection of life, property, and human rights." A cordial invitation is extended to all in sympathy, and those not now in sympathy are invited to attend that they may be convinced.

The Lake Shore Spiritualist Conference will hold its first quarterly meeting in Webster's Grove, Kingsville, Ashtabula county, Ohio, on Saturday and Sunday, June 16th and 17th. As very important business is to come before the meeting, among which is to take the necessary steps to incorporate the Conference under state law, and to organize a benefit department, it is hoped that every member of the association will make an effort to be present. Negotiations are being made with several good speakers, whose names will be announced in due time. Moses Hull and Mattie E. Hull are positivly engaged. Mediums, speakers, and many others will be entertained free of charge. Board will be furnished at reduced rates for all who cannot be otherwise entertained. Should the weather be inclement the meeting will be held in the Town Hall. Kingsville is on the Lake Shore and the Nickel Plate railroads, six miles west of Ashtabula. Spiritualists not members of the Conference are invited to enjoy this two days' feast. Per order of the committee,

W. H. Saxton, Pres.
Mattie E. Hull, Cor. Sec.

Mr. Cobb Still in the Husk.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I read with a great deal of interest, in your issue of the 5th inst., Mr. Samuel P. Putnam's article entitled, "What Is Science?" I was pleased with the skill manifested in the arrangement of the bait which was to draw Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews into the discussion. I thought that there was very little doubt about its accomplishing its object, and I hav looked with considerable desire for the Andrusian settlement of the question in dispute. And the Andrusian "dose," as its author aptly calls it, I hav gone through more than once, but it has so far successfully resisted all attempts to make it go through me. At the end of each perusal I could not help wondering whether Mr. Andrews had endeavored to throw light upon the subject and had failed, or had intended to envelop it in obscurity and had succeeded. It is difficult to imagin that with one so well versed in the use of language, the former could hav been the case; yet it is almost impossible to suppose that so astute a thinker can be entertaining the notion that he has answered the question propounded by Mr. Putnam.

Still I may be mistaken. It may be that this article of Mr. Andrews's is a full and complete explanation of the nature and character of science, to those whose mental strength is sufficient to enable them to take the "dose" in the form and quantity offered. The fault may be entirely with me, who, as one of the ordinary people, cannot be expected to understand the cardinary language of those who belong to the higher regions of culture and intelligence. This, however, does not remove the difficulty, nor relieve Mr. Andrews of his obligation, as representativ of the dwellers in the artismal realms of thought, to stoop toward us who are upon the naturismal plane, and raise us up, not perhaps to the hight of his attainment or our ambition, but at any rate as far into the domain of the scientismal betweenity as we, with his assistance, are capable of advancing. He should remember that what he writes in The Truth Seeker is read by large numbers of people whose circumstances in life do not admit of their spending the major portion of their time in the study of metaphysical scientifics, and scientifical metaphysics, nor of the aqueous resultation of the chemical synthesation of these oxygenic and hydrogenic elements.

Notwithstanding the fact that, to the ordinary reader, Mr. Andrews has not enlightened the subject which he has undertaken to expound, he draws his article to a conclusion by asking Mr. Putnam to treat the matter as settled, and proceed to "a definition of metaphysics, to the logic of which he will be willing to adhere." This endeavor to shift the whole question is, no doubt, an ingenious device, yet it is one against which a protest must be entered. It is true that in his attempted definition of sensation, perception, and reason, Mr. Andrews has forcibly illustrated the truth of his statement, that to venture upon definitions "is always a dangerous matter except one is an expert." Still we want light upon the question propounded, and I hope that, as Mr. Putnam has appealed to him, the apostle of Universology will make another and a more successful attempt at definitionizing before the scene is allowed to be shifted to the domain of metaphysics.

"Darwin's Religion."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I notice in your issue of April 28th a short article headed as above, in which certain quotations are taken from a paper by Karl Blind in the Vienna Neue Freie Presse. Karl Blind, as far as your excerpt from his writings goes, entirely ignores the fact that the National Reformer was the English paper that made public the views of Darwin on religion, that it was in a conversation with Dr. Büchner and myself Darwin used the words that Karl Blind has taken bodily from my writings; that the letter quoted by you is a translation from the German of Blind, which is a translation of my English version of the original Dutch letter.

I should be obliged if you, in justice to the paper for which I wrote, and in justice to myself, will insert this note. Yours truly, Edward B. Aveling.

Woman Suffrage in Canada.

From the Independent.

At last the ballot is offered to women without any petition or effort on their part. This is as it should be. Those who are in power owe it to those who are out to do them justice.

Sir John Macdonald's new Franchise bill includes unmarried women and widows for the full franchise in the same terms as men.

Briefly summarized, the bill makes a uniform franchise throughout the Dominion, embracing:

In cities, towns, and villages, owners of real estate to value of $300.

Tenants paying annual rental of $20.

Those having an annual income of $400 and resident a year in the district.

Sons of owners of real estate not otherwise qualified, but resident with their fathers and mothers—one son for every $300 of value.

In counties, owners of real estate valued at not less than $200.

Tenants under lease for not less than a year at annual rental of $20.

Persons having income of $400 and resident for a year in the county.

Farmers' sons, as in Ontario at present.

In all the constituencies unmarried women may vote on the same terms as men. As defined by Sir John Macdonald, farmers' daughters, as well as farmers' sons and the daughters of real estate owners in cities, will hav votes.

This is a great step in advance, though one wishes it had gone a little further and included married women. The Canadian papers accept it with satisfaction. The Toronto Globe says:

"The opinion is that it is a liberal extension of the franchise, for which the public will be grateful."

The Canadian Illustrated News says:

"Sir John Macdonald is renewing his youth like the eagle, and has just made one of those brilliant strokes that stamp the progressiv statesman. His Franchise bill is a genuin surprise, and will be received with universal acclaim. Its main provisions meet the growing requirements of the country, and are in consonance with the aspirations of our people in all the constituencies. Unmarried women may vote on the same conditions as men. As defined by Sir John Macdonald, farmers' daughters, as well as farmers' sons and the daughters of real estate owners in cities, will hav votes. This last clause is strikingly peculiar. Little Canada has taken the lead and set the example in many important matters of late, but it is the first time in the history of legislation that a government, spontaneously and of its own accord, without petitions or pressure from the outside, grants the franchise to women. It is rather late in the session to giv such a measure all the attention that it deserves, but whether it passes or not before adjournment, the seed will hav been sown and the policy of the government will hav been laid down. This is a reform bill in the strictest acceptance of the term, and Sir John Macdonald deserves all the credit which its every measure involves."

The Toronto Globe contains the full text of the bill. With great particularity it defines the classes and persons to be affected by this extension of the suffrage. It uses the words "he," "she," describes an "owner," an "occupant," a "tenant," and a "person" among those whom the new bill enfranchises.

Canadian women are to be congratulated on their prospect of having equal rights secured to them. Sir John Macdonald will deserve, as he will win, the gratitude of all women. Lucy Stone.

Obituary.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I send you the obituary of our aged friend and brother, Church B. Tuttle, of this city. He died Sunday, May 6th, after a short illness. He was born in the state of Maine, August 8, 1802; so he was in the 81st year of his age. He came to Monroe county, Ohio, in 1818, where he resided until 1849, most of the time engaged in the mercantile business, since and to the time of his death mostly in this county and city. His family consisted of four daughters and three sons by a first wife. A second wife survives him, one son and a daughter. He was a kind husband and father, and was probably the oldest Freethinker in this part of the country. He was a Freethinker and Liberalist of the strictest kind; he was one of the first Abolitionists in this part of the country, always sustaining an unimpeachable character for honesty and integrity. The writer when a small boy, more than forty years since, and whilst Brother Tuttle resided in Monroe county, recollects two Methodist ministers who had preached in a circuit in the neighborhood of Brother Tuttle, whilst in a conversation with my father saying "that they had often stopped with him and always found him a genial and kind gentleman, and that the neighbors thought it strange that an Infidel could be so upright and so good a citizen." One of our most wealthy and respectable citizens was heard to remark upon the death of Brother Tuttle: "I knew him, and dealt with him for more than forty years, and always found him strictly honest, and never heard anyone speak of him otherwise than in the kindest terms." When Mr. Bennett was in prison he circulated a petition through this part of the country and obtained many signatures for his release. He was a warm friend of Mr. Bennett's. G. L. Chamberlin.

Will the Church Mind its Own Business?

A few months ago a deacon of the Presbyterian church in Brooklyn named Richardson broke the Sabbath by laying tracks for a street car company with which he was connected. For this he was disciplined by his church. Being a consummate hypocrit, he shed tears before the disciplining committee, promised not to do it again, and then—went out and laid more tracks on Sunday. All of which causes the Graphic to remark:

"The extreme watchfulness which the church exercises over the movements of Deacon Richardson, of Brooklyn, is creating a good deal of talk, and most of it is in sympathy with the deacon. That gentleman might possibly hav laid a railroad track on a long-ago Sunday when there was no necessity for hurrying the work; but he atoned for it with copious tears and was forgiven. It is fair to assume that a man so tender at heart would not again purposely fall into error, and it is not supposed that his judgment was altogether at fault in the first instance—he laid track on Sunday because he thought it was necessary to do so, but the judgment of others finally convinced him, very much against his will, that the necessity was imaginary. There would seem to be little doubt of the necessity in the present instance. The switch that was put in place on Sunday could not hav been established at any other time without great expense to the corporation which Deacon Richardson serves, and without a great deal of purely unnecessary annoyance to the public. What was fractured in thus saving money to the corporation, and at the same time showing deference to the needs and wants of the public? Was it anything more than a sentiment? If it was a belief, how many beliefs are brought to book every day! If it was orthodoxy as to belief, still there are millions that grow weaker every day as to their knowledge of and faith in orthodoxy, and there are millions more who honestly think that orthodoxy is a matter of their own creation, and of no creed or doctrin whatever. These several millions and various millions more hav their own ideas as to Sunday work and Sunday recreation, and there are other millions who do not know when Sunday is and who respect the day the church has picked out for Sunday, merely as a social convenience and out of respect for the church. Now the church will find it necessary some day to respect these millions as they respect it. Honest outside opinion has as many rights as church opinion. Free speech and free action within the law are absolutely necessary to a country that is not ruled by the church.

"The law and the church must learn to respect the people. This is the great essential of a republican form of government. Within twenty-four hours this country could hav a million volunteers against any danger that threatened it, and within three months, as a result of the intelligence that dictated the volunteering, it could hav the best disciplined and the most magnificent fighting army in the world. Public sentiment would create such an army within the time specified, and yet the church that prosecutes Deacon Richardson is trying to put down public sentiment. The penal code is laboring against it. The idea of government, in church and state alike, runs at stated periods to the severity of Puritanism, whereas the great success of our system shows more and more, day in and day out, that the best government is the one that governs least. The people are willing to fight for the rights which they hav established; but they are equally willing to fight against intolerance in church and state. They are able to behave themselvs without being obliged to do so, and they would like to hav that fact understood.

"There is a too literal interpretation of the declaration that a man cannot serve both God and Mammon. He must inevitably serve the latter as well as the former, if he be a good citizen, and if he does not, he and his children will surely come to want. Church is church, but business is business; and if Deacon Richardson is expelled from his denomination because he has faithfully served his corporation and the public, so much the worse for the denomination."

Lyman Beecher and Hosea Ballou, completely armed with Bible knowledge and textual missils, once met to compare Calvinism and Universalism. After several apostolic blows from each, shrewdly parried by the other, Dr. Beecher opened at the ninth Psalm and read: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." "There, sir, the wicked are in hell; get them out of it if you can." Hosea Ballou calmly turned to the twentieth chapter of John's Revelation and read, "Death and hell delivered up the dead that were in them." "There," said Ballou, "they are out; get them in again if you can."

CHAPTER XXXV.

CONCERNING THE SECTS AND MISFORTUNES OF THE CHRISTIANS UP TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF MOHAMMEDANISM.

Disputes, excommunications, and persecutions did not cease to overwhelm the Christian church. It was not sufficient to have united in Jesus the divine with the human nature; it is to be observed that the question whether Mary was the mother of God began now to be agitated. The title of "Mother of God" appeared blasphemous to Nestorius, bishop of Constantinople. His opinion was probably true; but as he had been a persecutor, he found bishops who persecuted him in turn. They drove him from his throne at the Council of Ephesus, and then thirty bishops in the same council deposed St. Cyril, the mortal enemy of Nestorius, and all the East was divided.

This was not sufficient. It was necessary to know whether Jesus had two natures, double personalties, two souls, and two wills; if, when he performed the animal functions of a man, the divine part was connected with it or not. All these questions only deserved to be treated by Rabelais, or by our dear Dean Swift, or by Punch.* This made three parties in the empire, which were caused by the fanaticism of a miserable monk, the enemy of Nestorius, who opposed the other monks. We see in all these disputes monastic orders opposed to brother orders, one sect to another, eunuchs to eunuchs, councils to councils, and often emperors to emperors.

While the descendants of Camillus, of Brutus, of Scipio, Cato, mixed with Greeks and barbarians, wallowed in the mire of theology, and while a spirit of insanity had spread over the face of the Roman empire, the robbers of the north, who only knew how to fight, began to dismember the colossal structure then beginning to be feeble and ridiculous.

When the Christians were conquered it was necessary to govern the fanatic people, to manage their religion, and guide the beasts of burden by the halter which they had made for themselvs.

The bishops of each sect tried to seduce their conquerors; thus the Ostrogoths, Visgoths, and the Burgundy princes became Arians, while the Franks were Athanasians.†

The Roman empire in the West having been destroyed, it was divided into provinces drenched with human blood. They continued to anathematize each other with a saint-like reciprocity. There had never before been such confusion or such miserable debasement in religion as during the time of the empire.

The worthless emperors of Constantinople always pretended to believe in their rights over Italy and the other provinces which they no longer had. In the seventh century there sprang up a new religion which almost ruined the Christian sects in Asia, Africa, and in a great portion of Europe. This was Mohammedanism.

Mohammedanism is, without a doubt, more rational than Christianity. The Mohammedans do not worship one Jew when they despise the whole race. They do not call a Jewess the mother of God. They do not commit the most outrageous blasphemy in saying that there are three gods in one. In fine, they do not eat the God whom they worship and then render unto the goddess Cloacina their creator. Their only creed is the belief in an all-powerful God; and if they had not added that Mohammed is his prophet, it would have been a religion as pure and beautiful as that of the Chinese scholars. That was simple Theism, natural religion, and consequently the only true religion. But some say that the Mussulmans are to a certain extent excusable in calling Mohammed the agent of God, since, in fact, he taught the Arabs that there was only one God.

The Mussulmans, by sword and by word, silenced Christianity even to the very gates of Constantinople; and the Christians, driven to a few provinces in the West, continued to dispute and mangle each other.

Fanaticism.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Did you ever know of any Infidel that was infatuated "by faith" in mysticism? Does history giv us any account of a Freethinker that ever evinced any fanaticism under the control of Christianity, Mormonism, or modern Mediumism? Fanaticism is infatuation crystallized. It is a mental disease, a state of insanity of varying degrees, induced "by faith" in phenomena alleged to be mystical, wonderful, or miraculous. And, while we may concede that some of the (otherwise) best people hav become more or less infatuated with a false idea, yet it is true that this condition of the human mind obliterates the sense of justice and leads to the perpetration of crime. Chas. H. Freeman and his wife were Methodists (as they are to this day) when they murdered their child, May 4, 1879. And so were the twenty of their Christian brethren fanatics when, the next day, they went to Freeman's house and saw the corpse of the little girl that Freeman and his wife had the evening before prayed over and then murdered; and they went away and concealed that atrocious murder, believing it was done for the "glory of God," as they said.

About the same time a Christian in Chickopee, Mass., shot his three daughters under a similar delusion, to secure their immediate admission to that "Paradise" which an ancient fanatic had affirmed he had been "caught up" to (2 Cor. xii, 1). And was not that Christian commentator, Dr. Adam Clarke, also a fanatic when he indorsed the fanaticism of St. Paul? For in his comment on Paul's saying that he had been "caught up to the third heaven," when he was bamboozled in a state of trance, evinces, says Dr. Clarke, "the highest degree of divine inspiration." And, moreover, what of those Christians who pin their "faith" upon Dr. Clarke or St. Paul? Nor is it possible to show that every Christian is not more or less fanatical who relies upon Dr. Clarke, Wesley, or Jesus, in matters in respect to which no human being has any mental capacity of knowing anything whatever.

Lunacy, or fanaticism, ignores human reason. It blots out a sense of right in regard to property, ideas, and life, and it often culminates in falsehood, murder, and suicide. In argument, it obfuscates the judgment and incapacitates its victim for perceiving the force of human reason. Nor need it here be attempted to be shown why the priesthood are so very slow in appreciating the fact that fanaticism is so rarely found outside the ranks of mysticism or some form of mediumship assumed between humanity and gods or ghosts. Mystical phenomena, or phenomena believed to be "miraculous" (produced by forms of force of which nothing is known), inspire the "faith" that results in fanaticism. Hence, now and then we find a doctor, or one assuming this title, claiming the discovery of a "Royal Road" to theurgy. In 1842 I attended a course of lectures in New York, and one of the most significant and often repeated statements the doctor made was:

"That in one month, by psychometry, the simplest means imaginable, the lecturer had discovered this knowledge of man, physically, morally, and intellectually; the physiology of the brain, the sublime science of the mind, learned in an hour's observation, made the substitute for heavy folios of reasoning."

The lecturer circulated his book among his audience, and from which I here quote a single sentence:

"Such has been my progress that but few important principles hav been left for future discovery" ("Sketches of Buchanan's Discoveries in Neurology," p. 70).

But I am not advised as to whether or no this doctor did not himself make a "more important discovery" when, by his "psychometry," he indorsed the bogus "spirit photograph" of Mary, the reputed mother of Jesus, which, by psychometry, he pronounced "a genuin photograph of that noble woman."

Another illustrativ case I will mention, and allow the doctor, who dubbs himself an "M.D.," to tell the story. He visited me in 1857 in Boston, when I explained to him my idea of selfhood, self-growth, the self-healing of wounds, and the self-cure of disease by nutrition without medicin. And he is welcome to all the success he may meet with in the use of that idea, under the name of Vita-pathy. He knows enough to make a new term by uniting Greek and Latin. And, as to his fanaticism, in ignoring death and teaching his patients how they are to become immortal without dying, I will allow him to speak for himself. He has sent out a large number of circulars, and I quote from the one last received:

"Hear what the public press, learned physicians, ministers, scientists, and the people say of Dr. Campbell's greatest of all discoveries. Inspired theologians and learned scientists hav been looking for a new power, higher than ever known before, to solve the problem of physical and spiritual life, and maintain and perpetuate both alive together, and thus practically banish death and bring in the millennium.

"The learned and experienced LaRoy Sunderland says that there is a power in nature greater than any yet discovered, which is now ready to dawn upon the world, and that Dr. J. B. Campbell, of Cincinnati, the founder of the vita-pathic system, calls it 'Vita-pathy.'"

If this be not infatuation and fanaticism, what shall we call it? I never used the above language—never; and the only time that I ever referred to this man Campbell was in my article on Ideology in Mind and Matter, Sept. 30, 1882, in which I gave his name with two others who had adopted my idea of self-induction, under new terms, and said I would not criticise them for so doing. Here are the identical words I used:

"Dr. W. B. Fahanstock calls it 'Statuvalence.' Dr. J. B. Campbell, of Cincinnati, calls it 'Vita-pathy,' uniting Greek and Latin terms in one word. Dr. Campbell visited me in Boston in 1857. Dr. C. A. Green, of Lancaster, Pa., calls it 'Omnipathy.' All right; I do not criticise terms."

And now it is manifest that Mr. Campbell did not appreciate the hint that I suggested as to his scholarship, in joining a Greek and a Latin term into one English word. And I can account for this attempt of his to make it appear that I had indorsed his nonsense only by supposing him a victim to infatuation, similarly as many another good man has been.

Mr. Townsend's Doctrin of Mind and Matter.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav your letter of 2d inst. in which you name that "my doctrin of Mind and Matter"—involving the origin of the potency of unconscious matter—"is abstruse;" while I claim that such doctrin, on the contrary, is obvious; because it is explainable and explained by me on scientific principles, and by proper attention, is readily understandable and found to be adequate for all phenomena. You know that all the potentiality infused into our bodies and some other matter, for art works, has its origin exclusivly in our minds, by their inventions and will-force power controling such unconscious materials; while it is obvious that such materials could not, themselvs, effect such works, and therefore they hav no such self-belonging potentiality. Now if art works cannot exist without our minds being in co-operation with such unconscious materials, to giv them potential direction; is not universal unconscious matter equally important for nature's greater works, without mind co-operation to giv potency, or direction, to its know-nothing doings? Thus it is obvious that an Infinit mind, in nature and an indispensable part of it, is as much a necessity for its great mechanisms and necessary adaptable conditions of everything, as are our minds for the lesser works of art.

Now let me name that the assumed origin of our minds—by some—as the product of our brains, is truly abstruse, because it is inexplicable that unconscious matter can become thinking, inventiv, conscious matter, with will-power to control its origin, or source. Thus claiming that such two infinitly different characteristics are not only the same in origin, but are convertible, that the infinitly inferior may become the infinitly superior; and, thus, that mind, in its origin, is no greater than unconscious matter—earth, air, water, etc.—being vivified and made conscious, thinking and inventing, by what? and how? while spirit mind is nothing, non-material, and so is not dynamical.

Again, there can be nothing more abstruse, inexplicably enigmatical, and impossible of comprehension, or adequacy, than the Atheistic claim that unconscious know-nothing matter, of itself, its own property or quality, has the potency for everything that exists; while our minds—so effectiv in designs and works—cannot conceive or fully understand such perfect machinery and adaptation as nature exhibits, which thus lowers our minds even below that of universal unconscious matter—an anomaly and degradation we would not like to hav others apply to us, if that potency has no infinit intelligent origin.

Of all the doctrins of the existence and character of an Infinit mind, and its individualization in finite beings, my doctrin is the most natural and adequate, and is, therefore, the least abstruse; because I claim that such infinit controling mind—acting for a purpose—is a part of nature acting dynamically; and is the most important principle of two distinct primordial elements—conscious and unconscious matter—comprising the universe of cause and effects; which is not only the origin of our minds, as individualized parts of the same conscious primordial element, but is the only conceivable adequate origin of the mechanisms and adaptations of nature.

A primal cause, or force, must be vastly different from the materials it forces into phenomenal effects; therefore they are not identical or convertible. So the matter of such effects cannot be its own cause of actions, or hav its own, self-possessed, potentiality; but must receive that potentiality from conscious matter, having a purpose in intelligent design and will-force, for dynamical executions—as finite minds portray in their effects upon unconscious matter.

Thus it must be acknowledged, I believe, that the two adverse theories of the existence and origin of finite minds, viz., spirit, and function of gross brain-matter, are both vastly more abstruse and wholly inadequate. The first being immaterial and so is nothing as a dynamical force; and the second as an anomalous conversion of unconscious know-nothing matter, into conscious, thinking, inventing, and effectiv will-force minds, is really inconceivable. Such two adverse claims do not admit of any explanation, or of adequacy to the one, nor of the cause of the convertibility of the other. Therefore these two doctrins are wholly abstruse, inexplicably concealed, and anomalous.

I ask you, in friendly candor, to inform me which you now believe is the most natural, effectiv, and adequate doctrin of the cause of the existence of all phenomena, and the probable origin of all finite minds; and also of the most likely source of all the potential laws of unconscious matter, I deeming it impossible that force, of any kind, can originate in unconscious matter; and that all potentiality must originate in conscious matter, having an intelligent purpose and will-force stimulous for action; as we know to be the facts for finite limited works.

Your position is an important one to diffuse and infuse right thinking, in correct views of nature; its evident intelligent primal force; our limited co-creativ minds, their origin and associate relations to other matter, and their perpetuity as elemental forces, are highly important subjects to instruct our race, and so to promote thought and consequent discarding of superstitions, supernaturalisms, and all forms of existing degrading creeds and dogmas—falsely called religion. Thus to imbue mankind with a dignified rational love of nature, and its intelligent author; with a grateful appreciation of our individuality, for all time, as immortal participants in a bounteous disposition of matter, into all beautiful nature—which constitutes creation—as adequate for all intelligent and rightful uses.

Such truths are better than old Theistic fictions, or the extreme opposit of inadequate and unsatisfying Atheism, or of know-nothing Agnosticism. Desiring only the discrimination of truth, I would like you to publish this short paper—in aid of the same—at your earliest convenience. CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

More Materialistic Immortality.

To ARTHUR B. BRADFORD: At a time when people little understood what was to become of their bodies after death, they associated the idea that at some time in the far future the body and mind would again be united into one and the same being and remain so throughout eternity. After discovering that the body is not destroyed after death, but that it is merely transformed by nature into some other form of life, they entertained the idea that the mind or soul only, and in a ghostlike form, would enjoy immortality. This recalls to our memory how loth we are to part with anything appertaining to ourselvs, especially if we imagin those parts to be eternally destroyed. Once knowing their destiny, our anxiety ceases, and we submit ourselvs. How few to-day are unwilling at death to giv up the body to the dust from whence it came. But the mind, "ay, there's the rub!" Unless we first settle the idea as to what is to become of our mind after death, as satisfactorily as we hav that of the future destiny of the body, manhood cannot willingly submit themselvs to the inevitable.

I read your communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 28th ult. with much interest. It is the first I ever read bordering so nearly upon my views of the subject.

Mind is material—at least it is a property of matter; all matter, together with the properties thereof, is indestructible, therefore mind is indestructible. "Bennett cites the experiment of a chemist who sends a current of electricity through a solution of nitrate of silver. Immediately the silver is separated from the nitric acid which holds it in solution, and from one of the wires conducting the electric current, a beautiful tree begins to sprout under the law of crystallization; branches of the metal are thrown out and covered with seeming foliage" just as a plant perfects itself under the summer's light and heat." The nitrate of silver performs a special function, which neither the silver nor the nitric acid, when once separated, can perform. In this separation neither of the parts is destroyed, and both can then perform their own separate functions only. This nitric acid may become so mixed with other nitric acid that the same which a certain solution contained may never in millions of ages come together again.

The same may be said of the animal body. Nature performs similar experiments upon every being. The body and mind together perform the functions of life; but neither, being once separated by the stroke of death, can do so. And since the nitric acid may mingle with other nitric acid, why may not the mind, or the material property thereof, in a similar manner, mingle with the same of other minds? Mind is a property of nature, the same as magnetism, electricity, etc., are attributes of nature; and therefore may undergo transformation, but cannot be destroyed. These properties of the mind undoubtedly exist in nature and surround us, in an ethereal state. They are attributes of the food we eat, the water we drink, and the air we breathe; and are thus introduced into the system, taken up into the nerves, and there perform the functions of mind, while the coarser matter in the physical system at the same time fulfils its duties toward sustaining life. And since the grosser matter contains in itself properties, some for flesh, some for muscles, some for bones, some for brain, etc., why may not the ethereal mind matter in itself contain the different properties of which each in its special faculty performs its proper functions, as memory, reason, conscience, etc.?

Because matter is in existence, and since we cannot conceive how it can be destroyed, or how it could hav been created, we arrived at the conclusion that it is eternal. Likewise organic life is as indestructible as matter; organic life is in existence as well as matter; hence, it is no illogical reasoning to deduce from these premises the conclusion that organic life is eternal, although, perhaps, at times very minute or ethereal.

When nature wishes to create a human or any other being, she unites to the material body the properties of mind, beginning with the earliest stages of development; and ceasing, if allowed her course, after eighty or a hundred years only; when she again dissolves and separates these parts, by a kindly death, only to soon after again exhibit them, in a new form of existence, upon the stages of life.

Thus the immortality, or future destiny, of the mind is similar to that of the body. This, my friend, is immortality without a tinge of superstition; and is it not as much as can be wished for? It will cheer the hearts of many to know that nature will create of our bodies and minds, at some future date, other bodies and minds to enjoy the pleasures the improvements of time may bring us. We ourselvs may, innumerable numbers of times, be benefited by the improvements and knowledge we may giv the world as the result of our labor.

Likewise, if we lead an immoral life, by which in any way the happiness and progress of futurity will be hindred, we cannot escape meeting with these hindrances. Particles of the same mind and body which penned Shakspere's plays are to-day enjoying his very works. The same may be said of the departed authors of every other good work. Particles of the minds and bodies of the inventors of our railroads, steamboats, etc., are to-day being carried from clime to clime. And the same life properties which our revolutionary heroes of a hundred years ago possessed are to-day, in some life form or other, enjoying the independence they acquired and for which they bled. I fail, however, to perceive how the mind can, after death, liv on and on, in a ghost-like or a "one-being-like" state; and why not return to its sphere, and there mingle and interpenetrate with other mind property, as all other properties of nature do; and there await its turn to be recalled by nature into activity again? It is contrary to nature's laws. She does not treat any other of her properties so; why then should the mind be an exception?

Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that nature did not use the same material twice; that the body of each and every being, after its life course has ended, is set aside, either into a heaven or any other place; would not then nature's stock of life-sustaining material soon be exhausted? The same may as appropriately be said of the mind, or soul, or spirit, or whatever you may wish to name it.

One more thought upon the subject, and I shall bring this communication to a close. It is plainly evident that the mind and body, if rightly exercised, improve proportionately until the decline of life, when both again proportionately retrograde. And since our physical system requires to be continually supplied with life-sustaining substances, it seems reasonable that our mentality should be subject to the same law.

About every seven years or less, as we are told, every particle of matter composing the human system is exchanged for new matter. This process is being carried on so slow, that the careless observer cannot easily observe the change. Persons afflicted with a disease hav been known to hav suffered half a lifetime, perhaps twenty or thirty years. Although the system, during all this time, exchanged every portion of its matter several times, the disease still remained in the blood as before. This is caused by the new particles of matter introduced into the system being continually infected by the old and corrupt ones not yet expelled. Now if all this is true, and experience givs evidence it is, why not the mind undergo similar changes during a life's course, and still retain its identity, perhaps, in a similar manner as in the above case the disease is retained in the system? At any rate, it does not seem improbable that such may be the case. JOHN K. KIRT.

Jesuses.

Perhaps there has been quite enough said upon the great Passion Play which the combined efforts of two cities succeeded, at least for the time, in suppressing. Yet I cannot but express my surprise that so much effort should be made to stop a living representation, when the shop windows of every Catholic undertaker in the city has every possible form of the Jesus, in plaster, from an infant up to the sad and tragic taking off of that very-much-talked-of being. I see him as a smiling infant surrounded by worshipers; I see him painfully climbing the steep and stony hill, bearing the cross, the blood oozing from the thorns in his tender brow, with the most terrible agony depicted upon his face; I see a tender, beautiful woman bathing his feet with oil; I see innumerable representations of him fastened to the cross, the blood streaming from his hands, his feet, his side, his brow, while the most terrible agony is depicted on his countenance. Again, after death, I see him stretched at full length, the ghastly wounds dripping red, while the face retains all the evidence of the intense suffering to which he has been subjected. I see him, limp and lifeless, stretched upon the lap of one of the faithful women, while she gazes upward with a face from which all hope seems fled, and weeps in agony. It seems that ingenuity has been exhausted in finding postures in which to represent this mythical tragedy of so long ago.

The reason I was so much surprised was to see such terrible representations of this same passion, while a real, living, breathing, intellectual representation is forbidden. Can it be that the Catholic church has a patent and will not allow an infringement—and at the same time calling on the Protestant church to protect them in this patent? They state as a reason for stopping the play that Christian sensibilities were shocked. So they might be. My sensibilities were shocked at sight of the bloody Jesuses in plaster. I hav met a number of good citizens of New York whose sensibilities were shocked by them. Now, if the Protestant church will join me in convincing the people of the debasing influence of the Jesuses in plaster, I will join them heartily in trying to show that the Passion Play is a silly waste of time in trying to perpetuate a myth, and that there is but little in it that can minister to the higher needs of humanity.

If the Protestant church will giv up their "idols," and spread knowledge instead of superstition, they will soon find their morbid desire for witnessing the suffering of Jesus giving way to a desire for nobler things. There will then be no demand for Passion Plays, and when there is no demand there will be none produced. They hav themselvs to blame by keeping up the natural belief in the conception by a ghost and the death of a God. L. E. HUGGINS.

No Conscience.

There is a satisfaction that every one feels in having done what they believed to be their duty, especially when tempted to do otherwise. This feeling you can call by the name of conscience if you like, but that would giv it no more importance to me. What I am dealing with at present is what might be called the orthodox conscience. They (the orthodox) speak of it as the only thing to giv people knowledge of what is right or wrong. They say, "He is always right who heeds the dictates of conscience." In the way they talk of it as the monitor within one would infer that it is something associated with our being, independent of physical matter—something giving us happiness or remorse, according to our virtues. Now I believe in no such conscience to keep us from wrong indulgences. A person may deliberately, and with a sense of duty pressing him, do what he afterward finds to be wrong. Who of us has not often been sincere in doing that which, when truth was revealed, proved to be a violation of moral or physical law?

If there was such a thing as conscience to check us in our waywardness, there would be no necessary failures, and morally all would be equal; neither would there be any difference of opinion in regard to religion, and the virtuous would merit nothing for their attainments.

And again, if there is such a wonderful conscience of which the orthodox people tell us, they may as well throw up their business and let conscience do the work. Those who believe in the conscience theory often mistake what might be called a warring of the mental faculties for the admonition of conscience. I wish to be understood that by the term "warring of the faculties," I mean a desire to gratify certain ones in excess, or those in an abnormal condition, with the intellectual faculties remonstrating. Alimentivness may be over-developed, causing an almost ungovernable appetite for liquor; or acquisitivness, putting a person in the way of temptation to cheat his neighbor for a dime. In opposition, reason thunders in his ear, "Restraint." And if the reasoning is discarded, then follows remorse, not of conscience, but the mind. There are mental faculties which, if fully developed, giv man a desire to do right, but reason only can giv us any knowledge of what is right—of the moral duty to ourselvs and fellow-men.

The orthodox people seem to manifest the most ingenuity in devising plans for throwing reason aside. They hav their Christ, conscience, experience, Lord, and Holy Ghost to keep them in the path of duty. And if they receive so much divine help, which they do not deny, then none deserves punishment more for duty neglected or wickedness done. OSCAR A. BUCK.

That Reform Association Again.

Our warning against the association of Christians who hav taken upon themselvs the labor of subverting this government was timely, as we see that one of the secretaries has since held a convention in St. Joseph, Mo. Some of the sentiments uttered at that meeting are so utterly contrary to the spirit of our institutions, so far from the intentions of the founders, and so atrocious that we again call the attention of Liberals to this clique of fanatics and beg that it be closely watched and promptly thwarted wherever it meets.

In opening the conventions the Rev. M. A. Gault, district secretary, made an address, stating the objects of the convention. He said:

"To unite and crystallize the public sentiment of St. Joseph and vicinity on this great issue between Christianity and Liberalism, as to which should control the nation, our government must recognize the law of Christian morality. It could not respect every individual's right of conscience."

That is the gist of his remarks. A Rev. Mr. Powers followed him. He began by complaining of the scant attendance, and endeavored to bring the movement up to a respectable point by saying that all great movements had their origin in minorities. This "was the cause of God and must succeed." He was not very happy in choosing illustrations, for he cited the case of Galileo and the spread of his astronomical ideas. But he forgot to say that it was the fact that the church had temporal power in Europe, precisely as his society is endeavoring to procure it in the United States, that made it possible for Galileo to be imprisoned for heresy.

If this is "God's movement," then the interests of that individual are in direct antagonism to the interests of man. Every government that has allied itself with the church has been a persecuting government, and has burnt, hung, and imprisoned men and women for opinion's sake. Christianity has never been allied with government in this country except in a few states, but in those there has been no exception to the rule. In Massachusetts heretical Quakers were whipped and hung, in Connecticut men were jailed for violating Sabbath rules, in Maryland the law punished blasphemy with death, in New Hampshire one religious sect is excluded from office, in New York and other states Atheists hav been forbidden to testify in courts. But all over Europe Christianity has at one time or another been the practical government. And in every country has there been bloodshed and cruelty intolerable. In France, in the Netherlands, in Germany, in Spain, in Italy, in Austria, in Russia, in England, Ireland, and Scotland, in every little principality, and in almost every town, certainly in every city of note, those who spoke disrespectfully of this God who had been put in legal statutes were persecuted without mercy. Victor Hugo estimated the number of church victims at five millions, and this is certainly not an overestimate.

The declaration of this minister that "it [our government] could not respect every individual's right of conscience," is an avowal of great significance, as being a plain statement, made among friends, of intentions to restrict freedom of speech and thought as soon as the legal means to effect that end are at hand. This is strictly a Christian method of replying to opponents. To deny a legally recognized God would be unlawful—would be blasphemy. With God in the Constitution and blasphemy laws on the statute books, every Atheist could be imprisoned, every Agnostic suppressed, every Freethinker silenced. "Blasphemy," says Ingersoll, "marks the point where argument stops and slander begins. In old times it was the signal for throwing stones, for gathering fagots, and for tearing flesh." A few years ago this society held a convention in this city, at which one of the ministers said: "What are the rights of the Atheist? I would tolerate him as I would tolerate a poor lunatic. I would tolerate him as I would tolerate a conspirator. He may liv and go free, hold his lands and enjoy his home—he may even vote; but for any higher or more advanced citizenship he is, as I hold, utterly disqualified." The convention at St. Louis has gone further, and now refuses to recognize even this limited right of the individual. It would make the Atheist a legal outcast. The eloquent words of Col. Ingersoll are truer than ever: "Giv the church a place in the Constitution, let her touch once more the sword of power, and the priceless fruit of all the ages will turn to ashes on the lips of men." With the amendments these ministers seek it would be but a little while ere the old times were revived. This sentiment would fit the mouth of the pope better than that of a follower of Luther, whose contention for individual right of conscience was the starting-point of religious freedom. It shows the unsuitableness of Christians that however loud they may claim liberty for themselvs, its followers and devotees are unwilling to accord it to others. Their humanitarian professions are not worth the wind wasted in giving them utterance.

This movement so craftily engineered by these ministers is but the culminating point of a long series of encroachments by the church upon our once secular government. We hav already too many practical recognitions of the Christian religion, and the church has too much aid and comfort given it by the various states. Her encroachments as summed up recently by Mr. J. B. Wolff are:

1. In the recognition of the orthodox deity in every bill of rights, including the Declaration of Independence, and nearly every, if not every, state constitution.
2. In the administration of oaths, in all courts, upon the Bible.
3. In Sunday laws.
4. In chaplains, state and national.
5. In laws against profanity and blasphemy.
6. In untaxed church property.
7. In charitable donations to churches.
8. In what is known as the "Comstock law," procured and executed under the inspiration of religious intolerance and bigotry, and in utter disregard of sound morality.
9. In church domination in Indian affairs by a supervising commission.
10. In the payment of missionaries out of public money; that is, the selection by the churches of Indian agents, who teach religion with handicrafts; and for the sole purpose of mitigating missionary expenses.

These are certainly serious departures from the original charter granted to the Federal government, and should be seriously considered by the statesmen, if there are any, at present controling our national affairs. If the churches were reasonable they would be satisfied with these stolen points; but having had a taste of power, having felt a little of the divine peace and grace that comes from persecuting their fellow-man, these followers of the sword-bringer are eager for more blood. The cries of imprisoned heretics are music sweet to heavenly ears.

Of the evening session of this revolutionary convention we extract the following account from the St. Joseph Gazette:

"The demands of Liberalism were discussed by Rev. R. H. Barnes, of Tarkio, Mo. He said the Reform Association simply aimed to maintain Christian institutions as they hav existed in our country from the beginning. Liberalism aimed to revolutionize our country by abolishing all these. These demands of Liberalism are simply the enemies of Christianity plotting against the Lord. Christianity is this nation's birthright, and these Liberalists seek to rob us of it.

"Rev. George W. Miller said: 'If Liberalism triumphs, our government and our liberties go down. It is not a question of is there a hell or a heaven; it is a question on which this nation's life hangs. We must listen to these truths from the lips of men, or you will hear them from the lips of cannon; you will read them in the glare of the torch that will lay low these magnificent structures that rear their spires heavenward. May God help us to seriously consider our duty.'

"Rev. Harris said: 'It is a sign of danger that Herr Most lectures in our city to-morrow night, but there is a worse danger than that. It is the Liberalism in our churches that lurks behind pulpits, that steals the livery of heaven to serve the devil.'

"The chairman, Dr. Miller, said: 'Liberalism is not a pretty bird. It is Materialism in high and holy revolt against God; a Liberalism that protests against our Sunday laws; that wants unrestrained license for every lust.' He spoke of how girls in seminaries were made the prey of these cormorants. 'You may think, sir, but think pure thoughts. Don't send your contagion into my home. He that cannot see that we are approaching the great conflict of the ages is blind. He that cannot hear the tramp of coming millions is deaf.'"

We are glad to record the protest of a lawyer of the Unitarian Society, who told the convention that he wanted the liberty to think as he pleased. But the ministers boldly avow that this is just what they propose to prohibit so far as they can.

The buncombe of the Rev. Mr. Miller is a good specimen of pious lying. The Liberals are the preservers of liberty, the Christians the destroyers. Mr. Miller's idea of liberty is the right of the church people to do as they please—and force every one else to do as they please too. Mr. Miller's right to worship is as clear as our right to not worship. Both are natural, inherent, and inalienable privileges, and any church that infringes them is a tyrant. Jefferson and Paine and Franklin furnished the idea upon which this government is built. They were all Infidels. "They knew that to put God in the Constitution was to put man out. They knew that the recognition of a deity would be seized upon by fanatics and zealots as a pretext for destroying liberty of thought. They knew the terrible history of the church too well to place in her keeping, or in the keeping of her God, the sacred rights of man. They intended that all should hav the right to worship or not to worship; that our laws should make no distinction on account of creed. They intended to found and frame a government for man, and for man alone. They wished to preserve the individuality and liberty of all; to prevent the few from governing the many, and the many from persecuting and destroying the few." The principle of the entire separation of church and state has been recognized by all the best of our citizens to be the only safe plan. As soon as ecclesiasticism gets power it begins to persecute. Grant, although a Protestant, recognized this when he said, "Keep the church and state forever separate." It was recognized also by Judge Welsh of the Supreme Court of Ohio, who said that "when Christianity asks the aid of government, beyond impartial protection, it disowns itself."

Mr. Harris's assertion that there is Liberalism concealed in the churches, and that it is disintegrating them, is true, and we can only regret that the holders of Liberal views hav not the courage to boldly avow them.

If Materialism is in revolt against God, it is God's own fault. All he has to do is to make himself manfest to win the respect now denied him—that is, if he is worthy of respect. Certainly the God depicted by the Jewish Bible is worthy of nothing but execration. The coupling of the name Liberalism with the alleged "cormorants," who prey on girls, is an insult none but a depraved Christian would utter. It is worthy the source. We cannot blame a jackass for braying nor be surprised at ministers lying. It is a part of the education given at the charity theological schools. It is their business to traduce the character of their opponents; with them slander is argument. We can only pity them that their brains are so weak.

The efforts of the Protestants to put God in the Constitution are as full of danger to our mental and personal liberties as the great growth of the Catholic church. Both must be met by the Infidels, the real protectors and preservers of our rights, by concentrated and organized opposition. Absolute divorce of church and state must be maintained, and the schools of all the states secularized as completely as a part now are. This is political work for the League. Let the League come to the front.

The Fourth Volume of "Around the World."

We would like to receive more orders for the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's trip around the world. There are a few hundred yet who hav had the three volumes but hav not got this last one. We will promptly forward it to all such on receipt of $1.50. We hav also about one hundred complete sets on our shelvs, and would like to see them sold, so that a second edition may be brought out. Complete sets for $6.50 in cloth; $9.50 in leather and red edges; $10.50 in morocco and gilt edges. This last work of its noted author has met with commendation wherever it has been read.

The Monument.

During the summer the contemplated monument to Mr. Bennett must be erected, and we hav been in consultation with several builders upon the subject. We find that a plain, substantial, lasting granit structure, with a suitable inclosure of the plot, will cost from one thousand to twelve hundred dollars. This includes the lettering of the inscription and some extracts from Mr. Bennett's writings. The committee having the matter in charge will soon decide upon the design and the contract be given out. As yet there is not money enough subscribed, and we ask the friends to make up the necessary amount without delay, as within the next three months it will hav to be paid. The money in hand stands:

Several friends hav written us that we could call upon them for various sums when the work was ready to proceed, and we now ask them to remit the amount of their pledges.

It was proposed by the committee to prepare a memorial volume to present to those who gave five dollars, as a memento, but that will hav to be given up, as that alone would consume several hundred dollars. A fine lithograph, however, will be prepared and sent to each subscriber, which can be done at a comparativly small expense (about one hundred and fifty dollars), and we think enough can be sold to pay the cost.

The committee wish the erection of this monument to be a spontaneous expression of love and reverence for Mr. Bennett, a tribute to him as a worker for human freedom—as a man who did not shrink from a prison when liberty was assailed. It is not designed to make it elaborate or costly, but rather a structure that shall endure and bear his name on to future generations. In this the committee need the help of his hundreds—yes, thousands—of friends.

Observing Sunday in New York.

The Tribune is entitled to credit for collecting a great mass of facts regarding Sunday keeping. These facts are valuable, as they prove the constantly lessening hold the church has upon the people. The statistics show that one-half of the population of this city are not members of any church and do not attend religious services. On a pleasant day in warm weather about 75,000 people go out of the city to the various resorts near at hand. Tens of thousands pass the time on and about the Harlem River, and in the big beer-gardens which abound in certain parts of the town. Tens of thousands more spend hours in Central Park, and in other parks and squares. The bar-rooms and beer-saloons do a flourishing business, though in a less obtrusiv way than on other days. Attempts to enforce the excise laws are successful only to a limited extent. In the evening, concerts and other entertainments in theaters and halls draw large audiences. For amusement, for all lighter forms of recreation, and for dissipation of every kind, there is the widest opportunity. For instruction and improvement outside the churches, in the way of reading-rooms, free libraries, etc., the provision is extremely meager.

Seven Protestant clergymen were invited by the Tribune to comment upon the above facts. The Rev. Dr. H. C. Potter (Episcopal) admits that the popular tendency in the matter of Sunday observance is unquestionably toward the secularization of the day; that this characteristic is likely to become more and more pronounced, and he attributes it to the large influx of foreigners. He thinks, as do all the others with the exception of that old Puritan, Howard Crosby, that Sunday laws should be passed, if at all, with great care. Crosby (Presbyterian) would hav the laws enacted with stringency and enforced rigidly. Crosby would hav made a good aid to Torquemada.

Robert Collyer's utterances are in keeping with his liberal Unitarian doctrins. He insists that the day is one for rest, recreation, or work, as one pleases, and would let the church stand on its own merits as an attraction to draw the people. If they do not care to attend upon the preachers he would place no restrictions upon their liberty to go to the theater or music hall.

The other ministers who publish their opinions vary in orthodoxy all the way from Crosby to Collyer. They agree that enforced observance of Sunday is a failure, and, while lamenting, accept the inevitable. The people hav left these ministers in the rear, and now they are running to catch up.

One fact brought out prominently is that the church has succeeded in shutting up the libraries, museums, and reading-rooms, leaving only the theaters, music-halls, and beer saloons open. It would hav closed these too if it could, but the liquor dealers hav as much money as the preachers and defeat them on their own grounds. The pleaders for the reading-rooms, libraries, and museums are poor, and belonging neither to the churches nor the dram shops, hav been unheeded by the legislators. It is a burning shame that in this great city the choice of recreation lies only between the stupefying and demoralizing grog shop and the outrageous and pernicious teachings of hellfire and damnation.

The Liberal Club.

The three hundred and first meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was interesting on account of its diversity. A certain—or rather uncertain—Mr. Fairfield had been engaged to occupy the platform on the evening of the 18th; but as he did not make himself visible at the appointed time the chairman, Mr. Wakeman, announced that the club would be obliged to fall back upon its own inherent resources. These proved adequate to the occasion. The subject which Mr. Fairfield had agreed to speak upon was the "Microscopic World." Four speakers were named to occupy the hour assigned to the absent lecturer of the evening. Mr. Andrews took the floor first. He explained what the microscopic world meant, and also what its anthithet, the macroscopic world, signified. To discover the one we turned our microscopes downward, and to view the other we turned our telescopes upward. There was a third world of scopy, the "koinoscopic"—that which was around and near us, and of which our unaided senses took cognizance. "Koinoscopy" was accepted by the club as a good word. Mr. Andrews is distinguished for his facility in naming things. The speaker then proceeded to discuss the analogies which exist in the Nature of Things. Each of the five senses was likened to one of five classes of people. A claim he made which excited unusual interest was that spirituality might be reckoned as akin to the sense of smell. Spiritualists were the nosey people; they smelled the dinner before they got to it. The people related by analogy to the sense of touch were the scientists, who rejected intuition. Other people were assigned to the remaining senses. Mr. Andrews has certainly got hold of a big thing in Universology. Some skeptical persons are inclined to look upon many of his ideas as slightly fanciful, but as far as Universology is understood, it is believed to be sound. The Pantarch's words may sometimes go over his hearers' heads, and their meaning be uncaught, but that is because he aims high. Mr. Andrews is such an engaging speaker, his enunciation is so distinct, and his choice of English words exhibits such discrimination, that it is always a pleasure to hear him speak upon any subject. Language probably has not another exponent like Mr. Andrews.

At the conclusion of the first speaker's remarks, Mr. Shook, of whom mention was last week inadvertently omitted to be made in this paper, was called upon by the chairman to address the meeting or show reason why he should not. Mr. Shook accepted the latter alternativ, and made the reason apparent to all, if any there might hav been, who were in the dark about it before. Mr. Shook is a lawyer and a Christian. Those who hav formed a clear idea of what Mrs. Stowe's Lawyer Marks was like hav a good picture of Mr. Shook before their mind's eye. He is a living exclamation point; a walking objection. He has rarely been known to agree with any other speaker in the club. He raises a warning finger against any idea put forward, whether he understands it or not. He objected to Mr. Andrews's definitions and comparisons. He couldn't see any analogy between the sense of smell and the faculty of intuition. "In self-defense of myself," said he, "I will take an instance for instance." He then groped for awhile among the infusoria; the infusoria did not hav any sense of smell, but he left his hearers to infer that they enjoyed a high degree of spirituality and intuitivness. He would like a little further smell of the subject. He intimated that he was open to conviction, but would like to see the man who could convince him. He ceased speaking promptly at the expiration of his allotted time, and a grateful audience applauded him warmly for that act of kindness.

Mr. Langerfelt was present in a back seat. Taking off his coat, and intrusting it and his hat and cane to the care of a neighbor, with the remark that he guessed he would "take a hack at this thing" himself, he strode forward like the lost heir in a play coming upon the stage at the opportune moment. He said he would explain the atomic "business," and invited the audience to imagin a quantity of peas. Pausing for a moment while this agricultural act of mentation was being performed, he proceeded to an attempt to make it plain how the atoms charged about under the influence of heat and cold. If Mr. Langerfelt had had a little clearer idea of the subject under discussion, and had possessed the flow of language sufficient to express it, there is no doubt that he would hav made an interesting speech. The opinion was advanced by an auditor that when the speaker had achieved a more extended career he would probably experience additional wisdom.

Mr. Roosevelt said the atomic theory had been shown to be wrong. It had been exposed in three countries. England claimed one man as its exposer, Germany a second, and America a third, which was himself. It took four hundred millions of millions of vibrations of the ether to accomplish the phenomenon of sight.

Dr. Atkinson, whom the chairman called one of the foremost microscopists of the world, said that the really inspired teachers of truth were the physicists. The study of histology was the true field for religious investigation. Nature was the church, and men like his friend on the left (Mr. Wakeman) were its high priests. Dr. Atkinson closed with a peroration on the religion of the future, as opposed to the theology of the present, that provoked enthusiastic applause.

Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., made a very desirable speech, perhaps the most consecutiv one of the evening. There were five popularly recognized senses; but between the comparativly few vibrations of the atmosphere required to produce hearing and the incomputable number necessary for sight, he considered there was room for several others. This, he believed, was a big thought. Dr. Foote, Jr., is a promising young orator, despite the fact that in private life he is admitted to hav a weakness for puns; and it was expected that if the lecturer promised for the occasion had been present the doctor would hav accredited him with presenting a Fairfield for discussion. He is well known not to be above that sort of pleasantry. The doctor is also something of a sea serpent, and during the summer months navigates Long Island Sound in the vicinity of Larchmont in a small yacht, which he handles with a skilful recklessness that makes old yachtsmen feel uneasy. Owing to the doctor's personal altitude, however, it is believed that his feet would rest on the bottom of the sound, in case of an accident, in time to prevent the upper portion of his person from getting wet. He has hopes of presenting to the club, at some future time, with the aid of a stereopticon, a few facts in regard to the structure of polyps which will be of interest.

Dr. Lambert said that Mr. Langerfelt had given utterance to some of the most absurd ideas he ever heard in his life. He believed that gentleman's knowledge of chemistry was deplorably limited. He (Dr. Lambert) took little stock in the idea that four hundred millions of millions of ethereal vibrations produced sight. It was an easy matter to affirm it, and also safe to deny it, for, if true, there was no way of knowing it. Sweet oil had been known to remove gall stones.

Mr. Andrews enlarged further, for the benefit of Mr. Shook, upon the ideas he had previously advanced. Mr. Shook made a second exposition of his incapacity to grasp any subject outside the lids of the Bible. The thoughtless laughed with him, and the judicious laughed at him.

The club adjourned at the usual time, having shown to the satisfaction of everybody that it was capable of going outside its program, and amusing itself in the absence of exterior talent. The meeting on the 25th is the last of the season.

"Othodoxy," writes an Iowa correspondent, "has received its death-blow at Prescott in this state. The indefatigable labors of Messrs. Clark and Blackburn, and others, hav caused many to see the error of their way; and those who otherwise would be cradled by the church are now free and independent. The same is true to a greater or lesser extent in every town in Iowa which I hav visited. The church and the Bible are fast losing their hold on the masses, and men are moving onward in search of light and truth."

Mrs. Wilman's Woman's World has suspended on account of the sickness of the talented editress.

Corporate Power and Its Effects on the People.

Corporate power may be classified under three heads—municipal, religious, and moneyed. It is the last which I deal with in this paper.

Yet I must call the government itself a corporate power, in which the governed are the stockholders, receiving no dividends and being continually assessed. And it is a matter of consideration, whether their charter agreed upon after much diversity of opinion, a century ago, seeming at that period the most desirable for all concerned, is adapted to the present generation. Or, in other words, do not the swaddling-clothes for the child chafe the man?

Can this generation know the requirements of the next? States, counties, towns, and cities must be considered corporate bodies. Henchmen of the main branch, government, and disciplin, you may say, are essential. Then comes the question, Where is the limit, the proper amount of each? Can the head corporate body run the industries of the country as she does the post-office, and all the governed receive their rightful share of the fruits of their labor? It would seem so, if she can run that department to profit, with all the stealing brought to light, and it is not to be supposed that stealing is acknowledged only when unavoidable. In regard to the second class of corporate powers under the supervision of the church, ignoring earthly things, such as money, honors, lust, etc., I shall be brief in this paper, simply saying the second sustains the first. Indeed, it can go them better. But if eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, it would be better that they procure their charters from that higher power, and the stockholders be fully satisfied of its validity. I now come to the third or moneyed corporate power, and this is the power which has called out this paper—the power that has centralized populations, depopulated the country, and made homeless the masses. That family has no home which at any moment is liable to eviction.

Eviction! The sound of this word makes strong men tremble, and mothers clasp their babes. It makes men risk their lives to kill their brothers at $13 per month. It is one of the chief causes of all crime. It will compel mothers to arouse their little ones, in the dead hours of night, to labor in cotton mills to retain this home. Men will sell their franchise, and women their chastity, not their love, for that can never be sold. The average age of factory girls in Massachusetts is less then twenty years. What has originated this sad condition, that fills the penitentiary, drives men to an early death, and men and women to suicide and prostitution? I claim it to be the pooling of capital, to concentrate its power for the benefit of a few, to the injury of the many, in which individual responsibility cannot be held accountable, and hides itself under the stale and heartless jest, "Corporations hav no souls." I think the pooling of capital to gobble up the profits of labor originated in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Its effect in New England I can picture. The Democratic party, to its credit as a party, was bitterly opposed to corporations. But that party in Massachusetts was a unit. To be a Democrat was to lose caste. The predominant party claimed all the religion, all the money, and of course all the "respectability"—that word which combines in reality all the technical phrases that crucified Christ, put the rope around the neck of Garrison,* and hung John Brown. Understand me, I mean that money is supposed to constitute respectability, and under cover of it the poor man who steals one hundred pounds of iron to keep his family from starving is sent to prison; and the rich man who steals a railroad is fêted and wined at Delmonico's.

But I must confine myself to the subject—corporation, and what it has done for New England. Well, it has laid waste the country. One-half of its farms can be purchased for what the fences cost that inclose them; fifty per cent of its improved land has gone back to its primeval forest. It has emptied her school-houses and demoralized her people. One can ride for miles in some portions of New England and find every farmhouse forsaken; even graveyards hav grown to forest. In 1830 the city of Worcester had a population of 3,000; to-day she has a population of 70,000; and yet you can find farms within four miles of her City Hall grown to forest. Her moneyed institutions formerly loaned their money on farms, as the best security; now that security is deemed worthless. Indeed it nearly bankrupted her savings banks. The forming of corporations, to any extent, in Massachusetts commenced about 1830. Manufacturing of cotton goods was profitable. Men with small means would start the business in saw-mills. They soon discovered a way to pool their means in a united capital and build mills. From this arose joint stock companies, so that in case of failure their private property could not be held—their stock was mostly on paper. If their enterprise proved a failure—which, at the immense profit their goods sold, would be from mismanagement—they could wind up their affairs and start anew. The loss would most generally fall upon the operativs. This would be dangerous at the present day—as well as binding children to a post in the mill and whipping them with a leather strap, which I hav witnessed. The astute manufacturer, seeing the legislature packed with stalwart yeomen, wise in their conceit, and broken-down, infirm clergymen, sent to "ginral court" to keep them from being chargeable to the town, soon found he could hav it all his own way—and he was not long in finding out the way he would hav it.

Now came upon the scene Daniel Webster, a New Hampshire Democrat. The "Jim Fisk" of Boston. (Pardon the analogy. I think it a correct one.) Daniel Webster doffed his Democratic coat in New Hampshire and put on the Whig mantle of Boston, selling himself for the most he could get to corporate bodies. Prominent democratic lawyers in the legislature followed in the wake of the "god-like Daniel," taking sinecures in Lowell mills for pay.

Webster's ability as a lawyer was used to frame special enactments for corporations, overriding the statute laws of the state. Crime in the individual was no crime in the corporation.

The only incorruptible Democrat in the legislature, Robert J. Rantoul, died, and nothing remained of the party but a few rum-soaked boors from Cape Cod. Jackson vetoing the National Bank charter blocked the corporation wheels a short time; but Massachusetts, backed by "State Rights," did not feel the effects to the extent that Pennsylvania did. She had no Daniel Webster to protect her. Everything was charming; population fled to villages, and farmers who formerly wanted to buy all the land that joined them now wanted to sell all they possessed.

The greedy capitalist saw a new field in railroads. The yeoman, ever slow to learn, and the clergyman, who didn't care to learn if he could get something to eat, bonded town and state to that extent it will take them longer to see out than it did to see through the Hoosac tunnel. Then came a new boom—the war. Every owner of a saw-mill went to manufacturing shoddy; every large mill had a contract from the government for shoddy blankets; mills ran night and day; children nine years of age could be seen coming from mills at midnight, going to their beds, their mates meeting them on their way going to the mill—this I hav witnessed in mid-winter—while the bloated owners would talk in canting tones of the poor slave.

Now comes unexpectedly his long-lost national bank. It had lost nothing by going to sleep, but seemed to hav been breeding. Instead of one there were thousands, with improvements. Like a two-edged sword, it could cut both ways. Whichever way you looked at a dollar it was drawing interest. What could beat it? Not perpetual motion, or everlasting to everlasting; and yet for a school child to hav a father who has voted the Greenback ticket, in one of the country towns, is to be persecuted by its mates. And school children are called upon to vote in the schools, and woe to the child who votes adversely to the teacher's preconceived opinions, which are invariably Republican.

It is the practice of the Republican party to send a circular to the resident clergyman, requesting him to hav his parishioner sign it, that he will vote for "our party." A corporation can flood any farmer's land in Massachusetts, no matter what associations he may hav connected with it. He must be satisfied with what the corporation thinks fit to pay him, or litigate, which means nothing, except the malaria of the flowage and typhoid fevers. But the stalwart yeoman consistently sticks to "our party." The hide sticks to his cattle; the mortgage sticks to his farm, and at last death sticks to him from sheer mercy, and his last words are, "Stick to the old party." Let me illustrate a little of the style of this corporation business. In a little inland city in Massachusetts a dozen men pool—what? their money? No; their paper, to the amount of $100,000, to form a fire insurance company. Well, business prospers; they divide in a few years in cash (not paper) more than the original capital; of this they had boasted. The Boston fire came, they went into liquidation, the receiver took what money he could find in the treasurer's hands for his services; the company started anew—wisely dividing the profits oftener in anticipation of another big fire. I could write a chapter on life insurance companies. But at this day it seems needless. Will the ballot save a downtrodden people before despair shall drive them to insane physical force? Will the capitalist risk his safety on Gattling guns? Does he dream the people will never learn their power?

New England no longer needs legislation to aid her capitalist. Her past legislature has established a moneyed aristocracy, with a hierarchy that bids defiance to all progress. She has been liberal in endowing charitable institutions—forgetting that justice needs no charity, and that when the old man has lost his home no charity home can fill its place. The Old Man's and the Old Woman's homes are frauds on human rights.

PAXTON.

*I wish to say here, I stood on the top of Joy's building, in Boston, in 1836, and saw Garrison with the rope around his neck, in the hands of what was called "the well-dressed mob," consisting of twenty thousand or more cotton brokers, merchants, lawyers, ministers, and doctors, reaching as far as the eye could see, up Washington street; a vast sea of "stove-pipe" hats swaying from side to side, insane with rage; Garrison in the midst, coatless and hatless, with the rope about his neck, his face livid pale, but perfectly calm; the mob crying, "Hang him, hang him!" Fifty years hav nearly passed away since that period, but the scene is indelibly fastened on my memory, and imprinted on my boyish mind a love for the weak and a hatred for the strong. Garrison lived to see his peculiar views taken up by a political party, who riding into power, bankrupted the treasury, and deluged the country in blood, and fastened the chains on the wage slave, with stronger rivets, and more of them, than ever held the chattel slave. And as the chattel slave would not free himself, hav we reason to suppose the wage slave will free himself? No! As the master of the chattel slave was blind, so is the capitalist blind, and seems bound to continue in his recklessness until the floods come.

The Law of Blasphemy.

London Correspondence of the New York World.

Orthodox England has received a box on the ear from which what it regards as its brain will ring for many a day. Already a sad blow had been delivered by the repeated triumphs of Mr. Bradlaugh—a blow which had gone far to atone for the successful prosecution of Messrs. Foote and Ramsey, of the Freethinker. Upon the second trial all the honors hav rested with the defendants, and no less eminent an authority than the lord chief justice has rendered a decision even more momentous than that whereby a late lord chancellor dismissed hell with costs, and deprived the members of the church of England of their comfortable hopes of eternal damnation. The chief honors of the last Freethinker trial hav been borne off by Mr. Foote. He and Ramsey had already been convicted and were undergoing a sentence which to the mass of men seemed severe, when Sir Henry Tyler, a member of Parliament, best known on your side of the Atlantic through his connection with the Grand Trunk and other American railways, swooped down upon them and Mr. Bradlaugh with another indictment. The member for Northampton broke through the net, and the other defendants proved quite competent to defend themselvs. Mr. Foote, in particular, delivered a speech which, for closeness of argument and vividness of presentation, has not often been equaled Colenso, he said, brought the Mosaic story into disbelief, but remained a bishop, and Matthew Arnold rebuked him for going about to disprove what nobody believed. Woolston languished long in prison for saying that the gospel miracles were allegorical. Mr. Arnold said they were "fairy tales." Yet the law of blasphemy had not been altered in any way; and if Woolston was guilty of blasphemy, so was Mr. Matthew Arnold. The judge who first used the phrase as to Christianity being part of the law was Sir Matthew Hale, who sentenced women to be burnt for witchcraft, an offense which we now knew never could exist, notwithstanding the verse in Exodus, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv." The time would come when it would be thought just as absurd to punish a person for blasphemy as for witchcraft. If Jews, with their views of Christ, could be admitted into the House of Commons and help to make the laws of a country absurdly called "Christian," was it not ridiculous to punish Freethinkers for honest criticisms on Christian opinion or belief? What an absurdity it was to address arguments in support of a prosecution for blasphemy to a jury who need not themselvs be Christians, and who might, by law, be all Jews, or Deists, or Freethinkers! Darwin spent his whole life in undermining the very foundations of religious belief, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Professor Huxley had spoken of the "mistaken zeal of Bibliolatry," and declared orthodoxy to be the Bourbon of the world of science. The language of Huxley was substantially the same as his own (Mr. Foote's), the only difference was that Huxley's was the language of a ten-and-sixpenny book, while his own was the language of a penny paper. Dr. Maudsley had written of the prophets Hosea, Isaiah, and Jeremiah as "all three mad," yet he had not been prosecuted. Herbert Spencer had used language in substance equivalent to his own. John Stuart Mill had said that his father "looked on religion as the greatest enemy of morality, by setting up belief in place of morality and by setting up a being as divine whose character was hateful." Where was the difference between that and the language of one of the articles now prosecuted—which spoke of the character of the God of the Bible as that of a Bengal tiger or a Bashi-Bazouk? The difference here, again, was only that between a 9-shilling book and a penny paper. Grote had written a tract called "The Analysis of Supernatural Belief," representing it as one of the greatest foes of the human race. Matthew Arnold had written ridiculing the Christian doctrin of "Justification," and ridiculing Christian missionaries. He had even suggested a speculation whether Jesus Christ at his ascension had his clothes on, and, if so, what became of them? This was Matthew Arnold, who was in no fear of prosecution; it was the poorer and humbler Freethinkers who were to be made the scapegoats of refined and highly cultivated Agnostics. John Morley, in his "Life of Voltaire," said that a religion which had caused the shedding of more blood than any other had no right to complain of the epigrams of Voltaire. Lord Amberley had written that the deeds ascribed to God by the scriptures would hav destroyed the character of a heathen god, and that in the character of Jehovah there was no trace of a sense of shame. Such language in the Freethinker would be subject to prosecution, but no one had interfered with Lord Amberley. The mere belief in a supreme being was not the fit subject of ridicule, but the Hebrew idea of God—the idea, as Huxley said, "of a barbarous and ignorant race." It was not God who was ridiculed in the cartoons of the Freethinker; it was the God of the Hebrews, as they were thousands of years ago, when they were a barbarous and ignorant people. The Duke of Somerset had pub lished language to the effect that he could believe in God but not in Jesus. Shelley had written of Christ that he was the "Galilean Serpent," yet no one would think now of prosecuting a publisher of Shelley for blasphemy. So Swinburne had drawn a distinction which Freethinkers would draw between the human and the supernatural. In the Freethinker it would be blasphemy, but it was in a 12-shilling book, and so it was not so. Then there were some lines by a recent poet—much praised by critics—ending, "Almighty Devil, damn me too!" That would be blasphemy in the Freethinker, but in a 5-shilling book it was harmless. George Eliot had aimed many a blow at the popular idols of the day, and had translated Strauss. It was idle to say that the ridicule of the Freethinker was coarse. If the weapon were legal, the mere style or manner could not render it illegal. It would be arbitrary to make men amenable to criminal prosecution merely on matters of taste. As to the complaint of nuisance, it was absurd, for no one was compelled to read or purchase the Freethinker, the very name and title of which betrayed its real character, so that no one could purchase it unwarily, and surely those who wished to read it might be allowed to do so. Bigotry, however, claimed to prevent others from reading what it did not approve.

Mr. Foote's speech was such a powerful one that Lord Coleridge advised the jurors to sleep on it, and in his summing-up next day went out of his way to praise it. Lord Coleridge, I may say, is something like your own ex-Justice David Davis, and does not hesitate when there is no precedent for action which he regards as important to declare that it is time there was a precedent and to make one. It was he who for the first time granted an injunction to restrain a landlord from distraining, and in the case I am describing he sailed right in the teeth of recent decisions by Mr. Justice North and Mr. Justice Stephen, to say nothing of the long array of English jurists. The writings of Foote and Ramsay, he said, were undoubtedly blasphemous libels, according to the old law and the dicta of the judges, because they aspersed the truth of Christianity, but those expressions would no longer be taken as a true statement of the law. "It is no longer true," he said, "in the sense in which it was so when these dicta were uttered, that Christianity is part of the law of the land. At the time those dicta were uttered, Jews and Nonconformists, and others under disabilities for religion, were regarded as hardly having civil rights. But now, a Jew might be lord chancellor—certainly a Jew might be Master of the Rolls—and might hav sat in a criminal court to try such a case as this, and hav been called upon, if the law be really that 'Christianity is part of the law of the land,' to lay it down as the law to the jury, some of whom might hav been Jews and hav been bound to tell them that it was an offense against the law, as blasphemy, to deny that Jesus Christ was the messiah, a thing which he himself did deny, and which Parliament had allowed him to deny, and which it is just as much a part of the law that any one may deny as it is your right and mine, if we believe it, to assert. Therefore, to base the prosecution of an aspersion on the truth of Christianity, per se, on the ground that Christianity is in the sense in which it was said by Lord Hale, or Lord Raymond, or Lord Tenterden, part of the law of the land—is a mistake; it is to forget that law grows, and that though the principles of law remain, yet (and it is one of the advantages of the common law) they are to be applied to the changing circumstances of the times. Some may say that this is retrogression, but I should rather say that it is the progression of human opinion. And, therefore, merely to discover that the truth of Christianity is denied, without more, and to say that thereupon a man may be indicted now for blasphemous libel is, as I venture to think, absolutely untrue, and I for one will not, until it is authoritativly declared to be the law, lay it down as law, for historically I cannot think that I should be justified in so doing, since Parliament has enacted laws which make that old view of the law no longer applicable. If this were still the law, then it would not be possible to discuss whether a monarchical or any other form of government was the best, without danger of being prosecuted for a seditious libel. This has actually occurred in the early part of the last century. I find a case reported in which it appears that a man was actually convicted of a seditious libel for discussing civilly, and, as the report says, 'without any reflection whatever upon my part of the existing government,' the question if such a case arose now no judge would follow such a view, no jury would convict in such a case; it would be too monstrous. Therefore it is clear to my mind that the mere denial of the truth of the Christian religion is not enough to constitute the offense of blasphemy."

Lord Coleridge gave a very interesting analysis of the old cases to which reference is so often made, showing that the judges had been much more guarded in their language than the popular account had made them out, and incidentally he dealt Sir Henry Tyler and the private prosecution a very ugly blow when he said that persecution, unless it was very thoroughgoing, was apt in this nineteenth century to be in vain. "It is also true," he said, "that persecution is a very easy form of virtue. It is a more difficult form of virtue quietly and unostentatiously to obey what we believe to be God's will in our own lives. It is not very easy to do it; and it makes much less noise in the world. It is very easy to turn upon somebody else who differs from us, and in the guise of zeal for God's honor to attack somebody for a difference of opinion, whose life may be more pleasing to God and more conduciv to his honor than our own. And when it is done by persons whose own lives are not free from reproach and who take that particular form of zeal for God which consists in putting the criminal law in force against others, that, no doubt, does more to create sympathy with the defendant than with the prosecutor. And if it should be done by those who enjoy the wit of Voltaire and who do not turn away from the sneers of Gibbon, and rather relish the irony of Hume, our feelings do not go with the prosecutors and we are rather disposed to sympathize with the defendant. It is still worse if the person who takes such a course takes it, not from a kind of notion that God wants his assistance and that he can giv it—less on his own account than by prosecuting others—but it is mixed up with anything of partisan or political feeling, then nothing can be more foreign to what is high-minded, or religious, or noble in men's conduct; and, indeed, to seems to me than any one who will do that, not for the honor of God, but for the purposes of the ban, deserves the most disdainful disapprobation." Another very notable passage of this very notable charge was that in which Lord Coleridge dealt with the eminent authors whose attacks on Christianity hav already been alluded to. "There is," he said, "a difference not merely in degree, but in kind. A grave earnestness of tone, a reverent, perhaps I may say religious, tone in the very attacks of those great writers upon Christianity itself, which show that what was aimed at was no insult to the opinions of the majority of mankind; not outrage upon Christianity, but real, quiet, earnest pursuit of the truth. And if the truth at which they hav arrived is not that which you and I hav been taught to believe, or at which possibly we might hav arrived ourselvs, even if one had not been so taught, it is not because their conclusions differ from ours that they are to be deemed fit subjects for criminal prosecution. Therefore, with regard to some of those persons whose writings hav been referred to by Mr. Foote, I should say that they were within the protection of the law. I confess I hav a difficulty in distinguishing them from the incriminated articles. They do appear to me to be open to the same objection as those which are before us. Mr. Foote says that many of these things are written in expensiv books published by eminent publishers, and that they circulate in the drawing-rooms or libraries of persons in a good position. It may be so. All I can say here is I will make no distinction between Mr. Foote and anybody else, and if these persons, however eminent—those who hav published passages not, in my judgment, fairly distinguishable from his—are ever (which, I hope, may never be) brought for trial before me for such publications—so far as my poor powers go—they shall hav no more nor less than the measure of justice which I apply to Mr. Foote, and if they really hav offended against the blasphemy laws, they shall find that so long as these laws exist—whatever I may think about their wisdom—they shall hav but one rule of law laid down for them as for others."

The jury in this case disagreed and to-day an attempt was made to bring up the prisoners for a third prosecution. Foote begged the indulgence of the court, alleging that he was not physically able to defend himself—that hard labor and a meager dietary had so reduced his strength that he was unequal to the task. The chief-justice promised that the prisoner should hav better food and more leisure, if his representations to the proper authorities had any effect, and the tone he adopted was so unflattering to the private prosecution that it may be regarded as at least very doubtful whether the case will be proceeded with. At any rate, heterodoxy has gained a martyr, a decision has been scored against those who regard Christianity as a part of the law of the land, and the Freethinker has obtained an advertisment, the value of which it would be impossible to overestimate. I hav my doubts whether, when Sir Henry Tyler comes to look at the results of this labor of his soul, he will be abundantly satisfied.

The Old God Delusion.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Men of common sense are really over-wearied by repetitions and constant re-repetitions of the superstitious God delusion. Science has no use for a god, and scientific men hav been so long insulted with the senseless idea put forth by priests and priestly pretenders, that forbearance has at last ceased to be a virtue. In theology, the so-called god is a kind of counterpart of the so-called devil, and as the devil's term of service has expired by common consent, it is about time that we pay off our old god and giv him his discharge.

I am sorry that such men as Voltaire, Volney, Gibbon, and Thomas Paine yielded so far to the idea of godocracy as to admit that they believed in one true God. Especially is this true of Volney and Paine. Even Ingersoll admits that there may be a god, although he well knows that God is the chimera of superstition, born of ignorance and barbarism.

Liberal writers are in the habit of extolling such men as Beecher and Swing for the utterance of half-way truths; yet there are no greater sticklers for God than Beecher and Swing. They are religious animals, and their minds must be stuffed with barbarous gods or they will die from starvation. That is what priests feast upon. They first kill their god and then feast themselvs on his blood and flesh.

We hope that hereafter no Liberal will take stock in any man who talks Liberalism and at the same time pretends to believe in imaginary gods. But suppose there is a god, or a million gods, what hav they to do with us or we with them? Even suppose there is a creator, what has that fact to do with us? Admit also that we may liv after death, and we still ask, Why should such god put his goddish nose into any of our business?

The only gods we acknowledge are men, true and noble men, such as D. M. Bennett. He was a greater man than Christ, and forgave more sins than Jesus and all his popish clan of priests and soul pirates.

J. W. Scott.

A Humanitarian's Dying Words.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The vague, unmeaning "last words" of some dying Christian are constantly being paraded before the public as evidence of immortality, the existence of heaven and hell, and that he has gone straight to Jesus.

It matters not what kind of a life the Christian has lived, how many poor men he has swindled to raise money for the church, how many widows and orphans hav suffered by his cruel neglect; if he only pipes off the usual strain of "knowing that his redeemer livs," his life and glorious death is written in glowing colors by the "beloved pastor," and published in the village paper with the usual head lines to begin with and a poem to close. Now I am pained to chronicle the death of an old war-horse in Liberalism at the advanced age of eighty years, who died as he had lived, a Freethinker, and who lived for humanity and not for Jesus. Solomon Wait was a prosperous farmer of this vicinity, but he never made one dollar of his wealth by oppression, cheating, or lying, and I am satisfied that no one ever was turned away in distress from his door.

For a few years a very poor man has been a tenant on Mr. Wait's farm, and although he was not a relativ nor bound by any ties whatever, when the old gentleman was nearing the end, when he had settled up all his business, said the last good-bye, and when his family thought his voice entirely gone, he opened his eyes and looking intently at his son said, "Don't let Fisher suffer." If all the dying words of all the Christians in the world were concentrated they would not compare with the last words of Solomon Wait. He was a noble, kind, and generous man, beloved by Infidel and Christian, but a firm disbeliever in Christianity. G. W. M.

Burlington Junction, Mo.

J. S. Strong, a colored minister of the Bethesda Baptist church at Americus, Ga., has been dismissed because he was engaged to four different members of the congregation at the time of his marriage last week. This proves that there is such a thing as too much brotherly love for sisters, even among clergymen.

In a recent sermon the Rev. R. B. Hull, of this city said:

"As for Spiritualism, it is either mere trickery or else it is the work of evil spirits. In my opinion these so-called Spiritualistic manifestations are mere trickery. The idea of spirits coming from the presence of God and rapping on tables, tipping articles of furniture, and thumping on floors! It is simply blasphemous to assert such a thing!"

There are a great many intelligent persons in the world who will hardly agree with Mr. Hull in this view of Spiritualism.

"Answers to Christian Questions." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Letters from Friends.

ZENA, May 3, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $5.00—$2.50 for this year's subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER; $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $1.00 for the monument. JOHN PHILLIPS.

DECATUR, May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: There are quite a number of Liberals here, but they are very quiet, as priestcraft is in the ascendancy. The Rev. Harrison converted two thousand to God, made two thousand dollars, and has gone to Boston until his summer engagement commences. W. R. FRINCK.

MOUND CREEK, May 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $9—$6.50 for the four volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $2.50 to renew my subscription for another year.

That you may double your subscribers to the grand and glorious TRUTH SEEKER within the next year is the wish of your sincere friend, WM. SCOFIELD.

ST. LOUIS, May 10, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed you will find $10.00 for three subscriptions, and $2.50 for the Bennett monument fund. I am old and an invalid. The last three numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER were the first that I had the pleasure of reading. I like it, and think my friends will. WM. H. GODFREY.

FALLS CITY, May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find draft for $3.50—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and $1 for the monument to D. M. Bennett. I cannot do without THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav got the volumes of "Around the World." I consider them worth forty dollars. I am 58 years old, and expect to liv and die belonging to THE TRUTH SEEKER family. FRANK WELLS.

EVANSVILLE, May 13, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find fifty cents for three months trial of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and twenty-five cents for "Answers to Christian Questions." I am so well pleased with copies you sent me that I persuaded a friend of mine to try, and will get some more if I can, for I think such a valuable paper ought to be in every household and on every pulpit.

Yours, H. BENDER.

CAMERON, Mo., May 12, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed find $5.00—$2.50 to apply on subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER, $1 50 for fourth volume of "Travels Around the World," and $1.00 for monument. As a word of encouragement I would say that I am more than pleased with the way E. M. Macdonald is editing THE TRUTH SEEKER. He is the right man in the right place. My best wishes for your welfare and the success of your paper. L. C. LIVENGOOD.

VERY LITTLE OF THE WORD OF GOD IN IT.

HIAWATHA, May 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. R. Heber Newton, D.D., rector of the Anthon Memorial Episcopal church, it seems, has written a book. He was interviewed by a reporter of the New York Herald. Rev. Newton says, "In the sense in which the lump of ore may be said to be silver, the Bible may be said to be the word of God." Now silver ore runs from one ounce to the ton to one thousand ounces. Compared with either amount of silver the Bible would contain a very small part which would be called the word of God.

Yours, W. C. SMITH.

GOOD WORDS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to learn it is decided to hold the next Freethinkers' Convention at Rochester. I think those who hav had the matter in charge hav acted wisely, for I believe a better place could not hav been chosen. While Rochester has many activ Liberals, who will do all they can to make the gathering a success, it should not be forgotten that it is well fortified in orthodoxy. To hold a convention at Saratoga would be like "beating the air" compared with the Liberal influence that will be exerted here. The clergy of Rochester hav for a long time been sleeping a profound sleep, so far as proving any benefit to society is concerned, and it is about time a firebrand be thrown into their camp. Sabbath after Sabbath they "gather in their spoils," and yet, within a stone's throw of the pulpits, crime continues to increase, and not a word of warning. I trust that our convention in August will bring together a band of earnest workers—workers for the cause of humanity—and leave an influence that shall speak well for our cause.

I am more than ever pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and eagerly watch its coming each week. Although I cannot uphold the spirit in which some engage in the different discussions, still I hope the time will come when each will feel that all others are brothers and sisters in the cause of reform, whether they entertain the same views or not. While I truly believe in the doctrin of Materialism—that death ends all—I should not feel worthy of the name Liberal, if in opposing the argument Spiritualists advance I should use harsh and uncouth language. Brother Materialists, let us defend our position with arguments worthy of our profession, for the rock upon which we stand can never be shattered by the cold waves of Spiritualism.

Fraternally, A. E. RINGER.

FAIRFIELD, May 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Send THE TRUTH SEEKER so long as the inclosed will pay for it.

Cook, I see, has been lying about the late Dr. Beard. Oh, well, there's nothing surprising in that. Propensity is constitutional and uncontrolable. Let it pass, poor fellow!

Laborare est orare
Best defense against old Harry.
Better far than elder's greasing,
Is such "praying without ceasing."
(James v, 14, 15; 1 Thess. v, 17).

Now, if the Lord's omnipotent,
How strange that he did not prevent
The existence in the world of evil
By knocking on the head the devil!

The doctrin of omnipotence
Conjoined with goodness limitless
Puts a hard strain, I must confess,
On unbemuddled common sense.

A. O. SCOTT.

AURORA, April 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed fifty cents, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to L. G. Avery. He is a young man, progressiv in his tendencies, a Latin and Greek scholar, and a student of law. In reasoning powers few of his age surpass him, never drawing conclusions on philosophical questions until he has examined the why and wherefore of their nature. His favorit author is Thomas Carlyle. He regards him as a close analyzer of philosophical and other problems. He has just borrowed "Body and Mind" of me, by that eminent scientist of the human body and all of its component parts, Henry Maudsley, M.D., of London. He has spoken for "Modern Thinkers," by that meritorious logician of Chicago, V. B. Denslow, LL.D. Although I am personally unacquainted with Mr. Denslow, I look upon him as a worthy and trusting friend, and as a philosopher. I look in vain for a parallel upon this continent. When the present monuments of the world hav crumbled and hav turned to invisible the atoms from whence they came, his "Modern Thinkers" will be regarded as one of the most scholarly productions of the world. B. O. FENTON.

ELKLAND, PA., May 13, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Months hav elapsed since my last to our noble TRUTH SEEKER. In fact, this last year life has been a struggle against many odds; health miserable, but I feel now I shall triumph, and hope to liv many years. Our beautiful home, in a delightful valley, nestled amid trees and vines, and cheered by song and flutter of birds, has been given up. Others go in and out, and what we had reared and looked upon as the asylum for our old age, when it comes apace, has become the home of another. Christians would say, "Man proposes, but God disposes." Not so in my case. The disposition was of my own will, controled by best judgment. Yet lingering regrets will come to the front, but as soon dispelled by the consciousness that would not recall the bargain were it among the possibilities. We sold at a sacrifice of over one thousand dollars. The building was too large for two of us, and the property too good to be salable for cost in so small a village. We are to leave these haunts where we learned to love—won the object of our heart's deep devotion, and where for six springs the green grass has sprung above his silent grave. Love hallowed our home and death sanctified! Ah, the heart memories! how they come sweeping in tidal waves—some to gladden and brighten, others to tinge with pensiv sadness!

The last of this month we go to Friendship, N. Y., a lively, pleasant, healthy town of 1,500 inhabitants, to settle in a new, cosy home we are having built. Here is a good musical school, founded and presided over by Prof. Baxter, of enviable fame in the musical world, a free school, and a good academy. All these desirable qualities induced me to settle here, that my only daughter may avail of the same. Two years we tried Cleveland, Ohio, that queenly "forest city;" the smoke and dust from the belching foundries and manufacturing establishments and oil refineries determined us to locate in the country, where pure air and water, cleanness and neatness, may be enjoyed. When settled we hope to welcome to our home and hearts many of our wanderers who are sowing the gospel of angel ministry and the seeds of Freethought.

Inclosed please find $4.26—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, $1 for the Monument Fund, and the balance use as directed. As I hav been unable to read THE TRUTH SEEKER I am not posted as to the Memorial Hall prospects. If it is built I hope for an interest in same. Our pledge to our beloved, noble Bennett was that we would stand by THE TRUTH SEEKER and the cause of freedom till death. True, mine is the "widow's mite."

The church power is all-prevailing here. Freethinkers cannot gain a foothold here. Ostracism is severe—the town wealthy, aristocratic, Puritanic. It is hard to tell whether the almighty dollar or the Almighty God is most worshiped and revered. Surely it is not humanity. If one is orthodox and has the dollars he is trump. Brains and worth are counted out. GRACE L. PARKHURST.

WEST WEBSTER, April 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In reading the many valuable communications published in your excellent paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, I often notice sentiments which I believe are opposed to Liberalism in its noblest feature, and I so consider the statements of our friend, Isaac Paden, in regard to prohibition in your last issue. Prohibition, he says, is the foundation of all just laws. He might say truthfully, prohibition is the foundation of all unjust laws, for while many of our just laws are not prohibitory, most of our unjust laws are prohibitory; for example, laws prohibiting work and innocent pleasures on Sunday, etc. He proceeds to argue that if drinking is injurious to the community then drinking should be prohibited, and the majority must decide. Where will this line of argument lead us? If smoking is injurious it must be prohibited. If infidel publications are injurious to the community they must be prohibited. If eating too much of mince pies and sweetmeats are injurious to the community (as they undoubtedly are) then they must be prohibited. What then, I ask, becomes of our individual rights "to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" which the founders of this government declared inalienable and to protect which, they declare, "governments are instituted among men?" What are inalienable rights? The right to breathe, to think, to talk, to select our own food, drink, work, pastimes, etc. No majority hav any right, and no law would be just, in depriving a minority (however small) of these sacred rights. The government cannot justly interfere with the exercise of inalienable rights, except they are so abused as to endanger the community at large. In such case the drunkard becomes amenable to law, the slanderer liable for abuse of free speech, the libeler for abuse of a free press. But, Mr. Paden continues, he cannot sustain the right of drinking intoxicating drinks without sustaining the privilege of getting drunk. Nonsense, my friend. As well say we cannot sustain the right of free speech without sustaining the right to slander, or a free press without sustaining libel. Assuming that the majority hav the power to prohibit, our friend sums up by calling for the credit of all the good and the debtor of all the evil from the use of intoxicating drinks, and calls for national prohibition. "It won't do," as Ingersoll would say. Giv us the debt and credit on the use of tobacco; does that call for national prohibition? Take the debt and credit on the use of tea and coffee, all more or less injurious to the community, with a large debt and small credit, yet national prohibition would be national tyranny, a subversion of our inalienable rights. Read our prohibitory Sunday laws and reflect how the rights of the minority are disregarded. The majority exempt churches and preachers from taxation, compel Liberals to pay for clergymen in prisons, reformatories, and asylums, and make postal laws to imprison honest Infidels like our lamented D. M. Bennett. But our friend adds temperate drinking has been practiced from the days of Noah, some 4,000 years ago. So has prohibition. And every martyr for human freedom has suffered because of prohibtiory laws. We need more knowledge and less theology and prohibition. National prohibition would not make the people temperate. Prohibition will not raise a stream above its source. GEO. W. TURRELL.

NEITHER THEISM NOR ATHEISM CAN BE DEMONSTRATED.

LA CROSSE, May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I want to giv a few thoughts right here, with your permission. There has been a great deal said and a good deal of foolish argument, or rather assertions, brought forward upon this question, but, to my thinking, nothing proved or demonstrated. For instance, what do we know about gods or deities? We can prove nothing either for or against them.

Now, in the first place, I object to the word Atheism for the very reason that it means nothing; for it presupposes the reality of Theism, and that supposed reality of Theism gave birth to disbelief, or Atheism. But when the mystery of godliness shall cease to be a mystery, real Theism and real Atheism may mean something more than arbitrary assumptions. Now, I desire to show Atheists that they war with a phantom created by the Theists, who bamboozled them into a belief that religion rests on positiv principle, and behind a cloud of words.

The universe is an enigma. Our knowledge is confined to a small part of the infinit whole. We are impressed by appearances, and to the impressions produced by appearances we giv names. Conditions succeed conditions, all which are causes and effects; now the one, now the other. This universal ignorance of things, minute or otherwise, is quite manifest, notwithstanding that to hide it many foolish names hav been invented. We examin nature ontologically or metaphysically, but in vain. Men rush to books for a solution of the grand problem, but books are dumb, explaining nothing in respect to the aforesaid problem. We hav had a Thales, an Aristotle, a Plato, a Bacon, a Boyle, a Locke, and a Newton; each, in turn, doing what in him lay to get at a glimps of the infinit, and from the glimps of the infinit to a first cause; but all hav failed, and here we are in the nineteenth century, no better able than they to find out the "divine being who hideth himself."

This is my view of all ontological speculation. I mean speculations about unknown beings are dreams of shadows. Some may suppose from this that I believe in nothing, but that is not so. My philosophy is that the universe is a real and remarkably positiv thing, about which we can think and in which we can believe; but nothing, with all manner of names, which Atheists and Theists are eternally discussing ("reasoning," I believe they call it), cannot be the foundation for any form of belief. Nothing comes of nothing the world over. The man who by reasoning endeavors to prove the existence of God, to my view, does not know what he is talking about, and the man who denies the existence of a God is just as bad. A man is a fool who expects others to believe what he cannot make intelligible to himself. An old paradox says: "The wise are fools with all their rules."

I aver that no man, in strictness, can be charged as an Atheist till what God is shall be accurately and positivly defined; nor can man be a Theist till a God is definitly and accurately proved. But nevertheless I am satisfied that man is a worshipful and religious being, but it proves nothing, only that he has got religious instincts, and that he is a religious and superstitious bigot—but because religion is a matter to be felt and professed, not a matter to be understood or proved. Some might aver, If Atheism is not, it is foolish in writing against it. It may be so; but still the words Atheism, Theism, and Deism are believed in by men; so I am determined to show that their meaning is just naught—having no meaning in them, I suppose none can be got out of them. But some learned people think they hav, so I am forced, for the respect to my opinion, to do wordy battle with theirs; for I believe that godliness is just naught but the greatest enemy to the world's progress. Moore's "Prophet," pointing to a crowd of fools, said:

"They shall hav mysteries, precious stuff,
For knaves to thrive by—mysteries enough."

Show me a man capable of conceiving a thing, or condition, property, made of a thing supernatural, and I will admit the possibility of Theism and also of Atheism. I am convinced that only the supernatural can in any sense attain to, or in any sense be judged of, by the supernatural; and, therefore, what God is, who God is, where God is, or why God is, Theists cannot make intelligible to either themselvs or us. The Theist can no more prove that the universe was created, sustained, and governed by a being than he can prove a spherical cube, a square circle, an endless chain, an immaterial being, or a part greater than its whole. But—

"Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew—the dog will hav its day."

So Theists and Christians, I suppose, will hav their day, in spite of all I can say to the contrary. Some might be curious to know what my belief is. I will inform them. I am an eclectic—that is, one who is in the habit of choosing from all opinions such, and only such, as are true. It is a Greek word, signifying one who chooses from a multitude of ideas or notions.

Now, in conclusion, I will ask Theists and all God-believers for proof of a God—that is, giv me some account of that great being's nature; a distinct account, for assertions ought to be armed with positiv proofs and the logic of good sense. For he who affirms the existence of a God, or supernatural being, should produce the entities he or it represents, likely to satisfy persons of reflection, who are not in the habit of believing said off-hand assertions without proof of a God, or supernatural being's existence. For—

"What is impossible cannot be,
And never, never comes to pass."

I am the well-wisher of the whole human race.

SALESVILLE, May 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Another year has rolled around since I wrote you. I see my subscription is out, and so I send you post-office order for next year.

I am now two years old. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER during that time. The first I knew of it was when I chanced to see a specimen copy. I feared that, with the death of its founder, it would die; but that fear is gone. I think it just as good as ever. Now, while it is good to build monuments over the grave of its noble founder, I think the best memorial is to maintain the one he built himself—the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I send you 50 cts, extra, and wish you to send the paper as trial subscriber to my sister, and a Christian too, who will not welcome it, but it may do some good. It will go into one of the most ignorant and bigoted Christian communities, but will let them see that there is such a thing as a Liberal paper.

Well, I am glad to see that Heywood is clear. All honor to Judge Nelson. I think a few more decisions like that of Judges Crary and Treat, of St. Louis, will end Comstockism. I wonder if the courts will generally indorse the laws as laid down by them. Their decision is good common law. A particeps criminis cannot be a witness. Nelson said Comstock "could testify, but his being a party should be a fact for the jury, going to his credibility." Now while on the subject of law, and since the English courts hav sent our friends to prison for blasphemy, it might be well to inquire what the law is on the subject in our own country. Greeleaf on "Evidence" lays down the common law on the subject, and his work is a standard work everywhere, that "blasphemy consists in speaking evil of the deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. Its mischief consists in weakening the sanctions and destroying the foundations of the Christian religion, which is part of the common law of the land, and thus weakening the obligations of oaths and the bonds of society. Hence all contumelious reproaches of our savior Jesus Christ, all profane scoffing at the holy Bible, or exposing any part of it to contempt and ridicule, and all writing against the whole or any essential part of the Christian religion, striking at the root thereof, not in the way of honest discussion for the discovery of truth, but with malicious design to calumniate, vilify, and disparage it, are regarded by the common law blasphemous and punished accordingly." Now, in every part of the Union the common laws govern unless there are statutory laws to the contrary, and every Infidel writer and speaker in the land is liable to be indicted, convicted, and sent to state prison—wherever good Christians hav the power. Greenleaf further says, as well as Wharton, that "a witness who does not believe in a God and future rewards and punishments cannot testify!" Again, unless there are statutory laws allowing such persons to testify, any Christian party to a suit can object before the witness is sworn, and thus exclude his testimony. In Montana we hav a statute allowing such persons to testify. Now, Liberals, see that your legislature givs you such a law if you hav none. The Christians of to-day are no better than in the past, and still believe Infidels hav no right that Christians are bound to respect. They would willingly drag us down to prison when they can. The Christians in the recent legislature of Montana tried hard to pass an infamous Sunday law, but, thanks to such men as Colonel Edwards, member from Gallatin county, the bill was defeated. Now let every friend of liberty remember our gallant representativ. He is a Republican, and for that reason, not knowing his sentiments, I voted against him; but let the Republicans nominate him again and I will vote for him against any Democrat. "A friend in need is a friend indeed," and such was the Hon. Colonel Edwards, for he saved his territory from being cursed with a Sunday law. Our legislature partially enfranchised woman by allowing her to vote at school elections; so score us one more for woman's rights. Our legislature did one other good thing—passed a license law of one hundred dollars per month for each gambling table—which has effectually closed most of the gambling holes in Bozeman. During this last winter, owing to the near approach of the railroad, Bozeman grew like a mushroom—and many magnificent saloons and gambling houses were opened along Main street. Each of them kept on hand the very best string bands, who made delightful music continually to draw the crowds. At any time, day or night, these were full of men, who could be seen around the long rows of tables playing faro, poker, and other games, and money changed hands rapidly. But the license law has cleared them out. The gamblers hav gone on and the saloon keeper's harvest is over. Had they only taxed these saloons a thousand a month and cleaned them out too, we would be happier—but thanks for what we did get. Let us work for the good end and wait patiently for the good time when liquor will cease to be sold as a beverage—and these dens, that ruin so many good men, will be forever closed. Then Bozeman will settle up with a good class of people.

May came in to-day with a fearful snow storm—and everything is buried under the snow, which will soon melt, wet the ground, bring up the grain, and make grass grow. These snows are our spring rains.

W. J. STOVER, M. D.

LINCOLN, April 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Seward Mitchel has again perched himself upon the pinnacle of selfhood in defiance of public opinion and public morality. Does he not know that direct appeals to the reason of a victim of perverted and depraved appetites are useless? Does he not know that every mother in the land has resorted to and practiced his prescribed remedy, "love and kindness," without avail? Does he not know that our present civilization, so far in advance, is the result of obedience to the public will and the public conscience? When the public conscience so far emerges from the midnight of savagism and canabalism as to say, "Thou shalt not kill!" it becomes a law. A little farther on the public conscience arrived at the conclusion that stealing was reprehensible and "Thou shalt not steal" became a law. Why does not Mr. Mitchel object to these in the government of the nineteenth century? These laws are but the effect of a cause as, "Thou shalt not destroy thyself with intoxication" will be the effect of a cause. When the public conscience became sick of bloodshed, it said, "Thou shalt not kill." When by slow and weary steps it arrives at the conclusion that drunkenness is America's most formidable enemy, it will say "Thou shalt not be drunken." Our knowledge of the methods by which society may be wisely governed has advanced only by slow degrees; but it is worthy of remark that whenever a remedy for an evil is proposed, there is always some one like the selfish Mr. Mitchel to oppose it. I doubt whether the gentleman is sufficiently acquainted with the important subject of alcoholism and its remedy to indulge in any remarks concerning it. At least, he seems friendly to the bitterest curse, to the deadliest enemy, of American homes, institutions, and happiness. I therefore infer that the gentleman is ignorant or egotistic. When I see a child playing with fire I am satisfied that that child is ignorant of its effects. If I saw a man carelessly walk into a lions' den I should conclude the man was ignorant of lions and their habits.

Drunkenness is a cancer upon the body politic, eating away the vitals of Americanism.. Its true nature has been ascertained by its inflamed surroundings and its filthy effects. Idiots, imbicils, and human monstrosities are seen oozing from its corrupt and virulent ulcer; our children are becoming contaminated with the venom; our morals are threatened; virtue is outraged, and decency is trodden beneath the feet of the groveling sot. Society is doomed, civilization's death-knell is heard, and disgraceful criminal drunkenness assumes authority and calls up from the grave the horrid skeleton of barbarism. In the midnight revel the husband and father is seen. Who among America's thinkers does not know the effect on the coming generations?

The public conscience is becoming aroused, a nd it truthfully predicts the downfall of our strong wall. The sound of the trumpet is heard. It means mischief; and although Mitchel and Walker may cry, "Peace, peace!" there is no peace; nor will there be until our enemy is subdued and health, prosperity, and virtue are established. Temperance reform is a political question, and, until it is so recognized, nothing can be done. But the time is near when it will become an issue, and the party adopting it will be triumphant. Let it be met in a rational and common-sense manner; let every proposed movement be practical. First regulate the traffic, then restrict, then prohibit. Let us be careful how we attack the enemy, for it is well garrisoned; its intrenchments are formidable, and the name of its troops is legion. But if Mr. Seward Mitchel is going to general the war, victory is already assured to prohibition.

We shall not cease to "grape and cannister" until we either lie prostrate, a bleeding and lifeless corpse, or stand in triumphant victory upon the neck of the fallen giant; for we not only believe, but we know, that the liquor traffic is a dishonorable, contemptible, and criminal pursuit which no respectable man will either follow or uphold, Mr. S. Mitchel to the contrary notwithstanding.

We are no advocates of brutal movements; we do not indorse Calvin's or Comstock's methods; we adhere to no religious creeds or dogmas, nor support any movement born of superstition and nursed by fanaticism; but we aim to promote the best interest of society and make this earth a more pleasant place for future generations. If, one hundred years ago, the filthy traffic had been abolished, how much grander would America be to day! And if we succeed in driving the poverty-promoting, death-dealing-monster from our midst in this decade, the future occupants of this fair land will so far overreach our highest conception that, were it possible for Mr. Mitchel to see and comprehend the real meaning of life as they will liv, he would hide his head in shame and self-contempt for having used his pen in behalf of such degrading filth.

I wish I had time and space to segregate the infernal business and expose some of the villainies and crimes that it is directly responsible for in our state—the heartrending poverty, suffering, and destitution it has caused. I would like to show what the curse-dealing industry costs this state alone. I would like to show to the tax-payers that the amount expended for litigation growing out of drunken quarrels; the amount which goes to asylums and homes for orphaned and abandoned children; the amount to pauper houses to support drunkards and their families; to courts for the trial of the drunkard for crimes and to the penitentiaries for their punishment, is very far in excess of what he pays for the support of the normal government; and still, in the face of all the crime, poverty, cruelty, filth, disease, death, and hell that meets us everywhere and every hour, and that is the direct and immediate result of the damnable traffic, I am ashamed that there are men in the fair land of America that advocate its continuance and labor for its perpetuity. I said "men," but men they are not; they are groveling sycophants that hav never seen the daylight of the nineteenth century, nor hav they added one effort to clear the wilderness and plant fruit-trees for the coming host.

JOHN D. STANLEY.

Poetry.

Rebecca.

BY ALHAZA.

Tinkle thy bell, sweet camel, for I must go
A deep voice calls me o'er the arid plains;
Better to yield to fate, for here below,
Beneath the dark blue sky, a mystery reigns.
I hear a murmur in the summer air,
It tells how soon they fade, the young and fair;
I linger near the flowers beneath the moon,
And drink their life at midnight's silent noon.
How nature revels in the rose's death,
My camel treads upon the lily's wreath.
Oh, my lost home, what bitter thoughts will gush,
To mar the holy calm of midnight's hush!
The night-breeze moans o'er many a fading flower,
Whose last sigh floats away at this still hour.

The bulbul's soft, complaining voice was near,
The air was heavy with her fragrant sighs;
Midnight's calm glory vexed her weeping eyes,
Till, like a seraph's grief, night passed away.
She heeded not the trappings, rich and gay,
That dressed her camel's form. A dewy shroud
Hid a pale hand, and while awoke the day,
A mournful angel harped behind a cloud,
"Why does Jehovah blight the heart with fear?
Why must we always love the thing we dread?"
If we are firm some weaker voice we heed,
And the heart's strongest hour is when we go
O'er seas and sandy plains, we care not how,
To find the pallid form that haunts our dreams,
That woos us over rocks and burning streams.
But do my parents heed the tears that fall?
They think that Isaac's love atones for all.
I would my wildered heart I now could fling,
A glowing sapphire in this desert spring.
Why must I toil among these hillocks grim,
While the cool palm-trees bend to shelter him?

He may not kindly love me, yet I see
A gleam from future years that dazzles me,
Flashing from columns where cathedrals dim
Yield murmurous sounds 'neath gold and violet rain,
And lute-like voices wake the solemn hymn;
A ray of sunlight gilds Rebecca's name,
Our love is blazoned till a darksome stain
Makes common bliss seem secular and vain.
Yet a pale relic, left from Adam's fall,
Finds peace in misery, or not at all.

I see him now amid the glistening corn,
With his white hand he shades his deep, brown eyes;
The perfumed breeze seems freighted with his sighs.
I bathed my jewels in the dew this morn;
He notes their gleam; he trembles and turns pale;
I faintly breathe beneath this shrouding veil.
That snowy brow bears no dark, guilty stain,
And love will make my every duty plain.
We must not liv for joy; the humblest duty
Bears in its breast a fragrant sense of beauty.
The rapturous fervor of true love can gild
The shining palace or the forest wild.

The Preacher and the Dog.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

The door-bell rang, and the Rev. Mr. Monk was ushered into Rev. Mr. Mulkittle's room. The two gentlemen shook hands warmly. Having years ago been circuit riders, and having on one occasion "swapped" horses—a trade in which both were cheated—they had a brotherly regard for each other. Mr. Monk for years had been away from the city, feeding the sheep in more rural locations, and his sudden appearance was a very pleasant surprise to Mr. Mulkittle, who, with clergic courtesy, declared:

"You shall preach in my church to-night, and I know that you will bring up kind and pleasant recollections in the minds of many who knew you years ago."

"I am compelled to decline the honor," Mr. Monk replied. "I hav an appointment to preach at the Gum street church. Ah, here's your son. How he has grown! Don't believe he could walk when I saw him last. Fine fellow, I fancy."

"Excuse me a moment," said Mr. Mulkittle, arising. "I must apprise my wife of your arrival—'put another name in the pot,' as they used to say out on the circuit." And the two men laughed in remembrance of rude log churches and appetites whetted by the loud camp-meeting injunctions of "flee from the wrath to come."

"What's your name?" asked the boy.

"I'm the Rev. Mr. Monk, my son."

"And was you a circus rider?"

"Oh, no; a circuit rider."

"What's a circuit rider?"

"A man who rides around and preaches at different churches."

"Did you like to ride around?"

"Can't say that I did."

"Why can't you?"

"Well, because I didn't."

"Why didn't you?"

"Simply because I did not prefer traveling around over rough roads."

"Did the people giv you stockings and things to put over your ears?"

"What a queer idea! Where did you ever hear of anything like that?"

"Pa said he preached one year and never got anything but a pair of socks, a comforter, and a patch put on his pants. Are you the man what they sing about?"

"Sing about? What do you mean?"

"Jim, the boy what pa whips me for going with, sings about you. He said he learned it at a show. Lemme see if I can talk it off;" and after a moment's reflection he recited the following excruciating jingle, sung in all poor minstrel shows, and the authorship of which no man is bold enough to claim:

"It was at the animal fair,
The birds and the beasts were there;
And the gay baboon,
By the light of the moon,
Was combing his auburn hair;
And the monkey he got drunk
And stepped on the elephant's trunk.
The elephant sneeze,
Fell on his knees,
And how was that for a monk, monk, monk!"

"Are you the monk, monk, monk?" asked the boy at the conclusion of the recital.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, sir."

"Are you the gay baboon?"

"I shall tell your father. Ah, Mr. Mulkittle, I wish you had come sooner and heard some terrible stuff your son repeated."

Mr. Mulkittle turned to his son and sternly demanded a repetition of the performance. The boy faithfully followed the program, and with his ears soundly boxed he was sent from the room. While he sat on the fence, lamenting his misfortune, Jim, the butcher's boy, came along and asked the cause of the tears which rolled down the boy's fair cheeks and fell with a little patter of emotion upon the sidewalk. The boy explained, when Jim indignantly said:

"I'd like to get a chance at the guy. Fine man, goin' 'round the country gettin' boys whipped. Wish he'd come over and giv my old man a breeze. He'd find himself in a sling. You say he's goin' to preach to-night? You watch out and let me know 'bout the time he comes out of the gate. So long, and don't forget I'll be hangin' around."

At "early candle lighting," as the preachers like to speak of dusk, the ministers decided to repair to their respectiv churches. Together with Mrs. Mulkittle and several neighbors who had come in, the preachers walked out to the gate, where they were to separate. Young Mulkittle had apprised Jim, who shortly afterward reappeared, leading by a string a large dog. While the ministerial party was earnestly talking at the gate, Jim, unobserved, tied one end of the string around a button just above Monk's coat-tails. When the party dispersed, the dog, whose life had been mainly spent behind a wagon, and who could hav been led by a thread, followed his unconscious guide. Young Mulkittle stole away from home, and, together with Jim, followed at a safe distance the minister and the dog. When the reverend gentleman reached the church, where a large congregation awaited him, he walked slowly and impressivly up the aisle, while the dog, unconsciously serving a purpose of revenge, leisurely followed. At no place is a smile so easy of creation as in a church. The amused audience grinned as the dog ascended the pulpit steps and took a stand with the preacher. The grins broadened and a titter ran through the hall.

"My good people, what is the matter?" asked the minister. A boy snorted, and an old man blew his nose in a vain attempt to control his laughter.

"I ask what is the matter?"

The people laughed, and the preacher, indignant at such a reception, stepped down from the pulpit. The dog followed. The people roared.

"I shall not preach to such an assemblage!" the minister exclaimed.

Just then a dog came in from the street, smelled the floor, and trotted along the aisle, until he discovered the preacher's dog, when he bounded forward. A terrible fight ensued. The minister yelled when he found himself interwoven in such a combat. The dogs knocked his legs from under him, trod on his face, and straddled his head. The deacons rushed forward to quell the disturbance. The large dog that had followed the preacher arose to the importance of the occasion, and turned over benches in his wrath, and then, regarding the minister as the cause of the trouble, called on him. The minister sprang from side to side, but soon left the main part of his trousers in the dog's mouth. In his wildness he leaped from a window, but left a large part of his raiment on a nail. Despite the efforts of the deacons, the dog followed. Something white, followed by a dark object, flitted along the streets, and wild cries arose. Policemen followed and at last captured the white thing that flitted. The dog was driven away, and the minister, after borrowing a shawl, was taken to a hotel.

But Mulkittle's boy and Jim slapped each other and laughed in that way of fond satisfaction only born of revengeful fruition.

THE
INVENTED BY WILLIAM WILSON,
MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,
80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.
For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom presrcibe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.
The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.
J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.
ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for a knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and hav been all right since."
J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."
MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."
MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."
H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. cannot find words to express my gratitude."
CHAS. E. TRASK, 304 Ingham st., Jackson, Mich., says: "Garments arrived, with letter of instructions. Hav worn them. They are benefiting me more in the past week than all the medicin I hav ever taken."
MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."
All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.
Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into
NO CURE, NO PAY.
To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.
Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man!
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,
Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 80 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!
Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.
☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.
"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"
Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

Is not the devil entitled to a very large share of gratitude from the human family for the indispensable part he performed in this grandest and sublimest scheme of salvation which God or man ever devised—if it is of such a character? Is not the devil also most essential to God in other directions? In his divine and benevolent scheme of punishing his poor, fallible creatures to the latest moments of eternity for misbehaving or misbelieving, who could carry out his kind intentions so faithfully as the devil? What other being could be induced to attend to the nether regions of fire and brimstone, remaining patiently in that superheated locality to pitch and punch into the burning lake, for unknown millions of years, countless billions of poor human wretches who had no hand in bringing themselvs into existence?—D. M. Bennett.

LUCRETIUS, the poet that beautified [adorned] the sect, that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore and see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing on the vantage ground of truth (a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always pure and serene), and to see the errors and wanderings, and mists and tempests, in the vale below." So always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly it is heaven upon earth to hav a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.—Bacon's Essays.

REASONING from the authorities of earth whom he knows, to those whom he does not know, the primitiv man concludes that the best way of obtaining the satisfaction of his wishes from the latter will be to address them in a tone of humble supplication, intermingled with such laudatory epithets as he deems most suitable to the deity invoked, or most likely to be agreeable to his ear. Hence we hav these two devotional acts of prayer and praise, which in all religions constantly accompany one another, and constitute the simplest, most natural, and most ancient expression on the part of human beings of their consciousness of an over-ruling power, and of their desire to enter into relations with that dreaded and venerated agency.—Amberley's Analysis.

THE question whether Channing would hav done well to join the Abolitionists in the early days of the contest will always remain fairly debatable, and will be settled by each of us according to the strength of his own fighting instinct. Those who blame him for delaying can at any rate call himself as a witness on their side. For when at the end of 1834 the Rev. Sam May, general agent of the Boston Antislavery Society, in answer to Channing's expostulations as to the harshness and violence of their language, and the heat and one-sidedness of the Abolitionist meetings, turned upon him with, "Why, then, hav you left the movement in young and inexperienced hands? Why, sir, hav you not moved—why hav you not spoken before?" Channing, after a pause, replied in his kindest tones: "Brother May, I acknowledge the justice of your reproof. I hav been silent too long."—Thomas Hughes.

THE following inscription has been placed on Professor Clifford's tomb in Highgate Cemetery, London: "I was not and was conceived; I lived and did a little work; I am not and grieve not." Many will think that epitaph fine, and we respect its courage; but would it not be even finer inscribed above a horse? Man, if that sentiment is true, is a poor animal, with the faculty of thinking a little—quite uselessly, for the thoughts will be frozen, like the corpses, when the world ends—but doomed by irresistible, yet non-scientific, forces to toil all day and every day merely to keep alive, and sentenced all the time not only to capital punishment, but capital punishment by torture. It surely is no superiority in him, and no advantage that he is, through his brief moment of life, the only animal conscious of all that. It is a dreary destiny that the professor's tomb claims for mankind, and one of which the logical result, if its thought ever becomes a general faith, must be universal suicide.—The (London) Spectator, Oct. 8, 1881.

EARTH, that nourished thee, shall claim
Thy growth, to be resolved to earth again
And, lost each human trace, surrendering up
The individual being, shalt thou go
To mix forever with the elements;
To be a brother to the insensible rock
And to the sluggish clod which the rude swain
Turns with his share and treads upon.
—Bryant's Thanatopsis.

MAN everywhere is the born enemy of lies.—Carlyle.

THAT which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they hav all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence over a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and shall turn to dust again.—Eccles. iii, 19, 20.

I DID not believe a word of all this, but rather than hav trouble I let it go; for it is a waste of breath to argue with a bigot.—Mark Twain.

THEOLOGIES, rubrics, surplices, church-articles, and this enormous ever-repeated threshing of straw! A world of rotting straw, threshed all into powder, filling the universe and blotting out the stars and worlds, heaven pity you with such a threshing-floor for world and its draggled dirty farthing-candle for sun! There is surely other worship possible for the heart of man; there should be other work, or none at all, for the intellect and creativ faculty of man.—Carlyle's Life of Sterling.

WHAT is a man,
If his chief good, and market of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Surely he that made us, with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fast in us unused. —Shakspere.

IT has never been my policy to conceal a truth merely because it is unpleasant.—Garfield.

Odds and Ends.

THE style of swearing, when a profane man gets right down to business, is characterized by gaudiness.

AN exchange asks: "What is in a name?" Well, ask your bank directors to discount your note, and you will find out.

AN uptown establishment advertises: "Wanted—Experienced operator on girls' waists." The young man who has but one talent will now please step forward and unfold his little napkin.

"OH, dear! you've driven that hairpin way into my head," screamed a lady customer to the milliner who was fastening a bonnet on the head. "Sorry, mum," replied the woman; "accidents will hairpin."

A YOUNG lover in Iowa paid $40 for a locomotiv to run him thirty-five miles to see his girl, and when he got there the family bulldog ran him two miles and didn't charge him a cent. Corporations hav no souls.

AN article in a Chicago paper is headed, "Kissed by Her Husband." A Chicago man who has read it writes us that although it is rhetorically a fine piece of work, the effect is spoiled by its utter lack of probability.

AN uptown woman narrowly escaped a terrible death the other day. Her husband kept a bottle of forty-cent whisky in the house, and she concluded to take a swallow of the stuff. Fortunately she got hold of the wrong bottle and swallowed a quantity of rat poison.

"THAT boy will make a very popular preacher," said a father, pointing to his eight-year-old son, who was kissing his little female companion.

"What makes you think so?" asked the mother.

"Why, can't you see for yourself?" was the reply; "so young, and yet so fond of the girls."

YOU will find, my dear boy, that the dearly-prized kiss
Which with rapture you snatched from the half-willing miss
Is sweeter by far than the legalized kisses
You giv the same girl when you've made her a Mrs.

THE coming National Convention of Conglomerate American Servant Girls will be watched with breathless anxiety, as there is to be settled the great question as to whether mistresses who hav the audacity to ask for one night off a week shall be blown up with dynamite or peaceably left in the lurch on the first wash-day.

THE boy stood on the gallery floor,
At the naughty female show,
And cast his yearning glances o'er
Bald-headed sin below.
"I'm too far back," he sadly said,
Yet dare not forward go,
For he saw an aged deacon's head
First in the foremost row.

EPITAPH on a tombstone in Chautauqua county:
"Neuralgia worked on Mrs. Smith
Till 'neath the sod it laid her.
She was a worthy Methodist,
And served as a crusader.
Friends came delighted at her call,
In plenty of good carriages.
Death is the common lot of all,
And comes more oft than marriages."

A WELL-MEANING person givs hints telling "How to liv on seventy-five cents a week." There is such a thing as living too close, and most editors will just keep on squandering eighty cents a week, even if they see ruin staring them in the face. If some determined person takes a Texas legislator out into the woods, and persuades him with a gun to tell all that he knows, a great deal of invaluable information can be extracted from him on this subject. Week after week the average legislator was receiving but two dollars a day, and yet out of that scanty pittance he would spend six dollars in treating his friends, three dollars for a team, and having squandered six or eight dollars more in sundries, he would still hav fifteen or twenty dollars in change left over from his salary of two dollars per day.

AN INCIDENT OF PIONEER DAYS.

In the early days of Michigan the pioneer respected the Sabbath, because it was the day to go hunting and pay visits. Churches were few and far apart outside of the towns, and the presence of a circuit-rider created as much excitement as a bear hunt. One day a settler named Roberts, then living in the woods of Clinton county, happened to be at the county seat on business, and before leaving he called on a minister to hav a talk.

"Is it wrong to hunt on Sunday?" he asked.

"Very wrong," was the reply.

"How about playing cards?"

"That is wicked."

"Can't we hav a shooting match?"

"Not on the Sabbath—not if you want to be good."

"Can't we set log heaps afire, dig out foxes, tap sugar trees, look after bear-traps, or go fishing on Sunday?"

"Not as a Christian man. Let me read you a few lines from the good book."

When Roberts started for home he walked very fast, and about 9 o'clock at night he arrived at the house of the nearest neighbor, and walked in on the family and called out:

"Say, Bostwick, do you want to go to heaven?"

"Why, yes, I suppose so," replied the other.

"Then be at my house at daybreak to-morrow with your axe. I'm going to giv the land to build a meeting-house on, and you've got to help cut the logs."

"Any hurry about it?"

"Hurry? Well, I should say so. We've got to begin early and work late, and put in our best licks, or our ever getting within forty miles of heaven will be such a tight squeeze as to rub the hide off. Bostwick, we're sinners of the deepest dye, and I tell you we've got to git up and hump, and hand over as much maple-sugar as will pay for at least four sermons and some powerful loud singing, or we'll be cut down like a flower."

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

Notes and Clippings.

A READING, Pa., dispatch says: "The Lebanon classis of the Reformed Church of the United States found Rev. Alexander S. Keiser, of Pottsville, accused of unlawful intimacy, breach of promis of marriage, and falsehood, guilty, and deposed him from the Christian ministry."

THE New York World, under the proprietorship of Mr. Pulitzer, is saying some very sharp things. Here is one: "At this moment, when Ingersollism is rampant everywhere and the faith in a beneficent and omnipotent Providence is growing dim, it is gratifying to observe that an opera-bouffe company has come to grief at Chicago."

AN old account-book that was in use fifty-four years before the Declaration of Independence has come to light in Georgia. It is bound with parchment, and sewed together with sinews of some sort. The chirography is bold and plain. In it are some good recipes for dyeing yarns, etc., which were used in 1722, the date which the first entry in the book bears.

THE idea of selling kisses at church sociables has been followed by another kindred device quite as novel and bearing the same stamp of Yankee ingenuity. Baskets containing suppers for two persons are sold by auction. Each bears the card of the woman who prepared the meals inclosed, and the purchaser has her for his companion at the table. What next?

IN the eradication of demoralizing literature and vicious pictures from the land it has been the policy of Mr. Anthony Comstock to first induce a man to violate the law for pecuniary gain and then arrest him. In his new capacity as general peace officer he employs the same efforts. He first irritates a citizen by ordering him to move on, and as soon as he has provoked him into a breach of the peace he arrests him and drags him to the station. Mr. Comstock should exercise care lest his tendency to reform society assume an aggravating shape.—World.

AN almost incredible piece of news comes from the Prussian capital—the seizure by the police of Boccaccio's "Decameron." For nearly thirty years this masterpiece of the Italian writer of the 14th century has appeared in the approved German translation by D. Soltau in the "Library of Nativ and Foreign Classics," published by A. Hoffman & Co., Berlin. All the copies on the shelves of the publishing house were confiscated and taken to the police office. Sic transit gloria mundi! It is hoped that the law courts will not confirm this sensational seizure.

SAYS the Boston Globe: "Bradlaugh seems to hav come out of the present struggle in the Commons with more honor than his opponents. He made a speech in support of his claims which even his enemies declared to be able and dignified, but that pig-headed conservatism which is the strongest British trait next to self-interest was too powerful for logic or oratory to overcome and the Affirmation bill was defeated. However, Bradlaugh, barring any sudden disease, has a good many years before him, and the chances are that he will liv to enter the Commons in his own way."

A CERTAIN minister, near Dover, Wabaunsee county, went into the field and gathered corn, one Sunday morning, assisted by his wife, and then went to town. He saw a crowd assembled at the church, and asked a boy what was going on there. The boy told him "Sunday-school!" He exclaimed, "Do they hav Sunday school on Saturday?" The boy said "No, they hold it on Sunday." The preacher soon found out that he had lost a day; then he remembered that he had an appointment to preach at the White school-house, and pulling out his watch, said: "It is time I was there." The parson will hav to keep a better count on his notch-stick hereafter.

IRELAND is fairly entitled to the credit of having produced the greatest scoundrel of modern times. Shakspere, perhaps, foresaw him:

> "My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
> And every tongue brings in a several tale,
> And every tale condemns me for a villain."

But the several cross-examinations hav brought out a thousand details, and added innumerable delicate shadows to the infamy of Carey's character which Shakspere himself could hardly hav realized. An assassin himself, and a suborner of assassination, Carey's domestic instincts were not in the least offended by the knowledge that his wife and children were living on terms of intimacy with Joe Brady and others of that stamp. A punctilious attendant at communion, he confessed with a pleasant laugh that his reason for planning the "removal" of Mr. Forster was that "he would not wish to meet him in heaven." It is a cruel necessity which compels the executiv to receive the testimony of such a scoundrel and protect him from popular vengeance.—Sun.

UNDER the head of "Pharisaical Laws" the new World says: "The amended Sunday law is an improvement on the original Penal Code in so far as it makes more distinct what was before uncertain and extends the list of articles to be sold on the Sabbath. But even in its present shape the Sunday law is loaded down with pharisaical holiness. It is calculated, if not designed, to encourage the very thing it pretends to prohibit. It is a law which is now more impossible of enforcement than ever. Unamended, the law was a farce. It was notoriously a dead letter. Amended, with the idea impressed on the authorities that it is to be construed liberally, it will be more empatically than before a dead statute. A law which the popular sentiment condemns and which cannot be enforced is a public evil, since it weakens the public respect for all laws. What a farce to prohibit the sale of liquor through a front door and wink at it through a side entrance! What nonsense to maintain that a policeman may take notice of a front-door disregard of law, but must be blind to a side-door violation! A law which can be so construed is a law to enforce hypocrisy and not temperance."

A SOCIETY FOR THE SUPPRESSION.

We hav many societies now;
  Too many, almost, to mention,
Societies for the protection,
  Societies for the prevention,
Societies for the suppression
  Of this and of that and the other,
And sometimes they do us much good,
  And sometimes are nothing but bother.

Although with societies we
  Are dosed, as it seems, to satiety,
New Yorkers at present are feeling
  The need of one other society.
If liberty still we desire,
  To hold as our dearest possession,
A society ought to be founded
  For Anthony Comstock's suppression.

His ways are not virtuous ways,
  His methods not any too moral,
And often he uses his power
  To browbeat and bully and quarrel.
The bonds of respect for the law
  In all of our bosoms it loosens,
When men must be daily confronted
  With such a perennial nuisance.

The view that he takes of himself
  Has grown to be quite autocratic,
And license to do as he pleases,
  Has made him so wildly erratic,
That another society now
  Is needed, one strong and backbony,
For peaceable people's protection
  And for the supression of Tony.

—World.

A SALOON keeper in a wild Western town was recently converted and became a member of the church, but continued at his business, which he proposed to run in a proper manner. One night a crowd of cowboys congregated in his place, and after filling up they began to be very boisterous. "Hold on, boys," said the saloonist, "this is no place for such riotous conduct. You know I hav experienced a change of heart, and am now an advocate of peace." "Oh, giv us a slack on that chin music," howled the crowd. "We don't want no gospel grease spread on to our hair." "But, boys, I don't want you to be so loud." "Hi-yi," they shouted; "listen at the church organ playing hymns; ain't it a whole meetin'-house with a brass cupalow throwed in?" "Listen to me, boys. I—" "Hooray for a sermon! Les hav a hot one. Shovel the brimstone right in, and make the fire sizz!" Then he got mad, and whipping out his revolver, he said: "You hear me, you rantankerous rioters of the Rockies. I'm a man of peace, of meek and gentle humility, but this old gun of mine is jist what she uster be, and the first d——n skunk of a cowboy that don't like my style will git it right where it will do the most good. I've started in to liv the new life, and I propose to act in accordance with it, and any white-livered coyote that raises a howl will chaw dust in five seconds and not be able to spit it out. I'll be d——d if I ain't going to run this shebang on strictly religious principles or shut her up. Now git out o' here quick; there's the church bell, and I've got to conduct the services. You hear me! Skip!"—The Drummer.

IT is probable that no clerical scandal occurring in the West has occasioned more feeling or deeper interest than the Hoffman scandal, another phase of which has just closed at Bloomington, Ill. Hoffman was one of the most eloquent and noted Methodist ministers, and took the pulpit of the First church at Bloomington about four years ago. His name was attached to various lustful scandals in Rushville, Hillsboro, Quincy, and Peoria, where he had served, but he had escaped them all. One year ago last February he was hauled up before the local authorities of the First church, charged with bastardy by Miss Bettie Robinson, a young woman who had been his housekeeper, his wife being a chronic invalid, and now dead. He was suspended and his case referred to the Illinois conference which met in Lincoln, Ill., September last. The conference expelled him from the church, and then Hoffman, backed by friends, began publishing the Daily Independent at Bloomington, devoted principally to laying Hoffman's innocence before the people. Some time ago Hoffman, with great flourish, sued Bettie for $5,000 damages for libel, asserting that in this trial he would demonstrate his innocence. On the first day of the trial Hoffman reduced his claim for damages from $5,000 to 1 cent, by this sharp practice shutting out all testimony as to his previous history which was only admissible in amelioration or reduction of damages. The case was hotly contested and went to the jury on Saturday last at 11 A.M., at which hour they retired. A disagreement was generally conceded, and after forty-six hours in the jury room announcement was made that the jury could not agree and they were discharged. But the way the ballot stood was a surprise to some, and a most disagreeable one to Hoffman and supporters. It had been industriously noised about that the jury stood ten to two in Hoffman's favor, and Monday morning his more sanguin friends in Bloomington claimed eleven votes, and were chafing because the majority-rule plan was not recognized in the working of the jury system. Consequently, when it was known that the ballot was eight for Miss Robinson and four for Hoffman, there was a general elongation of countenances among the hopeful ones. The first ballot taken after the jury retired stood eight to four in favor of Miss Robinson, and the last one, taken about ten minutes before the jury came in, showed no change. This vote in a church court would hav been a verdict against Hoffman, as a majority rules; consequently this may be accepted as a reaffirmation of the decision of both courts of the church by which Hoffman was found guilty of bastardy and expelled from the Methodist Episcopal ministry.

News of the Week.

A SON of Henry Ward Beecher was in court last Saturday to answer to a charge of assault and battery.

THE Friends' yearly meeting in New York commenced on the 27th and continues until Thursday, the 31st.

A PLOT to shoot the king of Roumania at the opening of the next Parliament is reported to hav been discovered.

THERE has been a rupture between the French and Chinese troops at Tonquin. The French commander was killed.

THE employees of the Marvin Safe Company hav contributed $365 toward the erection of a statue of Peter Cooper.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, the champion pugilist, is to open a liquor palace in Boston, from which he expects to derive profit and glory.

GRACE church, in New York, is to replace its old steeple with a $60,000 new one. Millions for steeples, and not one cent for taxes.

MR. PULSOR, of Brooklyn, died suddenly while attending church last Saturday evening. Warnings of this kind multiply, but no one heeds them.

THE effect of the pope's letter on the Irish question was noted last Sunday in diminished attendance at Catholic churches and in a falling off in the amounts of money contributed

THE Rev. John Howard, of the Park Reformed church in Jersey City, N. J., is accused of lying by members of his congregation. The charge is more unusual than the offense.

EIGHT persons were killed and seven wounded by the explosion of a steamboat boiler on an arm of Petaluma Bay, Cal., on the 25th. In addition to those killed and wounded ten are missing.

THE Rev. Father Annett, of Montreal, Can., publishes a letter in which he avers that he was cured of paralysis by visiting the shrine of St. Anne, and praying to the Virgin for relief. Such lying as this is unnecessary.

THE coronation of Alexander III. as czar of Russia was effected last Sunday without accident. The ceremony was attended with great pomp and display. The Nihilists were quiet, no explosion of bombs took place, and perfect order prevailed. The czar can congratulate himself.

ON the morning of the 21st a violent northeast gale struck Williamstown, Ohio, accompanied with rain, which afterward turned to snow, eight inches of which fell. The mercury fell to the freezing point. As most of the farmers in that vicinity had finished planting it is expected that a great amount of labor has been lost.

ONE hundred and twenty members of the House of Commons, chiefly moderate Liberals and Radicals, hav sent a memorial to Mr. Gladstone, asking the introduction of a bill granting female suffrage in any franchise measure the government may propose. Beside those signing the memorial, many members hav pledged themselvs to vote for a woman's suffrage bill, if the bill be proposed by some private member and not introduced as a government measure.

THE big suspension bridge between New York and Brooklyn was opened on Thursday, the 24th, with great eclat. The president, the governor of New York, the mayors of this city and Brooklyn, numerous aldermen, and other dignitaries were present, and oratory and fireworks were wasted to an almost unlimited extent. The people of both cities turned out by the thousand. Guns were fired, whistles were blown, and bells were rung. It was called the wedding of the cities, and Brooklyn, the fluttering bride, will long remember the day.

Communications.

Paul at Philippi.

Sailing from Troas, Paul and Silas passed the island of Samothracia, and landing at the port of Neapolis, proceeded by land to Philippi, a distance of ten or twelve miles. In the Syriac version, Philippi is called "the chief city of Macedonia;" but in the Greek it is "the chief city of that part of Macedonia"—which is doubtless more correct, for it was a military and agricultural, not a commercial town. Here Paul stayed over the Sabbath. There being no synagog in the town he went out to the riverside, where "a house of prayer was seen," or, as in the revised version, "where we supposed there was a place of prayer." Here were some women assembled—no men—and among them one Lydia, a seller of purple from the city of Thyatira. This city was founded by Seleucus Nicator before 280 B. C., and was largely inhabited by Jews, who followed the trade of dyeing and probably worshiped the Sibyl Sambatha (Smith's Bib. Dic.). Lydia, who already "feared God," was at once converted and baptized by Paul. She then urged the missionaries to take lodging at her house, which they appear to hav done.

One other convert was made during the sojourn at the Jewish tradeswoman's house. A female soothsayer followed after the preachers, saying: "These are the servants of the most high God, and they announce to you the way of life." This she repeated daily until it became such an annoyance that Paul grew indignant, and addressing the spirit said: "I command thee, in the name of Jesus Messiah, that thou come out of her." The spirit obeyed at once. But now the masters of the maid whose mediumship had brought them gain, seized Paul and Silas, and dragged them before the magistrates at the market, saying: "These men disturb our city, for they are Jews, and they preach to us customs which it is not lawful for us to receive and practice, because we are Romans." A mob gathered, and the prisoners appear to hav made no defense. The prefects, it is said, rent their garments (a singular proceeding for Roman magistrates), and ordered the accused to be scourged and imprisoned. And as if the prison walls might not hold them, their feet were made fast in stocks.

But at midnight, while they were praying and glorifying God, the foundations of the prison were shaken, the doors opened, and the bands of all the prisoners unloosed. The keeper awoke, and supposing that they had all escaped, drew a sword and was about to kill himself. But Paul cried out: "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." So the keeper "lighted for himself a lamp," and falling before the feet of Paul and Silas said: "My Lords, what must I do that I may hav life?" They answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Messiah, and thou wilt hav life, thou and thy house." And at that "same hour of the night" the keeper, having washed Paul and Silas of their stripes, was in turn baptized, with all the members of his house. He then invited them into the house and set a table for them.

The next morning the keeper received a private order from the prefect to let Paul and Silas go. But the prisoners said to him: "They hav scourged us, unoffending men, and Romans, before all the world, and hav cast us into prison, and now, do they secretly let us out? No, surely; but let them come themselvs and bring us out."

If Paul and Silas were indeed Roman citizens, why did they not say so at first? Why did they endure scourging contrary to law without a protest? The earthquake had alarmed the prefects so that they were willing to let the prisoners go, but now the authorities are informed that they hav scourged two unoffending Romans, which is a worse fright to them than the earthquake. So the prefects come with a humble apology and entreat the prisoners to leave the city. This being satisfactory, Paul and Silas returned to Lydia's house, and after comforting the brethren they departed from Philippi.

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Let us now notice a few points in the epistle of Paul to the Philippians.

1. It is addressed to the saints, elders, and deacons by Paul and Timothy, who, according to Acts, was with Paul at Philippi.

2. Paul thinks that what has happened to him is for the furtherance of the gospel, because his bonds on account of the Messiah are matters of notoriety in all the court (Gr. praitorion) and to all others (i, 13).

3. He hopes shortly to send Timothy to them, having no other one "here" (i. e., at Rome) who, like himself, will sincerely care for their welfare (ii, 19-20).

4. He beseeches two women, Enodias and Syntyche, to be of one mind in the Lord. He also beseeches his "true yoke-fellow" to assist those women who toiled with him in the gospel, together with Clement and the rest of his helpers (iv, 2-3). Who the "true yoke-fellow" was is unknown. Clement of Alexandria takes it to mean Paul's wife, and Renan thinks it was Lydia; but Canon Farrar supposes Lydia was dead, and that the word "yoke-fellow" is a pun on the Greek name Suzugos, which ought to hav been Anglicized Syzygus. But there is no evidence of a pun in the Syriac, and as Paul did not probably write Greek, we consider the last hypothesis far less tenable than the other two; and we incline rather to that of Renan—that Lydia was Paul's true yoke-fellow—for he writes to the Corinthians: "Hav we not authority to carry about with us a sister as a wife, just as the other legates and the brothers of our Lord, and as Kepha?" (1, Cor. ix, 5).

5. At the close of the epistle to the Philippians he writes: "All the saints salute you, especially those of Cæsar's household." Not only is there no evidence that any of Nero's household were Christians, but we hav heretofore adduced presumptiv proof to the contrary. If, therefore, the passage is genuin, we insist that the reference is to Augustus Cesar.

PAUL AT THESSALONICA.

Leaving Phillippi, the missionaries traveled to Amphipolis, thirty-three miles; thence to Apollonia, thirty miles; and Thence to Thessalonica, thirty-seven miles. Here there was a synagog.

"And Paul, as was his custom, went in to them; and during three Sabbaths he discoursed with them from the scriptures; expounding and showing that the Messiah was to suffer and to arise from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I announced to you is the Messiah. And some of them believed and adhered to Paul and Silas; and of those Greeks who feared God, a great many; and also of noted women not a few" (xvii, 2-4).

We again repeat our disbelief in the conversion of "a great many God-fearing Greeks" at this or any other place. And this disbelief is confirmed by the circumstance that the "we" portion of Acts, which began in the preceding chapter, now disappears until we come to chapter xx. Thessalonica was always largely inhabited by Jews; it is still a great commercial port with seventy thousand inhabitants, of whom nearly one-third are Jews. When Paul visited it there was but one synagog; now there are about forty in Salonika (Farrar's St. Paul, p. 287).

The preaching of Paul and Silas so offended the rigid Jews that they gathered a mob and assaulted the house of Jason, where they expected to find the preachers. But as they were not there, the mob seized Jason and others, and bringing them before the chiefs of the city they cried out:

"These are they who hav terrified all the country; and lo! they hav come hither also. And this Jason is their entertainer; and they all resist the commands of Cæsar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus."

It was certainly a mistake to charge Jason and the other brethren who were residents of the town with "terrifying all the country," and with "coming hither also;" and this seems to hav been the judgment of the magistrates; for it is said that they merely put the accused under bonds to keep the peace and let them go. But Paul and Silas, finding it no longer safe to stay, were sent off by night to Berea, about fifty miles southwestward.

THE EPISTLES TO THE THESSALONIANS.

In the two epistles to the Thessalonians we note the following points:

1. They purport to be addressed by Paul, Silvanas (i. e., Silas), and Timothy.

2. The subscription in the Syriac codex says that the first epistle was written from Athens and sent by Timothy, and that the second was written from Laodicea in Pisidia (Phrygia?) and sent by Tychicus. But the oldest Greek codices, S and V, omit all this, while the next oldest, A, says that both epistles were written from Athens.

3. The Thessalonians are praised as patterns of piety for all believers in Macedonia and Achaia; in every place their faith is heard of (1 Thess. i, 7, 8).

4. They are addressed as former worshipers of idols—that is, gentiles rather than Jews (9).

5. They are reminded of the shameful treatment suffered at Philippi (ii, 2).

6. Also that "we labored and toiled, working with our own hands, by night and by day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you" (10).

7. Also that they became assimilated to the churches in Judea, and suffered from their own countrymen as the Judean believers suffered "from the Jews, the persons who slew our Lord Jesus, the Messiah, and persecuted their own prophets and us" (14, 15).

N. B.—The Jesus of the gospels was said to hav been crucified by order of the Roman procurator, Pontius Pilate. The Jews said to him, "It is not lawful for us to put a man to death" (John xviii, 31). But the Jesus who was stoned and hanged about a hundred years before was certainly slain by the Jews, as Paul avers.

8. Paul says he purposed to come to the Thessalonians again, but Satan hindered him (18).

9. Timothy, who was sent from Athens to minister to the Thessalonians, had returned with a good report (iii, 2, 6).

10. Paul expounds the second advent doctrin. Jesus died and rose again; so those believers who hav died will be raised again when Jesus comes. When the Lord descends from heaven and the chief angel sounds the trump of God, the dead in the Messiah will rise first; then the living believers will be caught up together with them in the clouds, to be forever with the Lord. But as to the time when this is to happen it is not necessary to write. The Lord will come as a thief in the night, when all is peace and quiet. But the Thessalonians are not in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief (iv, v).

11. In the second epistle he adds that when the Lord Jesus appears with the host of his angels "he will execute vengeance with the burning of fire on them that know not God and acknowledge not the gospel of our Lord Jesus the Messiah. For these will be recompensed with the judgment of eternal destruction from the presence of our Lord and from the glory of his power" (i, 8, 9).

Query: Does not this mean the annihilation of the unbelievers?

12. But the day of the Lord may not be so near as some hav inferred from Paul's words. It will not come until there be a defection or rebellion, "and that man of sin be revealed the son of perdition, who is an opposer, and exalteth himself above all that is called God and Worshipful; so that he sitteth in the temple of God, as a God, and displayeth himself as if he were God. . . . For the mystery of the Evil One already beginneth to be operativ; and only if that which now hindereth shall be taken from the midst, then at length will that Evil One be revealed, whom our Lord Jesus will consume by the breath of his mouth and will bring to naught by the visibility of his advent. For the coming of that [Evil One] is the working of Satan, with all power, and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceptivness of iniquity in them that perish, because they did not receive the love of the truth, by which they might hav life. Therefore God will send upon them the operation of deception, that they may believe a lie, and that they all may be condemned who believe not the truth, but hav pleasure in iniquity" (ii, 3–12).

N. B.—Forty years ago William Miller, Joshua V. Himes, and a multitude of others, expected the immediate advent of Jesus Christ. Mr. Miller, the first propounder of the second coming of Christ in 1843, is long since dead; his lieutenant, Himes, has become a Catholic priest, and the writer of these essays, who was as honest a believer in the doctrin as anybody, not excepting Paul himself, now declares it a delusion. And yet no plainer doctrin is taught in the New Testament.

13. Again the Thessalonians are reminded that Paul and his associates were not burdensome to them, and did not eat bread gratuitously, but labored night and day as an example to others (iii, 8, 9). But it appears elsewhere that while at Thessalonica he received aid twice from the Philippians (Phil. iv, 16).

14. At the close of the second epistle are these words: "The salutation in the writing of my own hand, I, Paul, hav written it; which is the token in all my epistles, so I write." We suspect that his age and defectiv eyesight compelled him to employ an amanuensis; for when he wrote this and other epistles at Rome he was probably not far from eighty years of age.

Materialism or Spiritism — "Which Is the Greater Miracle?"

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: You surely deserve great credit for permitting in your columns the thorough discussion of this most important and intensely interesting subject, thereby stimulating acute thought and promulgating general intelligence. It is a cheering sign of the times in general, and indicating especially the healthy and vigorous mental condition of your many readers, that the study of these profound problems has ceased to be monopolized by a few transcendent philosophers of the Spencer school, who hav accomplished nothing practically beyond enveloping the subject in increased mystery, and that it is now considered the privilege of the layman, or the laborer and mechanic, to wrestle with the yet unfolded problems of existence, and with the aid of ordinary logic, reason, and sense, add their mite toward their final solution.

To the latter class I belong, and though strictly occupied by the burdens of my business and trade during six days of the week, I rejoice in the mental recreation of the few hours I can devote to the study of these complex subjects on the seventh.

Now I hav the fixed idea that man, in seeking for final causes, or a solution of the many varied and grand phenomena of nature, in something still grander, in something beyond all, in some superior power or mind, in an infinity beyond natural infinity, in a directing and guiding force, or in any superior, or an a priori being or person, etc., has made his most lamentable mistake and thus involved himself in the subtle meshes of a labyrinthian mystery, from which, indeed, all extrication is impossible; whereas, in fact, a comparativly easy solution lies at our very door, and within our immediate reach, and when finally discovered will be found as plain and simple as a child's a, b, c.

And in discussing these problems of nature and life in The Truth Seeker, it is fortunate that its participants are all of the progressiv class who hav long ago abandoned crude notions of theology, and its account of a fabulous creation, and who in the main are agreed upon the following: 1. That the proposition of any being existing eternally prior to the universe, and finally creating it from nothing, is absurd. 2. That time is eternal in duration in the past and will be in the futture. 3. That space is infinit in expanse, and 4, That infinit matter fills this space now, always has, and that its quantity can never be diminished. Upon this plain synthesis of universal existence I think we all agree. Also upon the fact that a solution of the one overwhelming mystery of abstract existence, or the existence per se of infinit matter—considered simply as such—alone is and will forever remain beyond the boundary of human conception, and is therefore impossible. But it is concerning the origin of finite forms and phenomena, the constituent elements and potencies of matter, the methods, order, and laws of this vast aggregation of substance, its qualities and capabilities in creating and evolving consciousness or all special and minor forms, that we can reasonably hope eventually to attain final knowledge.

When the world was in its infancy and the human mind crude and simple, the idea of God and spirit was invented to account for natural phenomena resembling in its beauty and aptitude the works designed and created by man. As the latter could not "come by chance," so it was inferred that the former could not possibly evolve from unconscious, crude matter, but of course necessitated a guiding force or mind. Thus spirit ideas were invented, then transmitted, authoritativly promulgated, and meekly venerated as sublime truths. Now, though of late largely divested of its coarsest conception of an anthropomorphic God, yet the ardent desire of sentimental humanity to attain a state of eternal bliss after death is the cause why the idea is still held dear and fervently defended by intelligent men and women to-day, and whose creed may be briefly stated to be that mind exists as a "separate entity," prior to organism and independent of matter, as "a universal conscious mind element," "the creator of matter;" that it is the directing force or guiding principle "outside of all matter, directing all matter," and without which all nature would instantly come to a standstill.

From Mrs. Macdonald's contribution to this disdiscussion, of all probably the most able, I quote: "If the philosophy of Materialism explains all explainable phenomena, . . . then it covers the whole ground of being, and there is no room, nor place, nor use for any other. But if it should be found that Materialism only half covers the ground, what then? If there are found facts and phenomena that it does not explain, what shall we do?"

Well, supposing, as yet, Materialism does not explain certain phenomena, is that any reason why we should condemn it? Would she strangle her infant child if, perchance, it creeps before it walks? And if Materialism does or may not explain all phenomena, what indeed can or ever will explain it?

To assume an explanation on the basis of Spiritism is no explanation, as, upon analysis, the basis of this hypothesis is infinitly more inadmissible as an original factor in producing life than matter. The latter embraces the sum-total of all existence, an infinit quantity of substance and co-existent force, tangible, real, subject to chemical analysis, and reducible to its constituted eternal elements; the latter has as its entire basic constituents—nothing! or otherwise is composed of substance invisible, intangible, and utterly inconceivable. A handful of soil, a stone, a piece of coal, an ounce of powder, protoplasm, all can be reduced to their component parts. Now let Spiritists produce an ounce, or one single grain, of the something spirits are composed of, and reduce it to its component parts, before they presume to come into competition with a philosophy based upon universal fact and reality.

Materialism alone is integral, absolute, and embraces within its broad realms all existence. Whatever is exists and has tangibility of form; whatever is matter, substance, force, whatever constitutes man or beast, God or devil, ghost or spirit (if such beings exist), must be material and consequently explainable (eventually if not now) by Materialism, or it is nothing. If spirits are real, and the existence of the "soul" after death be a fact; if mind as a separate entity exists at all, all these so-called spiritual forms must indeed be material and reducible to their component parts by chemical analysis, or the whole and the parts—every atom—instantly vanish into "such stuff as dreams are made of."

Matter, the original atom in greater or lesser aggregation, is the great necessity of all entities; and no entities, bodies, outlines, or forms are thinkable without it.

Matter—substance—both organic and inorganic, gross and subtle, tangible and ethereal, comprises the totality of all existence, and pervades and fills all the vast expanse of infinit space. Whatever is—no matter what it is—how formed in reality or conception, in its last analysis, it must be material and explainable by Materialism, or upon critical examination it instantly resolves itself into its antithesis, shadow, phantasm, dreams, unsubstantiality; all of which are not existences per se, but nothing.

All forms are finite; having a beginning, they must end. All forms are subject to the laws of growth and decay. All forms are infinitly small in their beginning, and, by the assimilation of food, or by process of accumulation, grow for a time, then disintegrate, and the material goes back to renew the process in like or different form. If personal, individual spirits hav a beginning, are born, grow, then they must assimilate; if they assimilate, they must assimilate matter—atoms or particles—and then are subject to the laws controling all matter, and must eventually disintegrate and die.

Yet Spiritists insist upon the eternal existence of their spirits, upon their total exemption from the imperativ law of growth and decay; but they sadly fail to prove the assumption, direct or indirect, or to point to a single analogy in nature resembling spirit existence, or to an organic body or an inorganic form, composed of minor parts—not destined to inevitable dissolution!

Then supposing "there are found facts that Materialism does not explain," what of it? Is not Spiritism an infinitly greater mystery from beginning to end, from A to Z, all through its alphabet? If the highly-complicated and ingenious mechanisms of animal organisms—as embodied in nature's grandest work—man, cannot reasonably possess the lofty functions of a Homer, Shakspere, or Rubens, how in the world can the invisible, unthinkable, spirit-body, without eyes, ears, brain, etc., produce these wonderful results? And again, candidly, which is the greater mystery, to evolve consciousness from unconscious but living, vital, subtle matter and co-existent, eternal, ever-acting force—infinit and eternal—than that this same result should be produced by nothing, or its equivalent? In the one case the senses, eye, ear, feeling, hunger, gratification of animal passions and desires, at least furnish a clue to a dawn of intelligence; on the other hand we hav absolutely nothing but assumption. And has Materialism, in the very limited period it has been suffered to exist, indeed arrived at the summit and can ascend no higher? May it not, with the glorious progress it is making at the present time, soon be able to shed new light upon existing mysteries? Why oppose the infant science just safely emerging from its terrible struggle with its giant foe? Why ignore its grand achievements? Its capacity and power to accomplish eventually the final solution of all the mysteries of life?

But, conceding for a moment that Materialism is incompetent to achieve these grand final results, and some other science steps forth and solve the problem, would the latter, in doing so, not simultaneously emerge from its mystic basis of Spiritism, or Transcendentalism, or Idealism, or any other ism, and spontaneously mingle and submerge itself with and in Materialism, and in this involuntary process absolutely lose its identity and come forth, in spite of all protestations, a pure transcendent—Materialism?

No one claims that Materialism is able as yet to furnish a proper answer to the great riddle of riddles—cosmic existence—nor would it weaken its premises or lose any of its lustrous power were it to concede that it probably never will or can supply a satisfactory answer to the overwhelming and stupendous mystery of the "whence," "why," and "how" of this infinit cosmos within infinit space. It simply and logically infers its eternal existence because all antithetical conclusions are self-evidently absurd; and, moreover, because identical objections may be urged against any a priori cause which may be advanced against the independent existence of nature. Therefore it peremptorily postulates the eternity of time, space, and matter; dismisses the "whence," because it implies creation from nothing; the "why," because it implies a purpose, plan, mind preceding material existence (an absurdity, as there was no preceding existence, and also because these qualities again necessitate another mind preceding them—an infinitly greater mystery!); the "how," because it concedes in humble dignity that this is indeed beyond human knowledge; but insists that all other sciences or theories are alike unable to explain this one mystery, or to submit even an approximate explanation of the "How is it that it is and exists at all?"

All-sufficient for its basis of faith, Materialism contents itself by building its philosophy upon existence, upon nature, upon knowledge and fact, upon matter and force, and from these formulates its theories, and hopes eventually to explain all phenomena still clad in mystery.

The corner-stone of this belief is the original, eternal, changeless atom—truly the only actually immortal thing in the universe. Its very simplicity constitutes its power, its grandeur, and its efficacy to explain all in need of explanation. But for just this simple reason Materialism is repugnant to many thinking minds, who persist that causes so insignificant can never produce phenomena so grand, and then proceed, beyond the realms of nature, there to seek a factor greater than all phenomena who or which plans and causes all; but the "whence" and "how" of whom or which no one pretends to explain, thus leading us from light into darkness, from lesser to infinitly greater mystery.

All bodies, forms, are but aggregations of atoms, and all atoms force; and the differentiations of the various forces constitute all phenomena. And thus the correlations of the different atoms are the sole cause producing all results. And motion is an eternal condition of matter and force; and any aggregation of atoms, therefore, being of its own inherent attributes continually in motion, is subject to continual change, and which includes conditions of organic life, growth, and decay. Thus, while all atoms are eternally the same, the various combinations of atoms continually produce new phenomena. And this universe, composed of an infinit number of atoms, being eternal, and having ever produced and now ever producing new forms, this necessitates that all old or preceding phenomena must cease — die — and its atoms seek new relations and new affinities.

The simple fact that we now behold daily, with our own eyes and senses, the growth and development of new forms, furnishes absolute proof that all forms must die and return to their original elements to supply the material for new forms; as the eternity in the past—which all must concede—has been ample time to accomplish the evolution of immortal souls or spirits from every atom in the universe, and though but one spirit were evolved every 10,000,000,000 millions of years.

If universal annihilation of all forms were not the immutable order of nature, then there simply would—could not now be any nature, as all it could ever possibly accomplish in the future would hav been accomplished an eternity ago, and naught exist now but immortal souls.

All our knowledge, all analogy, demonstrates the destructibility of all forms. No matter how vast, how grand, how lovely, all forms, by virtue of their own being, all must end. Thus mountains must crumble to dust, the earth come to an end, and even the sun will cease to shine. And if that diamond sparkling upon the breast of yonder beautiful woman is destined to succumb to this inexorable decree of the immutable forces contained in the infinit aggregation of atoms, why should, how could, that delicate texture of her sparkling eye possibly survive death and remain, during the more transcendent conditions of her supposed spirit-life, in a condition of eternal statu quo and never die?

Then Materialism need not "deny facts and ignore phenomena;" on the contrary, it bravely accepts them, regardless of egotistical notions and desires, and from them proves all it affirms and calmly proceeds to seek in the potencies of matter the cause of all life. It is the Spiritist who most emphatically needs the admonition that facts most emphatically prove that all finite forms must die!

It was the intention of the writer to embody in the above a reply to the Hon. Arthur B. Bradford, as also to giv a crude theory of the supposed methods of nature to transform unconscious into conscious matter—thus bridging the supposed gulf existing between the two; but my letter having already reached longer proportions than originally intended, and my Sunday hours of leisure having vanished, I must postpone the subject for the present.

Better than Ever.

From the Freethought Directory.

On the death of D. M. Bennett, many feared for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but Liberals everywhere are gratified to learn that under the control and supervision of Mrs. D. M. Bennett and E. M. Macdonald, this widely circulated Liberal journal has not diminished in the least in value; and many declare that THE TRUTH SEEKER was never quite so good as it is to-day.

A few days since we were the recipient from Mrs. Bennett and Mr. Macdonald, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, of the four valuable books, "A Truth Seeker Around the World." These books were the last work of their author, D. M. Bennett, and are a fit closing testimonial of his energetic and activ labors in the cause of Freethought. Mr. Bennett had never been spoiled, as some hav been, by living in seclusion from the people. He was brought up among the people, and although not educated in collegiate lore, had what was very much better, if he could hav had but one kind, a thoroughly practical education. He had the sort of education that made Thomas Paine, Abraham Lincoln, and Horace Greeley leaders of thought in their day. He knew how to write so as to interest the ordinary reader. And he made these books of travels as interesting as any work of fiction. We are glad to know that they hav already a large circulation. No Freethinker's library can be complete without Mr. Bennett's "Around the World" volumes. The four can be had at the low price of six dollars and fifty cents.

Infidel Philosophy.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

I swear on the sacred altar of liberty that I will not keep it holy as a Christian understands it. I hav the same right to dictate to the Christian how he shall observe the days as he has to dictate to me.

I lay it down as a fundamental principle that every man has a right to do as he pleases; taking into account the right of every other man. I hav a right to cultivate a taste for music, but I hav no right to beat a drum under my neighbor's window when he wants to sleep.

If the Christian has a pet day, no one has a right to say that he shall not properly observe it. Let him shout and pray and sing to his soul's content, if he does not disturb any one (and the chances are that he will not); but whence does he derive the power to force me to slaver over his pets when they are distasteful to me?

I hav the right to think and to publish my thoughts either by writing or speaking, but in the exercise of this right I must not impair the reputation of others or in any way deprive them of the same privilege. There are certain rules which all must observe; but these rules are not for the special benefit of any class, sect, or creed. No law ought to be enforced which does not apply equally and justly and impartially to all. Christian, can you, ought you, to find fault with this?

I ask the Christian to arise and explain how it is that he is made sole judge of what is right and wrong, and how it happens that an American citizen can be fined and imprisoned, who has never injured any human being.

This Sunday morning I hav been raking off the front yard. I hav neither injured nor disturbed any one; and yet for this simple act, meritorious in itself, the Christian says I must be fined or imprisoned. To punish a man when he has no sense of guilt is barbarism. Should a man in this republic be fined or imprisoned who bears malice toward none, and who would joyfully warn his worst foe of approaching danger? I ask my countrymen if the genius of our government allows a man to be punished for doing to-day what all could lawfully do yesterday? Yesterday the hum of business was everywhere heard; to-day if I pull up a few weeds in the garden, the Christian says I must go to jail. Whence does the Christian derive his power to decide for me when I must work and when to cease from labor?

Suppose the Jews should assume the right to deal with us for not keeping their pet day holy; and the Moslem should undertake to deal with us in like manner; and the Mormon should begin to punish us because we do not pay proper respect to some of the kinks in his creed? Wouldn't that be a little tough on us who are neither Christian, Mormon, Moslem, nor Jew? But the Jew has just as good a right to make us observe his particular day or notion as the Christian has, and so of all the rest.

It has been said that "the love of money is the root of all evil," but with more truth the saying could be applied to God. For the thumb-screw, the rack, the fagot, the scaffold, and bloody wars, hav been the portion of those who did not manifest a sufficient degree of love for God to suit the Christian. The Christian is so much afraid that you will not notice his big God that he is constantly thrusting him in your face. He has succeeded in getting him upon the American coin, but I think a skull and cross-bones would be more appropriate. Who has a right to say for me that I trust in God? Was this money made exclusivly for the use of Christians? Hav Deists, Agnostics, Pantheists, and Atheists no rights which a Christian is "bound to respect?" The next move is to get God into the Constitution. But the Christian has no more right to put God in the Constitution than I hav to put the devil in. I may be as partial to the devil, as the Christian is to his God. I think he he has the cleaner record of the two.

I am just now seized with an arbitrary fit, and I propose to hav every Christian study the Constitution of the United States until he understands some of the plainer and more important provisions of it at least. Beginning with the Preamble (and, by the way, a preamble to a legal instrument is something like an introduction; it sets forth the aims and objects of the instrument, and by what authority it is made binding): It does not say "we" the Christians, nor "we" the Jews, nor "we" the Infidels, but "we" the people, do ordain and establish this Constitution. It is well known that in the convention which framed the Constitution were men of very different shades of thought. Some were Christians, some were Deists, and some open Infidels, but they did not say that the Constitution should favor either the Christian or the Infidel—but they made the broad declaration that it was for the people.

Under the Constitution (and it is as broad as the Union) the Christian, the Jew, the Moslem, the Brahman, the Buddhist, the Deist, the Atheist, all can claim protection; while special privileges are granted to none, all are made equal before the law. Moreover, the Constitution expressly declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

My Christian friend, if you hav peculiar privileges granted to you under the Constitution, put on your spectacles and show us where it is. Giv us the article and the section. You may think that God is the source of all power and that you are the special favorit of heaven, but ever bear in mind that the genius of Christianity and the genius of the United States government are not identical. The Constitution does not derive its authority from God Almighty, but from the people; and as humiliating as it may seem to one of heaven's pets, it givs him no preference over the Atheist or the heathen. It may be different in the courts of heaven, but we must be bound by the Constitution until we get there.

I hav been an activ man all my life. For years I hav been accustomed to the sharpest exercise. I cannot make the Sabbath a day of rest according to the Christian's idea of it. I can read or write but a little while before this second nature asserts its claim, and I must hav exercise. I work in the garden or engage in some other useful employment, so that the mind is engaged with the body, the sooner to satisfy the claim. Whence does the Christian derive authority to torture me by compelling me to observe the Sabbath according to his superstitious notion?

I find by consulting the encyclopedia that Sabbath breaking is enumerated among the crimes. Hunting and fishing are not forbidden unless done on a particular day. To catch a mess of fish on Saturday evening is legitimate; the same act on Sunday morning is criminal. Hence we must find out which side of twelve o'clock a particular act was done in order to ascertain whether it is criminal or otherwise. Now is it not about time for the American people to make a distinction between offenses against a religious creed and offenses against society.

How various are the tastes and occupations of men! The inclination of one is to the reading-room, another wants to sail, another would like to fish, others would attend lectures or the art gallery; many hav little jobs to which they cannot well turn during the week and would like to attend to them on Sunday. Now if the object is to rest and recuperate, the mind and the body must go together. To say that every individual shall spend the Sabbath as the Christian may dictate, when the mind craves a stroll or a sail, or the public library or the art gallery or the theater, is simply despotism with Christian clothes on.

Christian, why should a man be allowed to hunt and fish all day Saturday, and then be put under arrest for fishing and hunting on Sunday? What kind of mongrel proceeding do you call this? The act is either right or wrong; if wrong one day, always wrong, and vice versa. If an act injures no one it cannot be wrong, no matter when it is done. But you say hunting and fishing on Sunday disturb the peace. But hark! I hear the clang of bells. If all the hunters in the town should fire simultaneously the church bells would outracket their racket. Now is not the law which silences the crack of the hunter's rifle, but pays no attention to a hundred times greater noise, a partial law? The justice or injustice of law is made to hang on a Christian's whim.

In our large villages and cities much of the business is done by Jews who observe the last instead of the first day of the week. The Christian pays no attention to the Jew's preference, but compels the Jew to observe his. How would the Christian like it if the Jew should compel him to observe Saturday instead of Sunday?

At the bidding of the Christian all mechanical shops, stores, places of business and amusement, and even of instruction as well, must be closed, while 70,000 ministers who make a trade of religion are allowed to carry on their business and deliver all their celestial goods to pious customers on that day.

How is it that the Christian can clang his bells in my ears on Sunday and then punish me for shooting a hawk that carries off my poultry on Sunday? Is this the way all men are made equal before the law? Is the Christian born with rights and privileges which are denied to others? "Equal rights for all, special privileges to none," is a motto as old as the government.

It is no business of the Christian nor anybody else how I spend my Sundays, so long as I do not infringe on the rights of others. If I hav the right to hunt and fish it is a natural one, the same as to gather the herbs and wild fruits which nature spontaneously produces, and no man has the right to say that it is lawful on one day and unlawful on another. Every act is good which promotes human happiness, and every act is bad which injures human kind, and this is all there is of morality or immorality, vice or virtue.

Profanity is also classed among the crimes. But that which works injury to no one cannot properly be called a crime. It is simply idle and useless talk, but no more a crime than whistling "Yankee Doodle." It is a foolish and, to many, a very disgusting habit. So are smoking and chewing; but it will hardly do to giv a man or class of men the power of fining or imprisoning others because they hav habits which Christians object to. Even Christians use many idle words, but they do not merit imprisonment. Indeed I don't know which is the more foolish—the man who uses profane language, or the one who goes down on his knees like a spaniel and tells a God who knows everything just what to do, and givs him a great deal of cheap advice.

I learn that a man has been held to bail in the state of New Jersey for blasphemy. The act which it is claimed he has violated provides that if a man denies the Christian God, or brings reproach upon the name of Jesus Christ, or the Christian religion, or the word of God (as a Christian understands it), or exposes them to ridicule, he may be fined $200 and imprisoned for one year. Now, the Christian is left free to ridicule the Mohammedan religion or the Mormon religion, but if the Mohammedan or Mormon ridicules the religion of the Christian, he must be fined or imprisoned. This shows the difference between crow and buzzard. A man may spit upon the Koran or the Book of Mormon, and the Christian will smile approvingly; but if he should attempt to show that it was just as much a crime for King David to indulge in fancy women as it was for Brigham Young, or that a man once dead cannot come to life again, or that two passages of scripture which plainly contradict each other cannot both be true, or that God could not beget himself, or that he could not hav a son as old as himself, why then the Christian must needs pound him to a jelly under the trip-hammer of the law.

Under the Sunday law if the proprietor of a theater should open it on Sunday for a talented troupe to play "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or "Enoch Arden" or some other moral play, he could be fined $500 and imprisoned; but if such proprietor should open it to ranting Jo Cook or Talmage, or for the exhibition of St. Anthony's choice collection, it would be considered legitimate.

Would it not be well for the American people to inquire what kind of government they bargained for, and strive to get back to first principles? Let every citizen ask himself if this government was instituted to promote the interests of any particular system of religion. Why not make it an offense to say anything against the religion of the Jew, or the Mormon, or the Moslem. All of those systems of religion are just as much entitled to protection as the Christian religion. All are to be protected in their free exercise; farther than this the government cannot go. The Christian can claim no favor under the government over the Jew, the Mormon, the Moslem, the Agnostic, or the Atheist.

When American citizens come to understand the genius of the government better they will learn that profanity, Sabbath-breaking, blasphemy, and many other so-called crimes, are no crimes at all, but simply offenses against the Christian religion, with which the government has no more to do than it has with Buddhism or Brahmanism. All laws passed in the interest of any system of religion are a mere usurpation, and should be resisted by every well-wisher of his country.

Valued Commendation.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Such of us as would scorn, and might even resent, anything bordering upon flattery are usually pleased and encouraged to learn that such efforts as we may put forth, either to amuse, instruct, or in anywise to benefit mankind are approved and appreciated. To offer such a word of encouragement in regard to the management of THE TRUTH SEEKER is the object of this short communication.

While under the management of its late editor I noticed, or thought I did at least, a steady improvement from year to year, and happy am I to testify to the fact that both in my own judgment and that of several of my friends well qualified to judge, with whom I hav conversed upon the subject, that improvement still continues.

Of one matter which has been a source of much pleasure to me I wish to speak particularly, and that is your good fortune in being able to secure for the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER the communications of such writers as Mr. Andrews and Mr. Putnam. I hav read the articles lately contributed by these learned and able writers with great interest and satisfaction. Mr. Putnam's articles, able, thoughtful, interesting, and instructiv within themselvs, served also an admirable purpose in stirring up and drawing out the venerable and erudite philosopher whom we Liberals all take pride in claiming as our own. The two late articles from the pen of Mr. Andrews, and particularly the latter, I regard as the most instructiv and valuable of any which it has been my good fortune to peruse and study for many a day, while the communications referred to from both the above-mentioned writers are such that I feel confident the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will join me in the wish to be supplied with many more of a similar nature. It is not, or should not be, enough for Liberals to clear the mind from theological bias and myth. This rubbish, and some other, removed, we are then prepared for the reception of new truths, and it is from such thinkers as those of which I am speaking particularly, as I feel confident Mr. Putnam will join me in saying, from one so highly qualified as Mr. Andrews, to whom we may turn with confidence and without disappointment for new light, new thoughts, and an abundance of the most valuable information.

If we may not always fully comprehend Mr. Andrews, as I admit is sometimes my own case, the fault, I feel convinced, is far oftener our own than his, in not being educated up to a point wherein we may grasp his ideas and theories, for those of us who hav been in the habit of hearing him speak upon subjects in which we are capable of following him, well know that none keep closer to the subject in hand, pierce it deeper, and, at the same time, illustrate it more concisely and clearly.

But if his articles are not always wholly clear to us, from our own lack of knowledge, not even an ordinarily educated person, I think, can peruse them without being awakened and aroused by new thoughts, and without catching glimpses of great and valuable truths which the author has discovered through long and laborious research and contemplation. Such articles as those referred to are to me like light set upon a hill, through the flashes of which I catch glimpses of many wonderful and beautiful things inviting me to come up higher. May THE TRUTH SEEKER be successful in securing to its columns many more such interesting and valuable communications. A. VAN DEUSEN.

Cruel Mr. Winter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER Sir: Of late I hav become very much interested and alarmed at the very positiv assertions of our friend Mr. Winter, as he talks like a very learned and honest man, inasmuch as he declares Spiritualism all humbug and all mediums tricksters, and the so-called manifestations all delusions.

Let me commence by saying one of the prevailing characteristics of my nature has always been to be right if possible, and never support error if I knew it to be such in principle or action.

I hav been an investigator of what is called Spiritualism for at least thirty-five years past, during which time I hav seen an almost endless variety of what are known as spirit manifestations, viz., rapping, table-tipping, eloquent trance speaking, clairvoyancy, auricular invisible speaking in my own dwelling, and in the dwellings of my neighbors. I hav seen heavy furniture at request move down a lengthy room, moving without the touch of the hand or fingers, by daylight and gaslight. I hav seen instantaneous spirit cures by simple touch of the hand. I hav heard spirit singing, spirit forewarnings, and what are called spirit foretellings of future events. I hav seen the opening of the combination lock times without number. I hav seen a child five years old placed upon a table, through whose rappings abstruse complex mathematical problems hav been rapped out; also through the same juvenil medium Greek and Latin messages were given. Yes, Mr. Editor, I hav seen all these confounding wonders, and all through voluntary or rather unhired mediums, time and again, and which I think you will readily admit were enough to unsettle the mind of most ordinary men, but particularly an old fossil like me. And now to be told by Mr. Winter positivly, and supported by the priesthood generally, that all these curious things are rascally tricks and delusions, I tell you, sir, it has set me seriously thinking, and raises the question, Hav I really been deluded or not?

The advent among us of Mr. Cumberland, of England, the mind-reader so popular just now with the priesthood, who stoutly (like Mr. Winter) denounces Spiritualism as an arrant humbug, is another serious incentiv to reflection—particularly to one of my age, over four score years. I should certainly hav placed more reliance on Mr. Cumberland, the mind-reader, did he not go "hand and glove" in the support of venerable priestcraft. Spiritualists admit he is a curious specimen, but they say he is only one of a class of a very common species of mediumship of which there are countless varieties.

Now, Mr. Editor, has it really come to this, that we cannot trust the evidence of our own five senses in the ordinary affairs of life? From friend Winter's positiv assertions it seems we cannot, which if proved true, is an important discovery, nor can we wonder at the remark of Banquo to Macbeth:

> "The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
> And these are of them."

It is a fearful thing at my age to be compelled to accept of Jesus and him crucified, and fall back on the faith once delivered to the saints, and shelter myself under God's grand "plan of salvation," for you know:

> "While the lamp holds out to burn
> The vilest sinner may return."

I am afraid in my early investigations of the mysteries of Spiritualism I was too reckless and unguarded. I neglected, like some of my fellow-students, to wind an eel-skin about my waist, or carry a horse-shoe magnet in my pocket, weeks before venturing in a spiritual seance, or wearing cork or metallic soles in my boots, or carrying a Bible in my pocket. In fact, I neglected to fortify myself both religiously and scientifically; and this (according to friend Winter) is the awful consequence—to herd with the tens of thousands of demented Spiritualists throughout the world.

What hav thousands of deluded victims like myself left to do? "Ah," says my friend, the Rev. Parson Belcher, to whom I had incautiously related some of the wonders I had seen and heard. "You should rather say what you seem to hav seen and heard. Do you understand what you think you hav seen and heard?" Here is wisdom for us, fresh from a "man of God."

I am afraid friend Winter's antipathy to the venerable pretensions, sanctity, and presumptions of what is known as Christian orthodoxy has allowed his exasperation to extend to us Liberal demonstrativ Spiritualists as if we were "tarred with the same stick." If so, he should inform himself and correct his error. The truth is, Spiritualists (as with all Infidels) share with orthodox Christianity their bitterest condemnation, inasmuch as they unmask and expose their impudent pretensions to exclusiv inspiration, which is an element in all inherent branches of humanity, if they could only recognize the fact.

The cruelty of friend Winter is manifest. Why not let us crazy Spiritualists continue in our facinating delusion without a cruel exposure, which has been done fifty times before, while he enjoys the cooling idea of that eternal sleep

> "That knows no waking?"

D. BRUCE.

The Liberal Club.

The last meeting for the season of the Manhattan Liberal Club was worth going a long way to attend. The hall was full and the speakers were all at their best. The lecture was by Mr. Andrews on "The Liberal Club Itself," and applied chiefly to the autonomy of that organization, as typical of the true form of government for the world. All government was despotic, and necessarily must be. The kind of a despotism to hav was the question. He would recommend a despotism without claws in the form of oppressiv legal enactments. The power of charm should also hav an important part in governing. The way the Liberal Club was governed illustrated both methods. Like whatever else Mr. Andrews says, his remarks were calculated to awaken thought.

The chairman, Mr. Wakeman, passed his watch and gavel over to Mr. Andrews, at the close of the lecture, and proceeded to a general description of the management of the club. He told the story with considerable humor of how the Rev. Mr. McCarthy had tried to capture the club, and of that reverend individual's final discomfiture.

Mr. Roosevelt's speech was made next, including the customary little pleasantry about the ministers who say, "Lay not up for yourselvs treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt; giv them to us." This time-honored bit of facetiæ was applauded by those who had got in the habit, through long use, of meeting it with that sort of demonstration.

Professor Eccles, who has heretofore been referred to as the efficient German dialect artist, spoke rather disparagingly of the people that are in the habit of indulging in remarks relativ to the personal peculiarities of others. A man who would do that was no gentleman. This may hav been incited by the allusions in these columns to Professor Eccles's eccentricities of speech. That, however, is immaterial.

Mr. Pink, who somewhat resembles the pictures of the late Charles Darwin, said that the conduct of Librarian King, during the lecture of the evening, had to a great extent distracted his attention from the speaker's discourse. He presumed Mr. King was under the power of the "charm" government, as he had a young lady beside him; but Mr. King should see to it that hereafter he allowed himself to be governed by the right charm at the right time. Mr. King said, "Here, here!" and with a few further attempts at wit in equally bad taste, Mr. Pink kindly sat down.

Mr. King, who might be called the merry-andrew of the club, but who will not be so termed here, got the floor next. He was equally as smart as the previous speaker, and got in a few very good points which provoked merriment.

Professor Vaughan, of Virginia, put the audience through the ordeal of listening for the one hundred and fiftieth time to his second-hand oratory. It would be blood-curdling injustice to put the illuminated utterances of Mr. Vaughan in cold type; besides, life is short.

Mr. Palmer paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Andrews and Mr. Wakeman for their service in making the Liberal Club the success which it was.

Mr. Seering said that as Athens was made memorable by its philosophers and academies, so New York would be remembered for all time as the home of Stephen Pearl Andrews and the Liberal Club.

Mr. W. S. Andrews, although not a member, would like to protest against the way the club was managed, and take the risk of being thrown through the window, or through the door if the windows chanced to be closed. There were too many cranks and clowns in the Liberal Club, and the platform had been made a ring for intellectual bruisers. The list of speakers needed weeding out. If that could be done he would join the club himself. This seductiv offer of the eminent statesman made some of the lesser lights feel uneasy for their future chances on the platform, but the club did not take any action upon the bribe held out, and the killing off of third-rate orators on account of it may yet be averted. Mr. W. S. Andrews is a good speaker. He resembles the elder Andrews more in his form of delivery, which he inherited, than in his methods of thought, which he has acquired, probably, among more or less conservativ people. A short course of disciplin in the Liberal Club has been known to considerably enlighten outsiders who hav gone upon its platform with the notion that they would hav their own way there.

Mr. Langerfelt, in this instance, took the part of enlightener. The club, he said, knew chaff from wheat. It was a part of the club's mission to so instruct its members that they could recognize chaff when they saw it. They merely gave such material a little puff with the breath, and it disappeared. Mr. Langerfelt could not agree with the lecturer of the evening. He took no stock in the science which Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews claimed to hav discovered. And as for its making the man immortal, he believed that if the discoverer should die to-morrow the world would hav heard the last of Universology.

Mr. Shook followed Mr. Langerfelt in a speech which did him much credit. He said that as a Christian he had met with many reproaches for his connection with the club. Although he had been in the club ten years he could not note much change of opinion among its members. Ten years ago Mr. Wakeman was a Positivist, and was a Positivist still; Mr. Andrews preached Universology then and preached it now; and Dr. Lambert still clung to his belief in the efficacy of oatmeal and tripe. Mr. Shook himself remained in the theological stage where he was when he joined the organization. He believed in the freedom of speech; and as St. Paul preached on Mars Hill to the unbelievers of Athens, so, he thought, it was befitting that he should address himself to the skeptics of to-day from the platform of the Liberal Club, the areopagus of New York.

Mr. Andrews closed one of the most interesting of meetings by making clearer some points whereon he had been misapprehended by his critics, and the club adjourned until next September.

A CLERGYMAN recently went into his Sunday-school to talk to the scholars. "Now, my little dears," he commenced, as he stood on the platform, rubbing his hands complacently together, "I want all of you who never swear or use bad language to stand up." All but two small boys immediately rose to their feet, and, although the teacher urged them to do likewise, they retained their seats. The minister cast his glances toward the little fellows, paused a few moments, and then, after waving back the children to their seats, repeated the request in this wise: "Children, all of you who love to go to Sunday-school, who love the savior, who love your parents, who never do anything that you know to be wrong, rise." Again all but the two boys rose to their feet promptly, "Little boys," then said the minister, addressing himself particularly to them, "cannot you rise, to, on that question?" "No sir," promptly replied the elder of the two. "Why not; why boys? What do you think will become of you if you do all the bad things I hav just mentioned?" The boys shrugged their shoulders uneasily for a few moments, and then, when the whole school had simmered down to a profound quietness, the elder said, saucily: "Well, sir, may mamma said that we should be both ministers one of these days if we kept on!" The next order of business was taken up without further delay.

A CLERGYMAN has ascertained that in the four Massachusetts towns of Salem, Beverly, Danvers, and Peabody Sunday papers go into half of the houses. These are read by all classes of non-church-going people, by the members of the Liberal religious bodies, and to a very considerable and increasing extent by members of the orthodox bodies. He finds that these papers are clean, interesting, and instructiv, and yet he says: "There can be no question that there is evil influence in all this, and we need not stop to discuss that point. Ought there to be any more doubt as to the attitude which Christian people should take in regard to the matter? Whatever practical difficulties there may be in the way of dealing with an admitted wrong, must not the course of the church be clear—scrupulously to avoid it themselvs, and to strive in all wise and kindly ways to persuade others to do the same?"

The Victory of Bigotry and Fanaticism.

The Affirmation bill has been rejected, and bigotry and fanaticism hav thus once more secured a temporary victory. At the sacrifice of popular justice, political honor, and national independence, the evil genius of an unholy alliance has for a time been successful at Westminster, and the labors of the noble pioneers of freedom hav thereby been impeded. The combined efforts of a stagnating Toryism, a sham Liberalism, and a vacillating Irish Catholicism hav put back the hand on the dial of Progress. The battle, however, is not over—it is rather intensified, inasmuch as those who hav put their hands to the plough will not withdraw their hold till the weeds of theological ignorance are uprooted and the ground made free for the growth of constitutional freedom.

The rejection of the measure by a majority of three, and the subsequent refusal by a majority of one hundred and six to allow a duly-elected member of Parliament to perform his duty, are a keen satire upon the Liberal pretensions of the House and a disgrace to a country which is deemed the home of the free. No longer can we consistently boast that England has a representativ Parliament, when its first principle—the right of the constituency—is thus shamefully and repeatedly violated. In the House of Commons all classes and all phases of thought should be represented. This is the cardinal doctrin of our Parliamentary system; and yet one of the most thoughtful and increasing sections of the community is denied the right of having its avowed exponent fairly seated on the benches of St. Stephen's. Shame upon the modern Castlereaghs and Eldons, in whom are incarnated the spirit of ancient exclusivness and the aristocratic desire for class distinctions. To-day the bigots smile with the joy of success; the time is close at hand, however, when the Nemesis shall arrive, accompanied with frowns and condemnations for those who hav sacrificed right at the shrine of personal spite and dogmatic domination.

The allegation that an Atheist is disqualified to legislate is a miserable subterfuge. Is it a fact that Theists, in their political actions, are inspired or are in any way influenced by their belief in Theism? If no, what prevents an Atheist from performing useful political work? If yes, what can be said of the political injustice and wrong whose records mar the history of our nation—injustice and wrong, be it remembered, that are the acknowledged work of Theists? Moreover, what explanation can be given of the infamous deeds of such God-fearing monarchs as the Jameses, the Charleses, the Georges, Napoleon III., and the late emperor of Russia? The fact is that history and experience alike proclaim that, apart from the merits or demerits of either Theism or Atheism, there is nothing in the former that necessarily enhances the value of politics, and nothing in the latter that deprives them of their potency and utility. If this Theistic test is continued to be enforced, it will be the duty of Freethinkers, more than ever, to inquire into its nature, and to demonstrate that the God of the Christians is no worthy model for our age, and that his inquisitorial devotees are worshiping the creation of a diseased brain and prostrating themselvs before an idol that is repulsiv to the humanity, the culture, and the intelligence of the nineteenth century.

The speech of the junior member for Northampton at the bar of the House of Commons, to his persecutors in that assembly, was an emotional and argumentativ plea that justice should be dealt him. It possessed a moderation of tone that deprived his opponents of the power of taunting him, as they did at his previous pleadings, of "offensiv aggressivness." Its subdued style made his appeal the more telling, and the dignified manner in which he left the House after the division will, if such dignity be maintained, hasten the triumph of the principle with which he has become so closely identified. For the moment he has no power in Parliament; his opportunity is with the public, and in a judicious appeal to them for a vindication of principle he will hav the co-operation of all sections of the great Freethought Party.

The action of the Irish Liberals in voting as a body against the Affirmation bill is highly discreditable and almost inexplicable. As a matter of policy, it was the most miserable prostitution of a great principle to personal enmity ever recorded in Parliamentary history. The enormity of the folly is exemplified by the fact that prominent members of the Irish party are known to be in sympathy with popular heresy, if not with avowed Agnosticism. It is deeply to be regretted that, by their alliance with the Tories, Mr. Parnell and his followers hav still further widened the breach between the Irish and English Radicals. Those who plead for constitutional freedom in Ireland cannot hope to win the support of the democracy of this country if, in their blind hatred of an individual, they endeavor to thwart English Radicals in their efforts to obtain justice for Northampton.

To Radicals, and more particularly to Freethinkers, the not unexpected victory of the Tory bigots—aided, as their efforts hav been, by the perfected machinery of the leading Christian organizations in the kingdom—is attended with many compensating advantages. Not only has Mr. Gladstone contributed to the storehouse of mental freedom and political justice one of the grandest and most irrefutable defenses of the right of private judgment and the equality of citizenship; but the great bulk of the Liberal party, notwithstanding their repugnance to the junior member, hav bravely and magnanimously championed the rights of insulted Northampton, and demanded that justice—no more nor less—shall be meted out to the constituency. This bold advocacy of popular freedom by the Liberal party is unmistakable evidence of the decline of Whigism, and marks the onward march of progressiv Radicalism. Even in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle—perhaps one of the foremost centers of antiquated theology—the merest condemnation of the daring encroachments of bigotry and fanaticism on the old landmarks of civil and religious liberty was greeted with tremendous cheering. And so it will be right throughout the country. The days are almost passed when it is possible to fetter and punish honest thought, and he must be a very sanguin Christian indeed who believes that any future Parliament will ratify the exclusiv and dishonoring vote of the execrable fourth of May.

The present condition of our civilization, imperfect though it be, is the result of various revolutions of thought that constitute the grandest landmarks in our national history. The struggles of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, and the scientific application of the nineteenth, are epochs of such stupendous significance as are only equaled in their vastness and importance by the conflict with the bigoted theology and traditional Toryism of to-day. In our contact with the smoldering embers of the spirit of persecution, as manifested in the recent trials for blasphemy and in the defeat of the Affirmation bill, we hav to deal with the legacy of a narrow-minded church and the worst feature of a liberty-opposing school of politicians. Nevertheless, our endeavors to overthrow these enemies to dearly-purchased freedom must be successful if we continue to cement that unity of action which, in this mighty struggle, exists within our ranks. This is not a time for internal dissensions; thorough unanimity must be our object; and then, aided by such auxiliary power as the liberal avowal of Lord Coleridge and the emphatic declaration of Mr. Gladstone, victory must, despite temporary defeat, ultimately crown our efforts.

Interviews with the Imprisoned Heretics.

From the London Freethinker.

Thanks to the tender mercies of the prosecutors, our brave friends, G. W. Foote and W. J. Ramsey, hav been able, during the last two or three weeks, to look upon other faces than those of prison officials and criminals. In court and in prison they hav been allowed to see friendly faces, all full of admiration and affection for them, to hear free voices, and to grasp honest hands. This has been without a doubt a great joy to them. But it is only an oasis in the desert of their life, and even we, who are not suffering as they are, can picture the desolate feeling with which, this momentary taste of liberty vanishing, they hav gone back to the prison-cells again.

Of all that has passed at the interviews afforded them and afforded us by the consideration of the lord chief justice and taking place within the jail-walls, we cannot speak here. We can only barely state that the kindness of the governor of Holloway, and of all his subordinates with whom we came in contact, made these interviews of a nature far less painful than they might hav been. But in regard to that which passed between our friends and their friends in the Court of Queen's Bench, on the days of the two trials, we are at liberty to speak.

And first, as to their bodily health. Both are fairly well. Each of them is or was a very powerful man. Anyone who remembers our friend Ramsey struggling into Exeter Hall when the bigots held their meeting against Charles Bradlaugh, and recollects how he came in like a sort of human comet, the nucleus of a streaming and screaming tail of white-faced Christians, will bear us out in the above statement, as far as he is concerned. And George William Foote's robust mind has lodgment in an equally robust body. But the close confinement is telling on even their vigorous frames. Activ-lived men suddenly condemned to inertness must suffer, and they are suffering. They cannot be broken down in one or two months, though even in this brief time, they can and they do show traces of wear and tear. But, in twelve months? Their indomitable spirit has triumphed over bodily and mental torture thus far. But only one-sixth of the time meted out by Justice North to George Foote has elapsed, and five-sixths are yet to come.

For details. Ramsey's eye has been bad, but is now sound again. The greatest difficulty is in regard to the food. Meat once a week, to the wild extent of three ounces, plus three-quarters of an ounce of bacon on another hebdomadal occasion is not enough for two strong, able-bodied, able-minded men. The three-quarters of an ounce of bacon ought to hav no bone in it. Some idea of the plucky spirit of our friends, plucky without a tinge of affectation or ostentation, may be formed from the fact that Ramsey told me, very seriously but with a merry twinkle in his eye, that on his release he intended to bring an action against the home secretary, as one day he had a palpable fragment of bone in his bacon. During the trial-time, better food was allowed them on the strong recommendation of the lord chief justice, but, as far as we know, they are now on the old rations once more. These rations both of them find very difficult to swallow. George Foote told me that, knowing how essential it was that food should be taken, for health's and for the cause's sake, he had held his throat with the hand to keep the nauseous food down.

They do not forget us, any more than we forget them. Sunday night they know, by the clock of prison regulations, when the friends are leaving the Hall of Science, and their thoughts, and longings, and resolves, go out to us then. Nor do they forget that in many another town besides London, at the hour of eight on Sunday, hundreds of men and women are passing from Freethought meetings homeward, and are thinking of the three prisoners in Holloway Jail.

Do not let us forget that there are three. Truly, one of them is younger than the other two, has not made their name, has not come so prominently before the public, and, let us remember, has not seen friends, nor had the ambiguous luxury of appearing in custody before the Court of Queen's Bench on several different days. When the names of Foote and Ramsey are remembered by the historian of the future, and are blessed by the free children of that future, whose freedom they in part will hav achieved, that of Henry Kemp must not and will not be forgotten.

The most noticeable thing about both our friends is their cheerfulness. No time is lost in weeping and wailing. Clear-headed, prompt, they discuss business matters as easily and calmly as if they were free. All the anxiety that they display is about others, not themselvs. Their two chief concerns, after the home folk, are Messrs. Wheeler and Kemp. Everything must be done that is right for these. The paper and the magazine are much in their thoughts, but we believe their minds are at rest on this score. They know that the Freethought party will not let them die.

It was a joy to see them eating on each day of the trials—square meals. The first of these was the first they had eaten for five weeks. To many the knowledge of the manner of life and manner of food has come as a surprise. Even Lord Coleridge appeared to be in the dark as to the treatment they were receiving. And not a few of those who hav written most bitterly are shocked to find that the men they hav denounced are suffering as if they were common felons. To ourselvs, this is in one sense a minor matter. The punishment is the iniquity, rather than the manner of it. But those who are thus shocked at the extent rather than at the fact of the penalty, ought, at least, to hav ascertained the nature of the penalty ere they approved it.

The solitary confinement is for twenty-three hours a day; the one hour of mockery of freedom is spent in the company of the dregs of our social life; the dress is convict dress, brown coat, brown cap, check shirt, a blue stripe on the left arm, a numbered label on the breast of each; they hav been picking fiber and, for a luxury, mending shoes; their books hav been the Bible and after the first month a Colenso's arithmetic, out of which George Foote has worked countless sums.

During the trial-time other books were allowed, and it must hav been a great delight to them to read Matthew, Arnold, Huxley, and Swinburne, instead of Moses and the prophets. We shall even treasure as sacred the officially-stamped paper on which came the list of books they required for their defense.

But all that is over, and they are gone back to their loneliness. No friend, no book can cheer them. Only the dull monotony of prison life, hateful, irksome. If only our good wishes could pierce the solid prison wall! If only they knew for verity, as they know by surmise, how we admire them, honor them, love them—how many men and women all through England, are weeping for them the tears they are too brave to shed—how many voices are adding their appeal to the outcry at the injustice of the sentence and are pleading for their release!

The Three Philosophies.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: My last article—that of May 12th—you were pleased to head with, "Some Other Kind of Philosophy," and by implication suggest that I was driving at something new or different from Infidel philosophy. The only kind of teaching I would wish to present to your readers is natural philosophy, and all other kinds are a spurious affair. To be a philosophy, any teaching must agree with nature. We are continually told by the theologian that his God is above nature, and hence that his philosophy and teachings need not agree with it. In fact, he will tell you that all his miracles are above nature; that his God holds nature in the hollow of his hand, and can manipulate her as a potter would a lump of clay. This is all very well for those who are ignorant enough to believe it, but there is nothing in such a statement but an assumption without the first particle of evidence. In fact, a supernatural religion is a fiction of the imagination, from the fact that there is no way by which a natural being could get beyond nature. It implies a self-evident contradiction by assuming a thing which it admits cannot be reached or comprehended by man. Hence everything that is contrary to man's comprehension and contrary to his reason and his observation, they will tell you, is a "holy mystery." And so it is—wholly a mystery—how a man of brains should be induced to believe a thing which he has no means of verifying.

The principal error of men who are such a set of God-makers, especially those of the past, has been in constituting their gods full of human sympathy and affection, as well as all other human characteristics, and by which they hav gone astray from the only thing that could induce one to believe in their creations; that is, they hav never yet made a natural God. Happy will be the man who makes one, as then he will stand a good chance of being honored. I am of opinion, however, that no human contrivance will approach the demand—at least until man has a much better comprehension of nature and natural philosophy.

There are essentially but three philosophies of nature or life in existence that may be called fundamental. The lowest in the scale is that one that rests mainly on the assumption that "inorganic matter is dead," and yet that it is the origin of life. Prof. Huxley says that "it is the highest feat of constructiv chemistry to convert dead protoplasm into that living matter of life appropriate to itself." Which means that chemistry has life-giving qualities. But I wish to ask, What givs chemistry its life, if the matter it manipulates is dead? It is astonishing that a mind like that of the great Huxley could not discover the absurdity of investing chemistry (which is but the motion of atoms) with a life-giving quality which he denies to the atoms themselvs, and then calls it a chemical feat. It cannot be true, then, that matter is dead, as chemistry is only the mode of its (protoplasm's) action.

It cannot be necessary, either, that an animal, by the chemistry of digestion, must convert "dead" matter into life-giving forces, else, by the law of equivalents, it would seem to be producing a force continually that had no existence before; and this could not be, as the body is constantly sustained, and (by the abundance of life in the matter used) is also increasing in growth; which proves that the real life and force is simply extracted in part from it, by means of its contact with the body and its functions. Digestion creates no force; it only extracts it. This suggests, then, that if life and force can in any way and by any means be derived from matter, they must belong to it in a constitutional sense.

The second philosophy asserts that mind or force and matter are separate and distinct entities, and assumes that mind or spirit is controling and directing matter into all visible forms and uses. It agrees with the first assumption that matter is dead in itself, and its movements are the result of the force of spirit, or that spirit created matter out of nothing. That is, an entity created an entity. If this is so, it follows that spirit had the power to make of nothing something different from itself, or, if from itself, then is matter essentially spirit. The last, as the first, is going back so far that they can rely on no evidence, and, hence, are but assumptions.

The third and latest philosophy assumes nothing beyond the facts of life and matter, and depends only on the observations of its manifestations. It asserts what is self-evident, viz.: that life and the forms of matter exist, and while it givs itself no concern about which existed first, if there ever could be a first in eternity, for all practical purposes, and by the process of deduction it concludes that matter and the life of matter are co-eternal; that they never were or could hav been created by an outside party, there being no outside to nature; and also from the fact that the one was never known to exist without the other, and that as they never were created, or had a beginning, they never can be destroyed, as neither their creator nor destroyer has or ever had an existence, except in the imagination of ignorant humanity.

That matter and the life thereof exist, we know, but that anything corresponding to a God to create them should exist, this from the nature of things we cannot know; for if we cannot comprehend nature, how can we comprehend that which is so far beyond her? And if we cannot understand nature, which is illimitable, we need not look or think to find something outside of her.

By this view there is no necessity to assume the evolution of life from dead matter. Inorganic matter is not dead. It follows that this is so from the fact that all forms of matter can be changed into other forms, while if it were dead, even the lowest forms of it, there could be no change wrought upon it; its inertia would be absolute. All forms of matter may be changed by means of higher forms, or states of matter, and one form or state changed into other states; this we know. While all forms of matter contain life potencies, every state contains different forces, and the higher life forces always act upon and change the lower forms. The fire consumes coal and changes it into gas, by combining and using other gases, because they hav more life force. Electricity will melt metals much more readily than coal, and if it could be controled and at equal or less cost, would almost instantly do what requires much time and labor to do with coal. This it does because of its higher life potency. Conduct this analysis into space, and we readily perceive the beauties of nature's higher laws and life, and see by what magnetic and loving attractions, and equally necessary repulsions, the systems of worlds move in harmony and beauty together, by the automatic and uncreated laws or conditions of matter and its forces.

Where there is life there is feeling—though it may be unconscious, and all feeling seems to tend to an intelligent and lawful purpose. This we see in much of the lower forms of life. The tree upon the hillside will make an effort to grow its roots into the crevices and rocks upon the upper side, as if to hold on to the hillside, just as a man would do to keep from slipping away.

Why, or by what law, does the hillside oak thus grow its roots and feelers into a secure hold? In a man, to grasp at a brush to keep from slipping down it, would be called intelligence, but what shall we call it in the mountain-side tree?

The vine that needs the phosphorus of a bone will commence yards away from it to grow toward it, until its feelers grasp it, and secure the needed nourishment. It has to make a persistent effort for days and weeks, while should a more intelligent dog get there first and carry it away to gnaw it for a similar use, the disappointed vine will droop in apparent sorrow and disgust, and refuse to advance another inch in that direction. In the dog it was intelligence, but what was it in the vine? I once planted a potato under a shed, and it grew until the stalk was about ten feet long and as white as wax. It was striving to get a peep at the sun that was passing by day by day, and the moment it came within its rays the stalk was changed to the vegetable green. It seemed to want this coat of paint it so much needed, and it persisted in its efforts for weeks until it was blessed by the sun's warm rays. We can pursue this line of observation from the lowest forms of matter up through the vegetable and animal until we arrive at man, and we find that the whole system of nature is based on what we may call action and feeling, and the lower manifestations of which point directly to man's intelligence, which is all obtained from nature. It may be traced from the worm that crawls upon the ground to man who stands upon a column of intelligent life, and also from the worm through the vegetable into what we call the inorganic forms of matter. All is life and all is feeling, and every particle of intelligence that man has he has in some way received from nature. What we want to study, then, to be wise is nature, and that is natural philosophy.

Consciousness is but the combination of organic forces and feelings which they develop, and differs in degree as the animal differs in his organization. In man it is the highest state of feeling, and without it we could not know that we existed; hence feeling develops consciousness in man, and consciousness develops memory by a retention of all previous feelings or sensations, which is man's highest state. What then is memory, or mind? As nearly as I am able to define it, it may be like a string that moves long after it has been heard. Each event or impulse of feeling or sensation may vibrate for years and years within the nervous structure If an object which is set in motion by a force will move on eternally unless it meets with a counteracting force (as philosophy teaches), why may not ideas and feelings be of that refined character that within the citadel of life they may vibrate forever, although their first and most outward and sensible impulse has been carried behind the door of the outer chambers of consciousness? In order to recall an event it must leave a record of its peculiar feelings upon us, or it must continue to exist within us. The reflex action theory of the ganglia will not account for it, as the ganglia are constantly being changed and destroyed, while the events with its attendant circumstances and the feelings it originally made either of pleasure or of pain may be reproduced in all their vividness after many years hav passed away, and after every particle of the body has been changed many times. This is in accordance with what we know of life and its manifestations, and induces me to state that matter and the life of matter are co-existent and co-eternal, uncreated and indestructible, which all tend toward the highest life here and hereafter. Notes from the Field.—Southern Illinois.

Leaving Carbon between two days, I went to Centralia, Ill., where on Thursday evening, February 22d, I commenced a course of three lectures. They were well attended, and I trust gave satisfaction, for at the close of my last discourse, Dr. Scott offered the following resolution which passed without dissent:

"Resolved, That as an orator —— —— has no superior and few equals."

The Centralia Sentinel, too, among other flattering things said: "This gentleman holds about the same views on religious matters as does Robert Ingersoll, and there are a number of our citizens who claim that he is the equal of that distinguished orator."

These compliments, coming as they did from Robert's neighbors, were highly appreciated. But then Robert was not there. Had he been, one blast upon his oratorical bugle would, I am sure, hav materially modified the opinions of my friends. There may be speakers who in some particulars equal and even surpass Col. Ingersoll; but take him for all in all, as a popular orator, this century has not produced his equal, and no century his superior.

Centralia contains a goodly number of Liberals, among whom are Wm. Lee, Dr. Biddle, Dr. Scott, Mr. Jones, Mr. Watson, and Dr. Stout.

Dr. Stout was resting under the shadow of a great grief. A lovely daughter had just died, while a noble boy had passed away but a little while before. It was the unanimous verdict that in the death of these young people Centralia lost two of her highest types of human excellence. Intelligent, refined, and scrupulously moral, they had won the esteem of all. Reared in the rationalistic faith, they had learned to love the right and do the right for the right's sake alone. They are dead, but the memory of their pure young lives remains, and will be a standing rebuke to those clerical hypocrits who prate about the demoralizing influence of Infidel teachings.

From Centralia I went to Duquoin, where on Sunday I gave two lectures to fair audiences. On Monday evening I spoke at St. Johns to a full house. This closed my engagements east of the Mississippi.

Among the Liberals of Duquoin, Thomas Goddard and M. B. Lawrence, editor of the Duquoin Press, deserve to be mentioned. St. Johns has one of the most activ Leagues in the country. W. G. Knight, and Mr. Thompson, are leading members. F. F. Follet, chairman of the State Liberal League, attended all my lectures in Southern Illinois. When the history of Illinois Liberalism is written, the name of F. F. Follett will be one of the worthiest names in that history, and the account of his work one of its most important chapters. With horse and buggy or by rail, he has traversed nearly the entire territory of this great state; presenting the claims of Liberalism, organizing Liberal Leagues, and distributing thousands of Liberal books and pamphlets. This chapter ought to be written by Mr. Follett himself. Among the most fascinating books of my boyhood were those narrating the travels and adventures of Jesuit, Methodist, and other religious pioneers. And these works constitute one of the most popular classes of Christian literature. Let this Liberal pioneer giv us a brief volume, narrating his experiences, showing the condition of Liberalism as he found it in the various localities he visited, and giving the names of its most deserving friends. Such a book would be a valuable contribution to our Liberal literature, and would stand alone in its particular field. It would be read with interest to-day; and when its author and the thousand Liberal friends with whom he mingled are no more, its pages would be read with deeper interest, and the unselfish labors they record be better prized than now.

In a certain church this winter, attempts hav been made to take up contributions for four different objects, but in each case the collection has been postponed on account of stormy weather and small attendance. Codman, who is a parishioner, says he is about to change his tactics. Hereafter he will stay at home pleasant Sundays, and be more scrupulous in his attendance on the most disagreeable.—Lowell Citizen.

In heaven, we are told, there is more joy over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety-and-nine who hav never gone astray. It is just the other way here below. There is more joy over one righteous man who goes astray, than over ninety-and-nine thousand sinners who hav kept at it all their lives.—Boston Transcript.

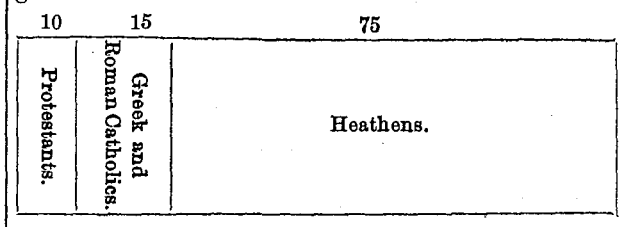
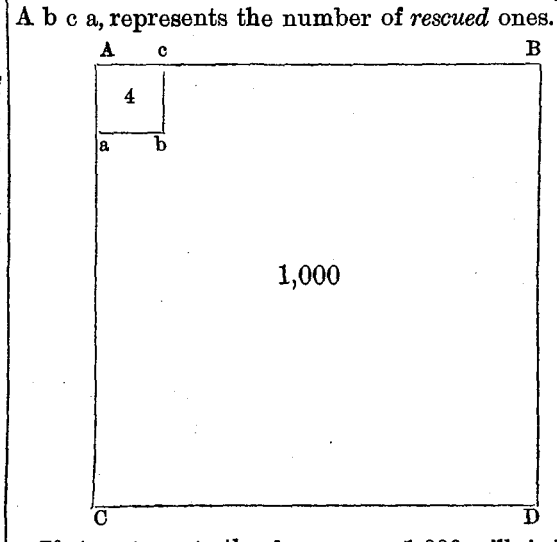
God's Great Injustice to the World.



Do the Christians ever stop to think of the fearful, the hellish, injustice of their divine scheme of salvation, by which at best only an infinitesimal part of the inhabitants of the globe can escape an eternity of torment? God has built up a theological plan or scheme by belief in which alone men, women, and children can be "saved." Yet he has made this scheme known to only one in seventy-five, while of those who know of it fully one-third reject it, because God has so constructed their brains that they cannot believe it. Could a better plan hav been thought of by which to damn the major portion of the world? If God had set out directly to get everybody into hell he could not hav found a better scheme than the Christian.

These thoughts are called forth by the publication in the Canadian Baptist of the proportion of the "saved" and "lost." In Central America there are Guatemala, San Salvador, Costa Rica, and Porto Rico (West India Island), containing an aggregate of 2,200,000 souls, without a single Protestant missionary. In South America we hav Venezuela, Ecuador, and Bolivia, with over 5,000,000 steeped in paganism and the lowest type of Catholicism. Crossing the Atlantic to the dark continent, we find Morocco with, 5,000,000, Tripoli with 1,000,000, and Tunis with 2,000,000, all Mussulmans, and not one missionary for the whole. There are four missions to Jews in those countries, but no Christian missions.



In the territory lying between the equator on the south, the Sahara on the north, Senegambia on the west, Abyssinia towards the east, there are reckoned to be between 50,000,000 and 90,000,000 of human beings who never heard of the Jewish Jehovah or of Christ. "Crossing the Red Sea we come to Asia the cradle of the human race, as well as the home of the vast majority of its teeming millions. Here were born all the religions which hav to any extent swayed the minds of men. Here we come upon Beloochistan, Afghanistan, and Turkistan, with 12,000,000 people divided into scores of tribes of Mussulmans, to whom no one preaches Christ and him crucified. Beyond we find Thibet, Siberia, Mongolia, and Corea, still with a population which cannot be less than 20,000,000 Away to the south is Anam with 12,000,000."

On the whole globe the population is about 1,440,000,000. Of these our collator of figures, which he gets from the Missionary Review, says 200,000,000 are Protestants, which is just twice the number claimed in the "Missionary Catechism." However, a lie of a hundred million or so makes little difference to the church, and the statistician proceeds. He claims 240,000,000 for the Roman and Greek Catholic churches, leaving an even billion for fuel to keep up the hell created by a God of infinit love. The "Missionary Catechism" estimates the cord wood for hell at one billion twenty million, but a few million more or less in the flames will make no perceptible difference in their brightness. The "Union Bible Dictionary" is more modest than either of the foregoing, for it claims only one hundred and seventy-five millions of Christians, counting Protestants, Greek and Roman Catholics, leaving 1,265,000,000 out of the fourteen hundred and forty millions of the globe's inhabitants. But the "Bible Dictionary" makes the entire population forty millions less than either the Baptist correspondent or "Missionary Catechism," which reduces the devil's pile of kindling-wood by just that number. To make the picture more vivid, the Baptist correspondent passes the procession to hell in review. He marshalls them in "single file at a brisk walk before you. Every hour enough will pass to populate a town of 3,600. Hour after hour —from noon till midnight—from midnight till noon, days, months, and years, that procession will move on. Nay, it will never end, for by the time one generation has passed, another stands ready to take its place. It is the march of death; and every second a soul which has heard little or nothing of Christ enters the world of the departed. For every breath you draw four immortal spirits pass from heathenism into eternity."

This diagram is also called to understanding's aid in computing the relativ numbers of the saved and damned. Splitting the difference between the various estimates, there are about three-fourths of the world who never heard of Christ and are consequently goners.

The next diagram represents the number of souls "rescued from heathenism and the numbers still remaining." The large square, A B C D, represents the whole heathen world, while the small square, A b c a, represents the number of rescued ones.

If 4 represents the lesser one, 1,000 will indicate the larger number.

We agree with Mr. McLaurin, the collator, that this is an appaling state of affairs, and "our faith in God and the gospel" is altogether insufficient to reconcile us to it. It must be remembered, too, that the list of "saved" includes all nominal Christendom and a good proportion of those we know are lost, such as the Infidels, the Spiritualists, the Jews, and others who do not recognize Christ as their savior. But whose fault is it that this condition of things exists? Are the people who never saw or heard of the "gospel" to blame for not believing it? Certainly not. The Christian scheme amounts to this:

God made these people;

And contemporaneously made a hell.

A good while after he devised a plan to enable them to escape this hell.

But

He left three-quarters of the people in ignorance of this plan;

And,

Sends all to hell who died before the plan was discovered,

And all who hav died since in ignorance of the plan.

Such is the scheme!

"Four heathens pass into eternity at every breath we draw," says Mr. McLaurin; heathens born in ignorance, who lived in ignorance, and died in ignorance of God's plan, yet going down to nameless tortures to gratify divine vengeance. The words of Paine, that "the Jews [and Christians] hav made God the assassin of the human species," hav a fearful and literal significance when these figures are considered. Do the Christians ever stop to consider the mountainous impudence of their claims? Themselvs but a small portion of the world, they arrogantly assert the wrong thinking, wrong believing, wrong living, of every one else. What assumption! What injustice! What nonsense! It is absurd to suppose a God of love would originate or sanction any such scheme.

SEND for the Volume IV. of "Around the World."

Two Wails.

The Catholic Review is troubled in its alleged mind over the defections from its faith through mixed marriages. It wails:

"Keep your children from and out of mixed marriages, lest in fifty years you need another St. Patrick, or St. Boniface, to convert a nation of pagans, made up of your grandchildren. Here is a looking-glass! stand before it, watch it closely! Our town numbers 150 families entirely Catholic, and 450 "mixed families." Of these latter 400 hav fallen away entirely and completely from the church; of the 50 outwardly professing the faith, only 20 earnestly strive to raise their children Catholics. Thus 430 families are gone; count 3 children for each, and you hav the round number of 1,290 —including parents, 2,160 souls lost to the church—the work of less than 20 years. All my successors within 100 years will not bring as many converts into the church as 860 careless parents, within so short a time, hav sent out of the all-saving "Bark of Peter." Many of the parents in the mixed familes referred to were themselvs the results of mixed marriages, proving the every-day experience that the second generation of such unions will always be an entire loss to the church."

The Christian Advocate, Methodist, takes up the cry and sends it along, wailing thus:

"It is to be feared, however, that many of those who cease to be Catholics become Infidels. This is a calamity. Whatever may be allowed of a few minds of peculiar structure, Infidelity among the common people is more demoralizing than Roman Catholicism. Though we hav no wish that Roman Catholicism shall spread, on the other hand we hav no desire that Roman Catholics become Infidels. More work should be done by Protestants among these partly alienated Romanists than has ever yet been done. They are very accessible. In one Presbyterian church in the city of New York there are a hundred members who were once Catholics. There is no reason why there should not be some such in every church of every denomination in the United States."

We fail to see the calamity the Advocate speaks of. The penitentiaries and poorhouses of this state are crowded with Catholic criminals, and dotted with Methodist ministers. If it is demoralizing for the Catholics to turn Infidel, why is it that there are none of the latter found in the jails? It is charged by both Catholic and Protestant that our public schools are Infidel. If Infidelity is demoralizing, the proportion of illiterates, paupers, and criminals, turned out by them, should exceed the proportion found in the Catholic schools. Does it? The figures, as collected by D. A. Hawkins, and in which no error is yet believed to be found, are as follows:

There are furnished to every ten thousand inhabitants

	Illiterates.	Paupers.	Criminals.
By Roman Catholic schools,	1,400	410	160
By pub. schools of 21 states,	350	170	75
By public schools of Mass.,	71	69	11

The parochial school system of the church, in this state, turns out three and one-half times as many paupers as the public school system, which is charged by the both branches of the church as being Infidel in its tendencies; and that the few paupers and criminals from the public schools are all Christians and children of Christian parents, is proved by the statistics of the prisons. The assertion of the Advocate that Infidelity is more demoralizing than Catholicism was born of hatred and fear of Freethought, not from any pains taken to compare figures. The officials of the Milwaukee House of Correction hav recently published their annual report. This shows that, of the entire number of prisoners committed to that institution during the past year, over one-half, or 878, were Catholics, the Protestants being 572. Only 199 professed no religion, and it is safe to say that these were like the old Calfornia miners, who while professing no religion, and breaking the decalog all to pieces, were ready to fight any one who questioned the divinity of Christ. The German population of Milwaukee is fully eight times that of the Irish, and Germans, as every one knows, are nearly all Freethinkers, and support in that city a very flourishing Freethought paper in their own language, yet the report says the proportion of Irish criminals is six times as great as among the Germans. The statistics were made by the clerk of the prison, who is a Roman Catholic, and there is certainly no invidious comparison made against the Catholics. In 1877 the percentage of Catholics in this institution, as against the Protestants of all sects, was over 55; in 1878 it was 49; in 1879 it was over 54 per cent; in 1880 the same; in 1881 and 1882 averaging about 53 per cent. To use the words of the Evangelical Alliance, "If this is so, what does it show but that Catholic teaching and Catholic schools are what produce pauperism and crime?" Yet in the face of these figures, the Advocate has the impudence to say that Infidelity is more demoralizing than Catholicism. To call that editor a liar would be to flatter him.

Great Britain spent last year £137,244 on Catholic schools in the kingdom. Yet we are told by Alexander Sullivan, the Irish orator of a Land League meeting, that fifty-four out of every hundred people in Ireland cannot read and write. Is anything further needed to show that Catholicism keeps its votaries ignorant? Or that such statements as the Advocate's are the malicious invention of churchmen lost to all sense of decency and to whom the truth is of no account?

Notes.

"We dare say Anthony Comstock has done good, but on the whole he is a public nuisance."—Sun. There is no doubt about it.

In Mr. Townsend's "Doctrin of Mind and Matter," in our issue of May 26, in the first paragraph, nineteenth line, the word important should read impotent; the former giving an opposit meaning to his sentence.

Mr. Von Schleumbach, who, it is related, was once a prominent Infidel in the United States, edited an Infidel paper, and organized Infidel clubs, is now in Germany doing Christian evangelical work. The name does not sound familiar. The story is open to doubt. Does anybody know Von Schleumbach?

The collapse of the Joe Cook fabrication about the deathbed conversion of Dr. George M. Beard still continues to worry such of the religious papers as were silly enough to mistake Cook's word for the truth. The editors of these papers hav yet much to learn, and among the rest that Cook was never known to state a fact except under the mistaken impression that it was a lie.

Mr. Joachim Pecci, known as Pope Leo XIII., has got himself into a hole in lending his aid and influence to the British government in oppressing Ireland. Boycotting and the withholding of "Peter's pence" are freely talked of and advocated among Catholics. The difference between England and Ireland is a religious one, and the pope has inadvertently placed the Episcopal church under a debt to him that he will never be able to collect.

The amenities existing between the editors of religious papers are something extraordinary. For instance, the Presbyterian Banner suggests that the Independent "has often demonstrated its ignorance of Presbyterianism, and would do better to let it alone in the future;" while the Independent modestly replies, "We hope our ignorance is as intelligent as its [the Banner's] knowledge." Slowly, brethren, slowly! Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire. You are getting where the climate is warm.

Do you want tenderness? Quote Christ.—Talmage. Examples: "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" (Matthew iii, 7). "Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrits" (Luke xi, 44). "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can you escape the damnation of hell?" (Matthew xxiii, 33.) "I came not to send peace but a sword," etc. (Matthew x, 34). Yes, for "tenderness" by all means quote Christ, but in doing so skip the foregoing passages, or your tenderness will not be unmixed with some of the worst examples of venom ever printed.

Taking the Brooklyn bridge as a text the Rev. Robert Collyer, last Sunday, gave his congregation some interesting information about suspension bridges, paying this derserved tribute to Thomas Paine: "When Thomas Paine got his idea of a suspension bridge from a spider's web and constructed a model in accordance therewith, the English pronounced it impracticable. The Americans in London, on the contrary, said it is just what we want on our side of the water. Thomas Paine is the true inventor this side of China of our bridge. He was a man of genins and a great man, with all his faults. His name should hav received some mention from the orators who took part in the opening ceremonies."

The Rev. Howard Crosby, of New York, in a speech before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church at Saratoga, last week, said: "I care nothing for what the secular press would say. I hav no fears of it, and ask no favors from it." Considering that but for the secular press Dr. Howard Crosby would hardly be known outside his own church walls, this is rather ungrateful coming from him. But however little regard he may hav for the press, it may be comforting for him to know that the admiration is mutual in extent. The secular press of New York has never shown by its printed utterances that it places a large amount of importance on what the clergy say. It has no fears of them, and asks no favors of them. Perhaps a realization of this fact and a desire to balance matters had something to do with Dr. Crosby's remarks as above quoted.

Heywood is in the toils again before the Massachusetts Superior Court, on a charge of obscenity. He writes us that his enemies hav been for months working up the case, and on Wednesday, May 23d, he was arrested on a bench warrant issued by Judge Pitman, and taken to Worcester, where he was held in $1,000 bail. H. H. Bigelow became his bondsman. There was no preliminary examination, and the district attorney insisted on his being tried on the Friday following his arrest. At Mr. Heywood's earnest solicitation the judge consented to a postponement, and the case goes over to next August or October. The obscenity is a leaflet written by Mrs. Heywood and reprinted from last January's Word. A perusal of it leads to the conclusion that this arrest is a matter for a police court, for if the social relations of men and women can be discussed vulgarly, Mrs. Heywood has found the way to do it. Her writings remind one forcibly of some of the trash found in the Bible, except that she is nasty in pleading for woman's rights, while the so-called sacred book is obscene in degrading woman. It is very hard that Heywood should hav to suffer for the wild talk of his wife, but vicarious atonement is the cardinal principle of Christianity.

The Churchman tells a story about a man who read Canon Farrar's writings, lost all sense of good and evil, departed from the paths of rectitude and right, and went down to the grave in horror and darkness, exclaiming with his dying breath, "Too late, too late!" Canon Farrar is an Episcopalian dignitary of London. He threw overboard the belief in hell at the same time Beecher discarded that dogma. He retained, however, the remaining tenets of the Christian superstition, and still teaches them. Before taking this narrativ unmixed with allowance, it will be necessary to hear the Boston Monday lecturer's version of it. When Dr. Beard, in his last moments, requested that his head be raised, he said, "Higher, higher!" This was interpreted by religious people so as to refer to some supermundane power. Allowed the same latitude, the words "too late" may be read "tool ate." The man may hav swallowed a hammer by mistake. He may in dying hav lamented that accident in the foregoing words, and at the same time fallen asleep in Jesus and awoke in Abraham's bosom. Since the advent of Cook the interpretation of last words has been reduced to a science.

Two religious lunatics hav just developed themselvs in Crowley county, Kansas. A dispatch from Leavenworth on the 25th ult. says:

"Yesterday morning a man and his wife, named Palmer, while laboring under a delusion, stripped themselvs, and, not being adorned by even the historical fig-leaf, wandered about their corral and orchard all day and night, imagining they were in Eden and obeying the behests of Jehovah. As the husband is a very strong and powerful man, the neighbors were afraid to go near them; but this morning some of them coaxed up courage enough to go to them and persuade them to clothe themselvs. Their children were in the house, but were unable to do anything with their parents. The couple are now quiet, but still out of their minds. The woman, who is very well educated, was bitten by a rattlesnake a few days before the above occurrence, but, trusting solely in prayer, refused to allow anything to be done for her to cure the bite."

We are inclined to doubt the snake part of the story, as the bite of a healthy rattler will scarcely yield to prayer, while the Eden story, which is likely true enough, shows the bad effects of believing the Bible. If all Christians had the courage of their pretended conviction, the insane asylums would be full.

One of the admirers of Billy Harper, a notoriously depraved gambler, now happily deceased, has a pretty good idea of Christianity. Talking of Mr. Harper, he said:

"Well, Billy was as bad as they make 'em. Not any one of us was worse, I guess, and most of us were a blamed sight better—for he was a cross man as well as gambler. Besides, he didn't ever hav any qualms of conscience. When some of us would get concerned—not seriously, but just enough to set us thinking and talking—about reforming for the sake of saving our souls, and would express a dread of dying right slap in the midst of our deviltries, Billy would say that he would be sure to come out all right. He wasn't a bit of an Infidel, you understand, but just as orthodox as any preacher in town. He believed that he could repent and be saved, exactly according to the church doctrin. He always meant to repent just in time, and he decided to take his chances of being able to. Well, he has won, as usual. He had nearly a week's warning, and he just let your chaplain fix things up all right for him. So he's gone to heaven, after being an outrageous sinner clear to the end. Yes, sir; a lucky Billy was he."

Mr. Harper was more honest than many ministers in his scriptural renderings, but it cannot be denied that he had the church creeds down fine.

A religious paper which comes to this office says:

"An arbitrary attempt to change the orthography of the English language by the vote, resolutions, and practice of a society formed for the purpose is as unnatural as would be an attempt to straighten a round-shouldered man by putting him in a vice. He grew so, and if ever straightened it must be by slow degrees in harmony with the laws of his being."

This may be true; but when anyone objects to the means which others adopt to bring about a desirable reform, it is the duty of the objector to mention some better way. If votes, resolutions, and practice, especially practice, are not calculated to further the good cause, and bring it into public prominence, what is? If practicing an upright position won't straighten a crooked man, when the proper appliances are employed to keep him upright, what will? It is regarded by the religious press as something akin to heresy to make any deviation from orthodox orthography. Yet the same paper from which we quote would print the fifth verse of the eighth psalm thus:

"For thou has made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor."

Whereas, Wyclif, the "Morning Star of the Reformation," and a translator of the New Testament into English, spelled it this way:

"Thou hast maad hym a litel lasse than aungels; thou hast crouned him with glorie and onour."

If it is not right to "practice" a reformed system of spelling, then the religious press should go back to "glorie and onour." It certainly is not going forward to them.

A well-known Freethought author of the West writes the following, which it is unnecessary for us to say that we indorse:

"It should be the duty of every Freethinker throughout our whole fraternity to do what he can in extending Liberal books, tracts, and papers as far as he is able. If our cause is a good one, it becomes each member to use as much exertion to support it as is manifested by the supporters of the different creeds of religion. Let us, therefore, encourage the Liberal papers, books, and lectures, and from the power of our united interest, our cause will flourish and the hoodwinking influence of ignorance and superstition shall no longer attempt to incarcerate our noblest sages and trammel our freedom of thought. Let us liberally patronize all who present good books to the world for the promulgation of our cause. Liberal writers can only look to Liberal readers for support, and the more these sentiments are extended, the more they will be. It is wonderful how the reading of an anti-religious work sometime brings the mind long shaded with superstition out of the wilderness; therefore let every one make it a point of vital interest to keep bringing them out. Resting indifferent, satisfied with our own feelings, is too selfish, and does not do the business. We must work with resolution and never giv up."

The Rev. Joe Cook had a sensational adventure last week in the dining-room of the Commercial Hotel at Monmouth, Ill., with Mr. E. M. Gill, a traveling man from Indianapolis. The story goes that Gill sat at the same table with Cook, and ordered for supper a piece of raw meat, when Cook remarked: "You are a Western man, I imagin. Do you liv on raw meat out here?" To which Mr. Gill appropriately replied: "I eat what I damn please, and pay for it. You must be an Eastern dude." Cook reprimanded him for swearing, and called upon the waiter to eject him for using profanity in the presence of ladies. Words followed. Mr. Gill shook his fist in Cook's face, called him a liar, and when Cook had gone to his room, sent him a card demanding satisfaction. Gill said he would whip Cook if it cost him a hundred dollars. Cook declined to meet him, and put himself under the care of the police. He expressed confidence in his ability to thrash five men like Gill, but objected to being perforated with bullets. Cook's arrogance and disagreeable conduct when traveling hav been often remarked heretofore. The West is said to be a place where the people commence shooting early in a discussion. If Mr. Cook does not frame his methods of behavior somewhat more in consonance with the manners and customs of that part of the country, he is likely to get something in his interior that didn't go down his throat.

Mr. Ingersoll concluded his speech to the Star route jury last Saturday, and the defense declared their case closed. Toward the close of his speech Mr. Ingersoll said the prosecution had exhausted themselvs in the effort to place their foot upon the neck of S. W. Dorsey. Never, as long as the world swung in its orbit, would they find twelve honest men to convict Stephen W. Dorsey. The government might use all of its power, all the brains that its money could hire, it could poison the entire newspaper press, bring on its witnesses, and buy its informers, but he gave it notice that the prosecution never would do it. As long as the average of men ran one or two true men to a dozen, they never would do it. In conclusion Mr. Ingersoll said:

"Now, gentlemen, the responsibility is with you; their fates are in your hands. In your keeping is everything they love. Everything they hold dear is in your power. With this fearful responsibility you hav no right to listen to the whispers of suspicion. You hav no right to hearken to the promptings of fear. Beware of prejudice. Look to the testimony alone. Be not convinced by the last argument. Listen not to the epithets instead of facts. Recall every argument made in this case. Put the evidence in the scale and then hav the honor and manhood to say which scale goes down. We ask from you the mercy of an honest verdict. That is all we ask; the verdict of your honesty. It is for you to say whether these defendants shall liv with honor among their fellow-citizens; whether they shall liv in the fresh air or be taken from their wives, from their children, from their firesides, from all they hold most dear. It is for you to say whether they shall be clothed with honor or with shame; whether their day shall set without a single star in all the sky of eternal night; whether they shall be branded as criminals. After all they hav suffered, after they hav been pursued by the government as no defendants hav before been pursued, it is for you to say whether their homes shall be blasted by the lightning of a false verdict. You must say whether their future shall be one of agony, of grief, of tears. Nothing beneath the stars of heaven is so profoundly sad as the wreck of a human being. Nothing is so profoundly mournful as a home covered with shame. Nothing is so infinitly sad as the thing that shall cast a stain upon children yet unborn. It is for you to say whether this shall be such a verdict or one in accordance with the law and the facts. The prosecution are heated with the chase; they are excited by the hunt; but I will say that, in the end, they will be a thousand times better pleased with a verdict of not guilty than with what they ask. They would enjoy their victory, they would like success; and they would hav you giv to those aspirations greater weight than to homes and wives and children. I want a verdict that will relieve my clients from the agony of two long years; that will lift from them the cloud—a verdict that will fill the coming days and nights with joy—a verdict that will fill their minds with a sense of joy and of gratitude forever to you, one and all."

Lectures and Meetings.

A Freethinkers' Picnic will be held at Dan Leonard's Grove, near Corning, Iowa, on Sunday, June 3d. Addresses will be given by some of the Liberals. J. E. Remsburg, of Kansas, is expected to be present.

Col. John R. Kelso, of Modesto, Cal., is to begin a debate with Rev. W. H. Briggs at Elliott, Cal., on the 5th, to continue a week. A lively time is expected, but the cause of Freethought is in good hands, and the result is a foregone conclusion.

W. F. Jamieson lectures in Pipe Stone, Minn., five times; will speak in Janesville, Minn., Sundays, June 3d and 10th, and Saturday evening, June 9th—five lectures; will speak anywhere in Minnesota from the 12th of June until the 1st of July. Address him at Lake City, Minn.

The following resolution was passed at a recent meeting of the Liberal Association of New South Wales:

"Resolved, That the committee of the Liberal Association of New South Wales desires to express its heartfelt sympathy with Mrs. D. M. Bennett in the great and irreparable loss she has sustained in the death of her husband.

"F. Lacy, Cor. Sec."

G. H. Walser writes us that there will be a Liberal encampment at Liberal, Barton county, Mo., June 15th, 16th, and 17th. A grand and glorious time is anticipated. Liberals, Spiritualists, and Freethinkers of all grades will be there, and enjoy three days of genuin pleasure—speaking, singing, boat-riding, fishing, swinging, dancing, and amateur theatricals. Plays will be in order. All friends are invited.

Anthropomorphism.

The ancients of Rome and Greece had not much faith in the interference of a sole over-ruling god. To account for the evil permitted in the world they very reasonably had recourse to several gods. But their writers often used expressions equivalent to this: "Surely the gods pay no attention to the affairs of men."

Modern religions, teaching that there is a just one only God who sees all things, by whom "the very hairs of our heads our numbered," cause even wise men to talk like perfect fools very often. As an example I quote Montaigne, one of the most sensible of writers, a Freethinker for his age. He has been describing the awful cruelties of the Spainards to the innocent, helpless nativs of Mexico and Peru, a people whom Montaigne declares to be unequaled on earth for their virtues, against whom but one fault could be alleged, that of killing occasionally a prisoner and cooking and eating a small bit, sending a portion of the body to all their allies, it being a sort of war-like and religious ceremonial, all other prisoners save the chosen victim being treated kindly and set free. The Spainards literally exterminated millions of these poor people with circumstances of unheard-of cruelty. Had they been devils executing the orders of hell itself, they could not hav been more cruel, oppressiv, tormenting, and slaughter-breathing. On one occasion they burnt to death in one fire by slow tortures four hundred and sixty men—the sixty being nobles of highest standing. That is one instance out of hundreds. They generally baptized them first before burning. All this is by their own confession. Montaigne, living right in the times, having neighbors and servants in his house who had been in Mexico and seen many of the awful tragedies, is full of horror at the events. What does he say? His all-powerful god was cognizant of it all. Some allusion to his god must be made. He concludes thus: "God did meritoriously permit that all this great plunder should be swallowed by the sea in transportation, or by civil wars wherewith the Spainards devoured one another, and the most of the actors in it were buried upon the place, without any fruit of their conquest!" Now had a stranger stood by without interference while two men beat and maltreated another, Montaigne would hav been the first to denounce him. Had he known of any one witnessing an attempt to burn a house, but remaining quiet while the inmates perished in the flames, able by a word to prevent it but saying nothing, and had he heard from him such an excuse as this: "I foresaw the criminal would meet with a great misfortune before he left the spot," what would he hav said? Truly his ways are not ours, yet he judges us by ours and we must think of him by his ways.

In every book, through every conversation, in every newspaper and speech and lecture, runs this same style of allusion to God [outside of Freethinkers and truth seekers). Men act and reason in this as though they were idiots with an idiot God. It never occurred to even wise old Montaigne that his God might hav more "meritoriously" prevented the infinit destruction by the Spainiards, instead of merely depriving them of their booty.

If the mass of people read and thought for themselvs, how long could a religion stand whose chief priests and elders are continually pointing out little favors of chance that happen to themselvs as proofs of God's providence? There is a Presbyterian college near me that professes to be conducted on the "trust-in-God" plan. Yet the trust in this case has in reality as solid a basis as the American dollar of silver. Eccentricity well advertised has intrinsic value for begging purposes. Beggars whose basis is misfortune, disease, plague, pestilence, and famin, are common; beggars whose basis is "trust in God" to levy contributions off the world are a novelty.

It goes the rounds that a school of some kind in New York city has a similar basis. A long interview with its head is published on "patent insides," along with the sensational "Abduction of a Child," "One Woman's Life," "Wonderful Seance," that round up with a three times three for Warner's cure and Pierce's Golden Discovery. The head of that school declares that often it has seemed on the brink of starvation, when after a plentiful supper not a thing was left for breakfast. Yet during the night even there came bread, potatoes, fuel, etc., in abundance. "God let them get out merely to try them." But the ravens always came in time. Stoves, etc., hav been furnished. On one occasion the chimney failed to draw after setting up a new range after the evening meal. Every effort to make it draw failed. "Well, no breakfast in this house to-morrow," was the thought; not of all, but of some. "Stay; we will pray." Sure enough, by morning the Lord had cleaned the chimneys, and all was well.

Now it is a fact that a very large number of people really believe all this. There is no use in denying it. Among others, our spiritual friends, of some schools, believe such stuff, but more sensibly ascribing the cause to spirit friends.

So much for the comfortable, well housed, clad, and fed trust-in-God folks. The being who holds the infinit creation in the hollow of his hand waits upon them—is their potato-porter and chimney sweep. But the heartless egotism that can believe itself the recipient of such powers from such a source, while millions are actually suffering and perishing outright of starvation! What shall we say of it? It is worse than that missionary society in New York city that held a sitting and reported the hundreds of thousands of dollars it raised last year and sent to the black heathen of Africa, while twelve thousand men, women, and children were howling around their doors for work or bread. God did not clean the chimneys of these thousands, nor stop their howlings with bread. Get ye into comfortable houses with pleasant rooms, and be clothed with better rags, and then "trust in God," ye poor, hungry, dying howlers. Then the Lord will hear ye. HOLT.

Observer's Observations.

THE TRUTH SEEKER comes regular, fraught with the aid and hope of the kingdom of man; and in it we hav—not perhaps eternal life beyond the bounds of time and space, but that which givs us self-respect, for we cannot even respect ourselvs while encrusted with the fossilizing, semi-barbarous Christianity of to-day. As we go out into the green fields and view with renewed interest the unfoldment of vegetation in its varied forms; also step into our large manufacturing centers and see the accumulativ evidences of what man has done even in defiance of the command, "Take no thought for the morrow;" we can raise our hands, and, in veneration to man alone, exclaim—We thank thee, O God? No, sir; we are under no obligations to him, but "We thank thee, O Voltaire, Paine, Bruno, and last, though not least, Bennett, with hosts of others that might be mentioned, for shredding the barnacles of superstition off from the ship of man."

I hav just returned from Elkhart, Ind. While there, though I formed but little acquaintance outside of the office, yet I found that many thinking minds there were reading THE TRUTH SEEKER and Boston Investigator; one gentleman has taken and read the Investigator twenty-five years.

Again am I the victim of superstition; once before I lost my position on account of my Liberal views, or, as they term it, blasphemy (contrary to the opinion of a late writer to THE TRUTH SEEKER), though it was done indirectly and in such a way as to enable them to assign another cause to hide the real; yet I lost my case because I dared to deny the God idea. As it may seem strange to others as well as to me that there are printers that will not tolerate Freethought, I will giv the names. First, the Advent Review, of Battle Creek, Mich., and the Mennonite Publishing Co., of Elkhart, Ind. At this last office the proprietor wished me not to say anything about my views in the office, and he did not wish me to let any one know what my views were at all. I told him I only could promis as to the office. Now I wish to digress a moment and drop a thought in connection with the reason he gave why he did not wish me to speak of these things in the office. It was this: "I hav young people working there that are easily influenced." The thought is, Is Christianity so weak that it must not come into contact with adverse elements? Surely that Roman Catholic bishop must hav been right who said, "Giv me the children to teach and instruct, and you may hav the men." Our children are brought into the world, with our present knowledge, with enough inharmony without being left to the mercy of the Sunday-school teacher in that slaughter-pen of humanity, self-respect, and liberty—the Sunday-school. How many there are that to-day, while striving to attain to that perfect liberty, not in Christ Jesus but in man harmonized, are compelled to feel the withering, blasting effect of that charnel house and cesspool of iniquity—the Sunday-school—on their life on account of being in contact therewith during their youth and infantil years! To my mind and experience I would much rather my children would attend a house of prostitution than the Sunday-school; at the former the effect and influence would be but temporary compared to the damning effect left upon the whole after life of that person by the latter. That greatest hell, unsatisfied desire in the human breast, is a child begotten by the Sunday-school. Then, knowing these things, shall we still let our children go down to the death of all that is fair, beautiful, and grand in the human life by attending this charnel house of human hopes?

As I hav already made this rather lengthy, I will refer but briefly again to Elkhart. Although, as I said, I found quite a Liberal element there, though I did not attain any acquaintance to any extent, I became acquainted with several Spiritualistic families who are strong in that faith. Is it anything but a faith? A one remove from theology trying to hold on to the God idea with one hand and groping with the other after Liberalism? Again and again hav I received much that seemed to giv evidence of a continuity of earth life, but at the best I can only hope for it. As George Chainey says: "It will be time enough to attend the affairs of another world, if there is one, when we arrive there." I don't say there is no immortality—no life beyond, but, while I hav a hope (as Robert G. Ingersoll says, born not of any book, creed, or religion, but of the heart, the human affection) of clasping the hands of those loved one, gone before, as to the reality thereof we can get no evidence; at least I don't. Then, with George Chainey, would it not be as well, as he says, to transfer our affections and love to others as fair in this life, help some other life here to be made fairer by our influence and presence? I am assured that I can do justice to myself, at least better, by ceasing to chase this (at present but an) ignis-fatuus of another life in so attending to my conditions and surroundings that so much of the inharmony may be displaced by harmony, and therein shed at least a ray of hope or sympathy on the pathway of my brother or sister, helping to brighten their lives thereby, and then when the change comes, if there is another life, I shall be as well prepared for a dwelling-place there as if I had spent my time only in chasing an ignis-fatuus.

Here in Kalamazoo the Liberal element received quite a treat on the evening of the 14th of May; no less than a lecture by George Chainey on "The Old Faith and the New." I was surprised, so were many others, that so many turned out to hear him. He spoke for over an hour to a good house, full of appreciativ listeners, with one or two exceptions. So effectiv was his address that it raised the ire of the Christian editor of the Telegraph, who was present as reporter, as can be seen by the inclosed clipping from that paper. As I hav already made this longer that I intended, I will but very briefly refer to his lecture.

He compared the old faith to an anesthetic. Although it had been to some minds a benefit in alleviating the disease of theology, which it only could do, the new faith, the Gospel of Man, would remove entirely the need of the anesthetic by so placing man on his own self-reliance, restoring his self-respect, making him what he should and would be under the new faith—a man—that the shackles of his slavery under the old faith would be entirely removed; and hence also the need of an anesthetic. He said the beginning of wisdom was not to know God, but to deny God. He said when he reached that point in his life he was free, and a peace pervaded him that he knew not of before.

George Chainey that night drove many a nail in a sure place, and at the close of his lecture there were those that were more convinced than ever. As expressed by him at the commencement, "the ranks of superstition were broken." He was a man that knew whereof he spoke. He was well versed in biblical lore, as could be seen by his apt quotations. I tell you, he made theology squirm that night, and you hav only to read those extracts I send with this to convince you thereof. Theology must die, and I am satisfied had D. M. Bennett lived its demise would hav been hastened.

"Vicarious Atonement."

From a sermon by the Rev. John A. Wilson, of Bridgewater, Mass.

On a remote island of the orient, many years ago, dwelt a father and son, who differed in character, as day differs from night. The father was morose, cruel, and vindictiv. The son was gentle and kind-hearted.

On an expedition to the distant mainland, they captured two babes—a boy and a girl—and brought them home to rear as slaves. From this pair they bred a large retinue of servants, who were employed in menial offices, and kept in a condition of complete ignorance. They knew enough to eat, drink, and propagate their kind, and this was all. They were taught to regard their owners as superior beings, and to perform their bidding without question. As absolute despots, the two ruled over them, and they knew no law but their good pleasure. But the severity of the father ever served to render more gratifying the kindness of the son, and thus it was that these poor savages learned to obey their king through fear, and their prince through love.

The island was named "The Beautiful." Here grew all manner of fruits in abundance, and on these the people fed. But one day, in the garden of his palace, the king planted a seed of a fruit hitherto unknown, and in time a tree sprang therefrom, which put forth leaves, and blossoms, and fruit; and, as the fruit ripened, it became of a deep yellow color, and it gleamed forth like spheres of burnished gold—bright and tempting, from out of dark-green foliage. And day by day the people came to gaze upon that wondrous tree, and to marvel over its green leaves, and its yellow fruit. And all were agreed that never before was tree so perfect in symmetry; and never before was fruit so beautiful as this. And they named the tree, in true oriental metaphor, "the tree of life," and its fruit they called, "the apples of wisdom."

And the king caused proclamation to be made throughout the community, that this—the most excellent of all fruits—was reserved for the use of himself and son only; and that whoever of the people should lay hands thereon, should be put to death.

And it happened that one night, when all others slept, the aged mother of the tribe, impelled by restless craving, and with no thought of wrong, stole forth into the king's garden to look upon the tree. And somehow, in the stillness and the starlight, the green leaves looked greener, and the golden fruit more golden, than ever before. And from every luscious globe a soft, tempting voice seemed to whisper, "Take me!" and "Take me!" and imagination and appetite eagerly seconded the appeal, with rapturous visions of a sweetness hitherto unknown, and of a flavor undreamed of till now, lurking in this fruit—reserved for royalty only. Intoxicated by the prospect, with none to warn, almost unconsciously the poor savage stretched forth her hand, and touched one of the golden spheres. It yielded, and dropped dead-ripe into her palm. A moment later, guilty but triumphant, she breathlessly awoke her husband, and exhibited to him the treasure which she held.

Together they feasted on that stolen fruit, and very sweet it was. All thought of the transgression was lost in the present bliss of enjoyment. Only when they had finished, even down to the seeds and the rind, did they realize what they had done, then awaited with terror the coming of the dawn, which should disclose the theft and bring punishment. Nor were their fears idle. When morning came, the fruit was missed; they were taxed with the theft; confessed thereto; and were brought before the king for judgment. In a very delirium of vindictiv rage, he now prepared to inflict upon the trembling culprits a vengeance out of all proportion to their crimes.

First, he confiscated and destroyed all their little property—the accumulation of a lifetime. Next, he stripped them and applied to their naked bodies every torture which a devilish ingenuity could suggest. He scourged them with rods and with stinging-nettles. He applied thumbscrews to their hands and fire to their feet. He racked their muscles, and he twisted their joints. He starved them in sight of loaded tables, and tormented them with thirst while rivers of water ran just beyond their reach. Every day he contrived some new torture, some more refined cruelty, and as often as exhausted nature sought refuge in unconsciousness he awoke them by some agony more dreadful than the last; yet, throughout all, he carefully preserved them from death, lest thereby they should escape the unsated appetite of his vengeance.

His ingenuity to invent and inflict every manner of bodily torture was boundless, and transcends all description. But he did not stop at this. He tortured the minds of his victims also. Every agony they suffered physically was skilfully reproduced and intensified mentally, through their affections and fears.

His capacity for vengeance was infinit. He decreed that all the innocent descendants of this man and woman should hav imputed to them their guilt, and should share their punishment. Therefore their agonies were enhanced by seeing the same tortures applied to their children and grandchildren—even to innocent little babes yet unborn at the time of the theft. And furthermore, this cruel king declared that his anger was implacable; that his vengeance could never be fulfilled; and to all time the tortures of this pair, and of their descendants, should go on and constantly increase.

At this juncture the young prince, moved with compassion, pleaded with his father for the people. He admitted the justice of the king's decree, by which an innocent people were made to suffer horribly, for all time, for the trivial fault of their progenitor; but he proposed a plan by the adoption of which, he contended, the king's decree should remain inviolate and his vengeance be fully satisfied, yet the people hav a chance of escape from the torments which afflicted them.

He argued that, being of royal blood, his life was of much greater value than the aggregate of the lives of this whole race of slaves; that, did he suffer as they suffered, his suffering would fill the measure of the king's vengeance much more completely than their suffering possibly could. He now offered to submit himself for a limited time to the punishment they endured. This, that as the guilt of one had been imputed to all, and all suffered in consequence, so the suffering of one should now be imputed to all as a satisfaction of that imaginary debt, and they be allowed to go free. Provided, nevertheless, that only those should be benefited thereby who admitted—each for himself—that he, individually stole the fruit; who admitted, further, the justice of the king's decree, and of the tremendous vengeance he had taken, and who accepted the punishment of the prince as a special atonement for him—the subscriber—in liquidation of a fault which neither had committed, but which said subscriber was now obliged to confess that he had.

The king—out of what he was pleased to call "his all-abounding mercy"—accepted and adopted the proposed scheme. In conformity thereto, he now seized upon the prince, his son, and having subjected him to all the various tortures he had imposed on the people, ended by putting him to a cruel death. He then made proclamation to the other writhing victims of his malice, that such of them as would confess—each for himself—that he stole the fruit which he had not stolen; and was justly punished for a crime he was not guilty of; and acknowledged the logical justice of the prince's suffering and death in his stead; and accepted the same as a special atonement for him and for a fault which he had not committed; and in liquidation of a punishment he had not earned—those of them who would subscribe to this arrary of contradictions and absurdities should be allowed to go free; but all who refused should suffer torment everlasting at his hands.

Some of the weaker, worn out by suffering, subscribed to the conditions, and were released. But the more hardy denounced the scheme as wholly opposed to common sense; denied the king's right to punish them; and elected to endure any amount of suffering he might put upon them, rather than subscribe to such a tissue of falsehood and folly.

Subsequently, the king admitted that he had foreseen the whole issue from the beginning. That he had grown the tree purposely to delude the people, and thereby gain an excuse for exercising the malignity upon them; that he had prompted his kind-hearted son to sacrifice himself for the sufferers, that he—the father—might thereby obtain a bogus reputation for mercy; knowing well that a majority would never accede to such a preposterous plan of exemption; and that if a few did accept, and thus escape, he would still hav abundant material left whereon to exercise his fiendish malice.

My friends, this is the fable of "Imputed Sin and Vicarious Atonement." What do you think of it?

And where, you will ask, shall we look for people ignorant and degraded enough to believe such a monstrous fable? Are they the naked savages of Polynesia; or the wild tribes of Central Africa; or the cannibals of Terra-del-Fuego; or the tree-dwellers of the Amazon?

No; they are none of these. But in this, your own country; in your own state; in this, your own town, are to be found the supporters of this foolish and vicious fiction.

When I realize that under the sacred name of religion this blasphemous fable is Sunday by Sunday recited from our pulpits and taught in our Sabbath schools; when I realize that within the shadows of this church is a great institution, supported by public funds, where young men and young women are trained to be the guides and leaders of youth; young men and young women of intelligence and culture, who believe this fable, and will teach it to others; I question if I am awake; if it not all a horrible dream.

No; it is not a dream. It is a terrible reality. Only a few days since, here in Bridgewater, a white man, a man of intelligence and education; a man apparently sane; a reader of the daily papers; more than this, a graduate of a theological seminary; a minister of the gospel in this community, called on me, and, in the course of conversation, not only avowed his belief in this extravagant fable, but gravely informed me that if you and I do not also believe and accept it, there is no hope for us; this whole society, and all other Unitarians throughout the whole world will, without any doubt, be damned eternally. And—if you can believe it—he said it without laughing.

How can any reasonable human being, in this age of enlightenment, believe such a doctrin? The answer is simple enough: He has never known any other. He learned this at his mother's knee, and was taught that to doubt was to sin. The same lesson was repeated to him, and by him, at school. The same lesson was the limit and extent of his theological curriculum. He has never read an unbelieving book. His daily prayer is not for more light but against doubt. Like the tar-boilers of North Carolina, who still vote for President Jackson, he believes in a devil who died two centuries ago. I say it in all kindness—in theologic conviction, this man is as much the creature of circumstances as a pumpkin grown in a glass jar. The jar within which his germ happened to be cast accounts for his shape. He would be a Buddhist or a Mohammedan, or a fire-worshiper, with equal facility, had he been so born, and so taught. And yet, though holding this horrible belief, and worshiping a devil in the name of God, he is still a kind and good man; and why? For the same reason that Stanley's African chief was kind and good. Not by reason of his theology, but in spite of it. The philosopher is larger that his philosophy.

"But," you will ask, "what matters the belief, so long as the life is right?"

I answer, a base belief is ever a limitation to a life of noble impulse. To a life of base impulse a base belief is an indorsement. The doctrin of "vicarious atonement" places a premium upon crime.

Do they who preach this doctrin believe it?

Yes; but with certain restrictions.

Some years ago a reverend doctor of the Presbyterian faith, was conversing with an unbeliever upon this subject, when the latter asked: "Doctor, what proportion of our race do your suppose are saved?"

The doctor considered a moment, then answered: "Probably about one in ten."

It happened that the doctor had just ten children, and the other, turning upon him, said sternly:

"Then how dare you, believing this, bring ten innocent children into the world, of whom nine must suffer eternal damnation?"

But this is just where the restriction comes in. Hell is for other people and their families; heaven is for ourselvs and our own.

Whence comes this doctrin, which, like a pall, has rested for centuries upon God's fair earth; and like a brooding nightmare, through long years, has tortured the human mind?

It comes from the misty and musty past. It comes through Paul, from the superstitious ritual of the ancient Hebrews; a people barbarous and degraded as the Sioux Indians of our West. I will describe briefly to you the foolish custom of this people, on which Paul, their descendant, subsequently founded the yet more foolish doctrin of "vicarious atonemeet." The account is from Leviticus, a book formerly ignorantly ascribed to Moses, their traditional law-giver, but now admitted by all honest scholars to be a compilation of oral traditions, first collected and written down many hundreds of years after his time.

Their chief God (for they had many others) Yahweh (or Jehovah, as the name has been erroneously rendered), lived in a box (or ark) in the inner room of the tent which served for a place of worship. On a certain day of each year two goats, exactly similar in appearance, were brought to the door of the tent; and here the priest (or medicin-man) of the tribe cast lots upon them. On one lot was inscribed the name of Yahweh, their chief god, and on the other the name of Azazel, their chief devil. The goat that fell to Yahweh was at once sacrificed. The other was called "the scapegoat." Placing his hands upon its head, the priest confessed over it the sins of the people for the past year; after which it was led away into the wilderness and turned loose, as a prey to the demon Azazel. Later, the custom was changed so far that the scapegoat, after being led away, was cast backward over a precipice and killed.

This custom of the Hebrews was called "the atonement," and was still practiced in the time of Paul.

Paul was a Jew, and he preached to Jews. His hearers were ignorant and superstitious. He was fanatical and unscrupulous. His aim was to found a church of which he should be the head.

Some years before, Jesus, a but little known Jewish preacher of Galilee (an obscure country district about equal in extent to one of our inland counties), had been put to death at Jerusalem by the chief priests of his people, for non-conformity to their laws. His fate had at the time awakened a good deal of sympathy among both Jews and gentiles; for he was a man of blameless life, and of wise and gentle utterance. Some few had even believed him the promised messiah, who should become king of Israel, and destroy the Roman power, but, of course, his death had put an end to this. In the life and death of this man Jesus, Paul saw his opportunity.

He began by affirming that Jesus was "the messiah" promised by the prophets. He explained his death as only a temporary departure, and predicted his early return. Hence, for many centuries after the death of Jesus, the Jew-Christians, at each feast of the Passover, looked for his reappearance.

Having thus brought his system into accord with the national hope, Paul proceeded to inspire every part of the Jewish ceremonial of worship with a new significance bearing upon the life and death of Jesus. Hence Jesus became, in Paul's preaching, "the lamb of God," or the "Paschal lamb" of the new dispensation, slain for the remission of sin. He was "the second Adam," by whom the sin of the first was healed. He was called "the high priest" of the new faith. And as the Jewish high-priest entered the holy of holies, bearing the blood of the sacrifice, so Jesus was said to enter heaven bearing his own blood as a sin offering for the salvation of many. And as the sins of the people were confessed upon the head of the scapegoat, who bore them away into the wilderness, so Christ became the scapegoat of Paul's system, and so continues down to this day.

This superstitious custom of the barbarous Hebrews, as adapted by Paul, is the basis, therefore, upon which the doctrin of "vicarious atonement" rests.

The New Testament purports to be a history of Jesus and his life; but, in fact, it is much more truly a history of Paul and of his religious system. Paul was the Barnum of Christianity, and by skilful advertising and shrewd manipulation he distorted the simple life of a good man and moral teacher into an elaborate and intricate system of theology. Hence, after his death, was evolved that tremendous machine known as the Romish church, and from this spring all the others, which are merely feeble modifications of the original machine, and derive all their power from the same source. It is thought by many biblical scholars, to-day, that of the numerous authors to whom the several books of the New Testament are ascribed, Paul is the only one who ever wrote any part thereof. Certainly his spirit breathes throughout the whole, and taking his own valuation of himself as to honesty of statement, as given in the ninth chapter of first Corinthians, 19–23 verses, we will do well to scrutinize carefully every assertion made by him, before accepting it.

Thus briefly I hav reviewed the doctrin of "vicarious atonement," and its origin. I reject it upon three grounds, viz.:

FIRST—It is opposed to Natural Justice.

Would it be just to punish Guiteau's children (if he had children) for his murder of Garfield?

Or, suppose Lawyer Reed should offer himself as a substitute and be hung, would Guiteau's crime be thereby expiated?

Or, if I place my hand in the fire, can you suffer the pain?

"No," you say, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." And I agree with you. This is law of nature which is the law of God. By no distortion of justice could the sin of Adam be imputed to us; or the suffering of Jesus be made to atone for our sin.

SECOND—It is dishonoring to man.

It assumes him to be hopelessly sinful, through ineradicable taint.

Its scheme of morals is the most degraded known even to savage tribes, viz.: A system of rewards and punishments. Heaven is offered for good behavior; hell is threatened for bad. Its believers know no higher motiv than to do good for a prize, and to refrain from evil to avoid the whip.

But, should they sin, repentance shifts the load, and "Christ bears it all." Thus the doctrin of "vicarious atonement" becomes a premium upon crime.

THIRD—It is dishonoring to God.

It attributes to the supreme being a character more fiendish than that of any demon which the imagination of man has ever portrayed. The devil himself becomes an angel of light by contrast.

For these three reasons I reject the doctrin of "vicarious atonement."

A Last Word from Mr. Hale.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I would like to say a few words in addition to what was contained in my last reply in reference to the criticisms of Ella E. Gibson, as I see she has come out in a second reply in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 12th inst. And, to avoid repetition, I would refer to what I hav already said in your paper in my last reply, as to the gender of God; and I hav other reasons for that view of the question which I will not stop now to giv, but may do so hereafter. I hav never undertaken to defend the position Ella E. Gibson takes in regard to the personality or gender of God. I only attempted to show her that there were other terms that could be used to designate a God without person or gender than "It," and much more expressiv. And if I did make a mistake in using the term "I Am," I hav only to say, as I said once before, that I hav no fears that the Almighty will be annihilated or the universe blotted out of existence in consequence of any blunder of mine, or of anyone else. And in regard to the pronoun it, I think it as objectionable, as I said before, as he or she, his or hers, etc., and much more so, from the consideration of its insignificance when applied to the Supreme Intelligence or Ruler of the Universe. To illustrate: It refers to some thing—stands for a noun, if you please, the same as I stands for a noun. It means some thing; that thing is some object. We cannot conceive of an object without form or limit; consequently it is as objectiv in its significance as the pronoun I, and just as much out of place in that connection as he or she would be, and as much more so as its insignificance would cause it to be as if we should in speaking of God say "a thing." I cannot see as that would be any improvement of my phraseology, or of the terms I hav used to designate a God; but, on the contrary, too contemptibly insignificant for serious consideration as applicable to designate the Supreme Ruler of the Universe. In fact, when this it is fully developed, evoluted to its fullest extent, it would be "Thing-em-bob," we will say. That is about the manner in which it strikes me. In speaking of the Almighty, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, we should say "The Thing-em-bob of the Universe." That would be grandiloquent, would it not? According to our understanding of terms, that would be very expressiv, very significant. Could anything be thought of more ridiculous? JAMES HALE.

Letters from Friends.

A LETTER FROM AN OLD VETERAN.

MOUNT FOREST, May 19, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed you will find $2.50, being the amount I owe on my bible, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for another year. That each subscriber may do likewise is the wish of your friend,

WM. LEWIS.

PAINTED POST, May 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $2.25 inclosed, for which send me Waite's "History of the Christian Religion." I am much pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and think it the best Freethought paper I hav yet seen. Hoping it will be the means of increasing knowledge and the love of truth and humanity, I remain

Truly yours, B. C. WOOD.

WEST GLOUCESTER, May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year. I canuot well do without it. I am much grieved at the loss of its former editor. I think his life was shortened by overwork, persecution, and imprisonment. I am well satisfied with the present management of the paper, and shall continue to take it as long as I am able to pay. I am within a few months of eighty years old, and cannot expect to last long.

Yours truly, JONATHAN H. RIGGS.

OSWEGO CENTER, May 18, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find one dollar for the Monument Fund, and count me one of your warmest friends. What has become of Brother J. Peck? Tell him to peck up the dirt and we'll shovel it out. And don't let out "spooks" frighten him so easily. We hav as good a right to see ghostesses as any one; and "Winter's blast," nor Peck's dynamite can't hinder us either. Do so some more.

A. H. WALKER.

EARLVILLE, May 13, 283.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: I hav just received the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's travels around the world, and I am very much pleased with it, and often wonder how one man could write so much in so short a time. I do so much regret that he could not hav lived to do home missionary work a few years longer and write a few more books. But alas! we must be content with what he has done for liberty and for humanity in general.

Yours fraternally, SARAH C. HILTON.

MASSILLON, May 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: On May 10th Jeremiah Howald died. He died calmly and quietly, with no struggle and no complaint. He was a great admirer of the fearless manner in which D. M. Bennett advocated his Liberal principles, and he had been a subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time past. He himself was very outspoken in his Liberal views, and was well known throughout this place on account of those views. From the fact that he was a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER I thought it desirable that you be notified of his death. Respectfully, J. J. PITTS.

QUENEMO, May 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing my subscription has expired I will send my renewal, as I can't think of doing without it. I think John Peck's "Infidel Philosophy" worth the price asked for the paper. Thomas Winter's arguments against Spiritualism I think hav the right ring to them. Like him, I don't see why departed friends hav to communicate their messages through second or third parties. Giv us more light

Inclosed find $3—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and 50 cents for "Crimes of Preachers," and Paine's "Age of Reason." WILLARD GIBSON.

AYER, May 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am reminded by the date on the tab of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that my ticket has expired, and the experience of the voyage has been so interesting and instructiv that I am induced to take another round trip of pleasure and profit. The terms are cheap for the comfort, safety, and excellent fare which the stanch old TRUTH SEEKER affords.

And above all, the independent individual social freedom of the passengers and impartiality of the captain. I am reminded of the horse and the hen who "agreed not to tread on each other;" bating their disparity in size. ELIJAH MYRICK.

CENTERVILLE, May 13, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed fifty cents I send you for the two pamphlets, "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," and "Diana:"

I must tell you I hav a sister in Sydney, and I hav sent her my book on "Answers to Christian Question." She and her husband are Freethinkers, living in Sydney, New South Wales. My sister has had a good long talk with Mr. Bright, since his return to Sydney, and she and her husband speak highly of him, as he is agitating the Christian clergy sadly in New South Wales. She tells me Mr. Bright thinks of coming to America again in about three years. It appears Freethought is moving lively in that country and I say amen to it; let the good work go on. And down with all superstition and all Christian priestly humbug in all civilized countries.

That book of "Answers to Christian Questions" is a clincher. Yes it is a masterly work, and not to be refuted. I would say to all the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER (and they are many), Get a copy of it and read it calmly through, and it will do you good. I should like to hav many of the works that are named in your catalog, but alas! I hav not the means to send for them, for living here among the Lord's chosen, an ungodly mortal like me gets a mighty poor chance to earn anything but the cold shoulder and disdain. I expect I speak a little too squarely to suit their saintly feelings.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

MOLESBY, May 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I want you to send me Mr. Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions." I do love to read anything that comes from his pen, and I think his answers to the Christians are hard to beat. I will send you another dollar before the year is out, and you can send me some other small publications of Mr. Bennett's, as you hav reduced the price of the paper. I think your patrons ought to still send $3 and take some of Mr. Bennett's pamphlets for the fifty cents. That will help you to sell your books. Yours truly, H. W. JOHNSON.

MASON, May 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1 for the "History of the Council of Nice."

I was well pleased with the history of the Sabbath and Sunday, that appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I never read such a piece before. I liv in a priest-duped place. I had a talk with one of my neighbors about Sunday and the Bible, and I quoted some history you had given me. He said that he did not care if the road was full of such; he would believe the Bible. I could not get him to the Sunday question; yet he is a Sunday-school teacher, and thinks that he is a great expounder of the Bible when he is talking to his class in school. I get them on the birthday of Christ; they can't tell when he was born. The day is lost. JOSEPH LAKE.

GALLE, CEYLON, April 13, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I owe you an apology for not offering you before this my condolence at the death of my lamented friend, Mr. Bennett. It was only very lately that I formed his acquaintance, when I had the pleasure of giving him quarters at my house during his short stay in Ceylon, and a more genial friend I seldom come across. All his well wishers in Ceylon were shocked to hear the sad tidings of his death.

Mr. Bennett very generously promised me the paper free for one year, and as I think it has nearly expired, I now inclose $3.50—$2 50 as my subscription in advance, and $1.00 for the Bennett monument, which I think will be shortly begun.

Hoping that you will steadily continue as publisher of THE TRUTH SEEKER for many, many years, and with kindest regards, I remain,

Your sincere friend, E. R. GOONERATNE,

Mudaliyar of the Governor's Gate, and Atapattee Mudaliyar of Galle.

MARIPOSA, May 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I sent you a post-office order some time ago for some books, and also $5 to the Monument Fund. The books came duly. I now send $4 25, for which I want the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and other books as named below.

I hav the three first volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," for which I subscribed before Mr. Bennett made the trip.

I am buying these books to read and circulate among the people, and am trying to do my part to spread the light of truth. I think it will bring forth fruit in due time. THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th is splendid. I do hope the circulation will increase, as it should, to 100,000, and if you can keep it up to the present standard for a few years it will, I think. It is certainly the best Liberal paper in the world to-day. Yours truly, S. L. HOGAN.

MORE GRIT THAN READY WIT.

IRWIN STATION, May 20, 283.

MR. EDITOR: It pains me to think we still hav so many in our ranks who pretend to be Liberal that are so self-conceited they cannot bear the least friendly criticism without using abusiv language and harsh names, as Mr. Hale has done toward me in his article, "Not Annihilated or Vanquished." He accuses me of throwing mud and making false imputations, being full of self-conceit, and even being so hard-hearted as to want to burn at the stake, when I cannot bear to see the suffering of man or beast without feeling intense grief. Now, I want to tell Mr. Hale that I pity him, and all others of his kind, for I well know if I were him, and had the same organized brain that he has, with his education and environments, I would act just as he does.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will send you a sketch of my own phrenological chart, that such of your readers as wish can know just what my brain is capable of performing, and not expect more of me than is in my power to accomplish. Let some phrenologist sum it up, and they will know just what I am and what I must be. If there is conceit, bigotry, and cruelty in my organism I should like to know it.

Mr. Hale has a heap to say about a befuddled brain. Now, if he will promis to examin a synopsis of my mental organism like the one I inclose to you, and then giv a candid report of his investigation, I will mail one to him, and he will be respectfully invited to do likewise. This done, we can each hav a better understanding of the other's mental qualities and thereafter conduct whatever personal allusions we hav to make on more intelligent grounds.

With my love and respect to you as the best-natured editor living, I remain

Yours for truth and liberty, WM. N. RIDINGER.

ATTALLA, May 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1.50 for "Golden Throne," by Samuel P. Putnam, and I am ever so glad to say that the other fifty cents is for THE TRUTH SEEKER on trial for three months. I think I could get several subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER here if there were not quite so many wives. The men are afraid to offend the dear things by bringing such a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER into the house; but I think I will be able to get other subscribers shortly who hav not got wives. I take several other papers, but none is like THE TRUTH SEEKER to me. I used to take the Blade, but not since our Brother Bennett passed away. I think "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments" is one of the grandest works I ever read, and I hav set some of the "Jesus folks" on fire here since I received "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." I am certainly on the wrong road now, but when I leave this world I will try to hav a through ticket over the same road. W. L. NELSON.

MONTREAL, May 17, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I received last week the fourth volume of the Round-the-World books, and need hardly say I was pleased to get possession of what may be looked upon by the friends of Mr. Bennett's as a souvenir of his life work.

Kindly send me at convenience the under-mentioned books and pamphlets, for which I inclose $14 33.

As intimated in your article headed "Guess-work Figures," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 5th, there is at present no reliable means of ascertaining the number of disbelievers or Freethinkers in this Canada of ours. When the last census was taken I happened to be at home when the census officer called, and among other questions was what religious body I belonged to. I answered, "None; you may mark me on your list an Infidel;" to which he replied, "I can't do that, sir; the government has not provided a column for that denomination. I shall hav to put you down with the Protestants." This fact goes to show that only Cook-ed figures could be given to represent the "blatant minority" in this country. There is no doubt, however, about Canada being a Christian community. We hav the fullest evidence of that in the number of occupants found in its overflowing jails, prisons, reformatories, insane asylums, hospitals, religious retreats, and theological colleges, and by the number, in many instances, of beautiful buildings occupied by an over-credulous host of myth-worshipers, for say six hours out of the hundred and sixty-eight of each week. Further evidence of our Christianic inclinations is shown by the meek and patient submission of our fair sisters to the insults of ministers who miss no chance to charge their sect through Mother Eve with listening to the blandishments of that other Bible myth called Satan, the result of which trumped-up story makes woman, according to our Christian divines, responsible for all the wrong-doing and evil that man is heir to, and which is perhaps the most cowardly thought that ever emanated from the mind of man. I listened with disgust a week ago last Sunday evening in one of our $100,000 church edifices to a $4,500 per annum simon-pure Calvinist preacher, repeating the libel to his congregation—most of whom were women. I thought the yarn could only be equaled by that solemn mockery, the Christian scheme of salvation.

We hav further evidence about us of Christian supremacy in the dishonesty, crime, misery, and squalor so frequently met with, but of course e things, with ignorance and poverty, are necessary to keep the machine running.

Then again just notice the constant stream of activ church and Young Men's Christian Association members, perfect pillars, who our found in our midst "kicking over the traces," confidence-breakers and delinquents of the worst kind, bankrupts (with rotten estates for their creditors to groan over), living in the best of style, faring sumptuously, smiled on by clergymen for their zeal and benevolent contributions, meanwhile trading on a credit secured under the mask, cloak, or pretense of being consistent followers and influential supporters of a popular system of religion, the maintenance of which has originated untold animosity. WM. T. COSTIGAN.

NOW IS THE WINTER OF OUR DISCONTENT.

PITTSBURGH, May 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: To speak of a warm winter would certainly seem like a paradox, and yet no one can read the effusions of your Cincinnatti correspondent, with the frigid appellation, without realizing that, while a name may correctly designate a season, it may become a misnomer when applied to a man. Mr. Winter claims, I believe, to be quite aged, in which case it is plain that "old age ne'er cools the Douglass blood." In one respect he resembles the season for which he is named; he is windy. A very stormy Winter indeed; and he seems to hav about as much intelligent control over himself as has the howling blast. I hav read many of his letters, and I hav seldom seen anything in them that could be dignified with the name of an argument. They contain only one ceaseless round and repetition of assertion, a mass of abuse and vituperation heaped upon all who dare to differ in belief from this self constituted pope of naturalism. The spirit that breathes in his utterances is the same bigotry that produced the rack, the gibbet, and the stake; and is no less execrable in an Infidel than in a religionist. If anything, it is more to be condemned, for it has no palliation, while the Christian bigot finds his excuse in the religion of "believe or be damned."

It is not my purpose here to defend the truth of Spiritualism, but to defend the right of the Spiritualist to his belief against all bigots, whether Christian or Materialist. And I would just as readily defend either of the latter in this privilege as the Spiritualist. The wholesale denunciations of Christians, indulged in by Mr. Winter, are unjust and illiberal. Mistaken they doubtless are, but that the majority are hypocrits and "pious frauds," no one has a right to assume; and he who does so is simply a bigot. Still more. When the Liberal Spiritualist ignores all difference of opinion, and reaches forth his warm hand to grasp that of his Materialistic brother; when he proposes to drop all minor differences and unite with him in the mighty work of freeing the world from the domination of priestcraft, and his overtures are met only with jeers and insults, then the display of bigotry and intolerance becomes absolutely disgusting, and the bigot himself deserves only contempt. As a rule, the learned man is a modest man; the profound thinker is not a dogmatist. Measured by this standard, what becomes of the dogmatic assertions of Mr. Winter? Has it never occurred to you, my dear sir, that, after all, there may be hights of thought you hav not scaled? That there may be things not "dreamed of in your philosophy?" That you may not know it all yet? Has it never occurred to you that it was barely possible that such men as Hare, Wallace, Crookes, Denton, D. M. Bennett, Epes Sargent, and hundreds of like character, might not be either knaves or fools? Now please try, just once, to be modest and reasonable. You may not hav had evidence enough to convince you of the truth of Spiritualism—and no sensible person would expect you to believe without evidence—but how do know what proofs others hav had? W right hav you to assume that those who believe differently from you are either liars or idiots?

All the Liberals of my acquaintance, whether Spiritualist or Materialist, hav become heartily sick of your intolerant tirades against those who do not see things as you do. Nor hav I any more patience with those who, like Mrs. Gurney, respond, "You're another." Materialists, even if they are mistaken, are not to blame for being such. The facts they hav accumulated require a mountain of evidence to overcome. And if that evidence is not furnished by the return of the so-called dead, then, in my opinion, the Materialist has the best of the argument. It is useless to speak of the coldness and repulsivness of such a belief; that s not argument. We may call the iceberg cold and repulsiv, but the iceberg remains a fact, nevertheless.

Let us freely grant to every one the right to believe exactly as he may, and stand ready to strike hands with all persons, whether Christian or pagan, Materialist or Spiritualist, who will work together for the complete emancipation of the mind from all self-constituted authority, whether Spiritual or Material.

The greatest and most important object that to-day demands the attention of the Liberalist is the rescue of the state from priestly and churchly domination. To this end all believers in the freedom of thought should unite as one man. And the mole-eyed individual, who flounders around in the narrow confines of his own darkened mental nature, snapping and biting at everything in his vicinity, cannot be anything but an impediment in the way, a bar to progress, a stumbling block in the way of those who are trying to educate the people in the principles of liberty and fraternity. W. F. PECK.

AN ESSAY ON THE LABORING MAN'S DEGRADED CONDITION.

LACROSSE, May 13, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Most writers on this subject take too limited a view of it. The present misery of the laboring classes is the result of the general habits, customs, and religions of the people. A large majority of men are living on a sensual plane of life. They are governed by their appetites and passions. Their main object seems to be to pump all the happiness they can out of their fellow-men into themselvs without regard to the interest, honesty, or happiness of their fellow-beings. The people do not understand the laws of trade, nor the true relation to each other. They hav rushed headlong and blindly into all kinds of speculation and debt; they hav gone beyond their senses and means; hav done business on borrowed capital; then lost their balance and become bankrupt. By the aid of machinery all kinds of manufactured articles hav been produced until the supply is greater than the demand. By contracting the money all who are in debt feel themselvs in great difficulty. The majority of the people are pretty much alike so far as their moral and just characters are concerned. They are ready to take advantage of each other in every trade and calling whenever they can. They talk and preach cream, and practice sour milk. In their practical treatment of each other it is hard to tell an honest man from a rascal. The common herd of mankind are the dupes and willing tools of priests, professional men, and politicians. Where the people are supremely ignorant, selfish, and corrupt in their morals, their laws and rulers will be corrupt like the people, like priests, like gods, and politicians, the world all over. When we see most all of our rich business men rulers, priests, and rascals, it does not speak well for the people. Some say it is the false systems and laws that corrupt the people. This is putting the wrong end to. This is the style in which most people hav been doing business for a good many years. It beats all how many small minds and small men we hav to make laws to govern this nation! Raise the common people and laboring poor above want, make them rich, giv them the power to govern and make laws, with their present ignorance, and they would be just as big rascals as the most of our rich men, priests, and politicians are to-day. It is the false education, customs, and bad habits of mankind in almost every department of life that cause all our personal and national misery. All reforms should commence with the people. When the habits and manners of the people are right, the laws and money will take care of themselvs. We do not want to trouble ourselvs much about what the people did fifty or one hundred years ago. Look after the present, and the future will take care of itself. The people must get better knowledge of themselvs and their relation to each other. Stop the belief in religion, gods, Christs, heavens, and hells; stop the use of rum and tobacco; stop doing business on borrowed capital, and do not be governed by public opinion or fashion.

The best way to put an end to the usury law is for the laboring classes to let their money alone; let it lay idle in the vaults. Learn to do business without borrowing money, and be sure and put no money into the hands of bankers and trust companies. Buy no land of the landholders, as the land will be of very little use to him if he cannot sell it for a big price and take a mortgage on it for more than it is worth; if he cannot sell it or get a laboring man to work it, it will be poor property for the landlord. Go to work for yourselvs, poor laboring men. Do not giv all your time, labor, and brains to the landlord or money-lender. You can make a change in your dream in one year, if you will only be united and vote for your own interest, and put true and honest men into office. It is not the increase of wealth or money that makes people prosperous and happy, but the good use made of it.

Let the laboring classes become rich and hav plenty of land and money, with their present habits and characters, and they would continue to curse themselvs and each other just as much as ever. Interest and rent are the poor man's curse, and always will be. If he can't get work, the town jail, the work-house that he has built, or helped to, is ready to receive him.

The cultivation of the intellect does not make man more just or moral; it is the cultivation of the moral organs that makes man just and true.

> Practice truth and honesty for your own sake,
> And no advantage of your brother take.

The most of our laws are made to stimulate our selfish and animal nature. Our laws, government, religion, and gods are a just representation of the, character and manners of the people. Men hav made laws, religions, and creeds, and tried to bend human nature to them. It will be no good to find fault and curse each other for the faults and blunders we hav made, nor punish us for the faults that we hav committed. Let the past go with all its faults, and learn wisdom from our past errors and mistakes. Be just and love our fellow-men in the future, and reform ourselvs in every department of our civil, moral, and social life. (In fact, we could then liv without a government at all.) Put your new wine into new bottles, and not be patching up the old, worn-out, rotten institutions of the past.

The old and popular way to save men is, and has been, to damn them; the new and the best way is to love them. If the working classes should organize co-operativ banks, or societies, with their present ignorance and selfishness, they would soon destroy them, as they did Socialism, Chartism, and union stores. The fact is, the people themselvs are just as mean and selfish as their rulers, so far as they know how to be. Some men are so constructed in body and mind that they are bound to liv a sensual life, it spite of all the means that can be used to prevent it.

> This world would be a happy world,
> A scene of joy and bliss,
> Did generous feeling sway mankind,
> Free from all selfishness.
> Were man to man more firmly bound,
> By sympathy's bright chain;
> Oh! then our glorious world world be
> A paradise indeed.

I am the well-wisher of the whole human race,

J. PETTY,

Fairy Song.

BY ALHAZA.

Sweet fairy, hold my aching head
Upon thy gentle breast;
Sing me a song of heavenly peace,
And soothe my soul to rest;

A holy song of the infinit God—
Shall we worship him with fear,
Who fills the world with woe and pain,
Nor sheds a human tear?

Under the glass of the lower sea
Strange beings swim and wade;
And mournful wrecks and skeletons are
On ocean's floor displayed.

But the carnage wild of the upper sea,
Would make us mute and pale;
While storms affright the mariner,
With sleet and iron hail.

They formed the rack, God's pious friends,
And flaying-knife as well;
And garments rolled in seas of blood
Can tales of vengeance tell.

The fittest ones, no doubt, survive,
How gentle, mild, and pure!
While helpless slaves are cast aside—
No hand their ills can cure.

Monopolist and greedy priest,
For power and wealth aspire;
They are the fittest, they survive,
To fill their heart's desire.

The poor are left in dens to starve,
And trampled on at best;
The ways of God are sad and dark,
And fierce his high behest.

And from the wine press of his wrath,
What cruel streamlets flow;
And the dark deeds he calls divine,
We would not stoop to do.

Sweet fairy, does he make it plain,
When we are cold and dead?
Or hold within his ample breast,
The babes that wail for bread?

And shall we toil, and watch, and pray,
To earn a grave and shroud,
A heaven all ready, somewhere near,
Within a purple cloud?

Then take my head upon thy breast,
Take body and soul, I pray,
And soothe me till the fiendish tricks,
Of God are passed away.

A Comment.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Having been reading a work published in your office, entitled "Nature's Harmony," written by Francis D. Lacy, from the effect that this work has had upon my mind, I am constrained to offer a comment. I hav read this work through for the second time, and, although at first I regarded it as lame in many points, since more thoroughly canvassing it, I am inclined to regard it as a wonderful piece of literature.

The way in which the author describes how worlds come into existence, their development and destruction, and the idea of each planet being an organized body incorporating an intellectual soul, to say nothing of Buddhistic views of three thousand years ago, is highly poetic as well as exceedingly plausible, and, if true, opens up a wonderful field for study in relation to organic life.

That the substance of planets, after subject to no further development, should go to the sun, is speculativ, but strictly analogous to the appropriation of material that is no longer of further usefulness to itself; and it is difficult to describe the strange feelings that the following lines in relation to the appropriation of the earth in death occasioned:

"And earth, a cold, reflectiv ball, in death-like paleness run, and every revolution made, crowd nearer to the sun, till when five million times or more, she circles in her course into the sun's deep, molten heat will plunge with awful force. Nor in suspense need we await to shun that awful day—the age of man into the world flies rapidly away, and we shall pass a thousand spheres as transient as this one, and nature's clock shall never tire, but proudly onward run."

After leading us into the infinit fields of space the author then excites our imagination by the living identities in infinitesimal form, as far as glass can reach or mind conjecture, and tells us that the nucleus of our existence was once equally as minute, and then even goes further and shows that everything must hav been developed out from cosmical matter, and that the evolutions were directed by an intellectual principle, "reigning universal, divine."

He shows scientifically that most creatures, man included, hav actually passed three spheres of existence, and from this conclusivly shows that this cannot be the last, and I do not think that any person who reads this work and understands it can afterward doubt but what we die merely to be ushered into another sphere for further development.

We might accuse Mr. Lacy of being speculativ in his theories, and in a degree ethereal, were it not for the fact that he has resorted to nothing but the fields of science for his arguments, having drawn from the wells of astronomy, geology, botany, chemistry, anatomy, and physiology, and nearly every department of natural history to display the grand harmony of nature.

Mr. Editor, I trust you will not regard these comments an intrusion upon your columns, as it is not so much my desire to advertise the work as it is that others might receive a satisfaction from reading it equal to that I hav experienced. J. R.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of The Truth Seeker, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of The Truth Seeker know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of Dean Milman, Wenck, Guizot, an English Churchman, (the learned editor of Bohn's edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for a knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and hav been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. cannot find words to express my gratitude."

CHAS. E. TRASK, 304 Ingham st., Jackson, Mich., says: "Garments arrived, with letter of instructions. Hav worn them. They are benefiting me more in the past week than all the medicin I hav ever taken."

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

NO CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

Gems of Thought.

THE art of printing, too, has been attributed to the devil, time and time again. Guttenburg and Faust, when they invented the art, were denounced as being in league with him. Leading bishops and priests of the Christian church, but a few centuries ago, did all they could to suppress and keep back the art of printing. They saw in it the facilities for conveying intelligence to the masses, and that it was calculated to lessen their hold upon them, and hence they fought it bitterly. They knew that God, neither directly nor through any special agents, priests, or prophets, ever did a thing or said a word about the printing-press, and it was very easy for them to come to the conclusion that it was the work of the devil.—D. M. Bennett.

HOW has it come about that thoughtful people are able to say, and to say sincerely and earnestly, "It does not make any difference what you believe?" I think after this fashion. We hav been taught from the first that it was absolutely essential that we should hold such and such opinions concerning God, man, and the future, in order that we might liv religious and moral lives. But the practical experience of men has, after many years, taught them that these assertions are not true. That is, it is not essential that you should hold these special beliefs about God, man, and the future, in order that you should lead a religious and moral life. And so it was not necessary that we should hold these opinions, because many that hold neither the one nor the other of them are among the noblest and best of our citizens. Because I say this is true, men hav thoughtlessly leaped to the illogical conclusion that it does not make any difference what opinions you do hold.—M. J. Savage.

I LOOK with scorn on the selfish greatness of this world, and with pity upon the most gifted and prosperous in the struggle for office and power; but I look with reverence on the obscurest man who suffers for the right, who is true to a good but persecuted cause.—Dr. Channing.

"TO think or not to think," is not the question; but, having the power forced upon us, how shall we exercise it? It is a sad commentary on our nature to find multitudes who seem all too willing to be the echoes of others; copyists or shadows—men who would tremble at their own thoughts or strangle them at their birth unless they bore the stamp of the mint of other men's brains. It is only by way of accommodation that such characters can be said to liv. The sponge livs, so does the oyster. But when a man livs it is because he thinks, and when he ceases to think he ceases to liv. . . . A few centuries ago and the world's mind was entombed; but "vain the stone, the watch, the seal;" thought had its resurrection morn, and we are now permitted to throw to the winds the dogmas of every human leader, and to learn God's will unshackled by the impertinent intervention of any authority.—Rev. Dr. Burns (of Hamilton, Ont.).

WE read with astonishment and horror the history of the Christian church; and sometimes, when we look back on the fires of persecution, and on the zeal of Christians in building up walls of separation, and in giving up one another to perdition, we feel as if we were reading the records of an infernal rather than a heavenly kingdom. An enemy to every religion, if asked to describe a Christian, would, with some show of reason, depict him as an idolater to his own distinguishing opinions, covered with badges of party, shutting his eyes on the virtues and his ears on the arguments of his opponents, arrogating all excellence to his own sect and all saving power to his own creed, sheltering, under the name of pious zeal, the love of denomination, the conceit of infallibility, and the spirit of intolerance, and trampling on men's rights under the pretense of saving their souls.—Dr. Channing.

WHETHER you are a land-owner or a fund-holder matters not; it is always miserable and ignoble to liv in uselessness by the sweat of other men's brows. But the evil can be cured or lessened only by the growth of a higher morality.—Goldwin Smith.

WE liv on an atom called earth, and what we know of the infinit is almost infinitly limited; but, little as we know, all hav an equal right to giv their honest thought. Life is a shadowy, strange, and winding road on which we travel for a little way—a few short steps—just from the cradle, with its lullaby of love, to the low and quiet wayside inn, where all at last must sleep, and where the only salutation is "Good-night."—Ingersoll.

WHEN we leave school our heads are naturally brimful of dogmas—that is, of knowledge and opinions at second-hand. Such dead knowledge is extremely dangerous, unless it is sooner or later reviewed by the spirit of free inquiry. It does not matter whether our scholastic dogmas be true or false; the danger is the same. And why? Because to place either truth or error above the reach of argument is certain to weaken truth and to strengthen error. Secondly, because to hold as true, on the authority of others, anything which concerns us deeply, and which we could prove ourselves, produces feebleness, if not dishonesty. And, thirdly, because to feel unwilling or unable to meet objections by argument is generally the first step toward violence and persecution.—Max Adeler.

BEING conscious to myself how great an ascendant Christianity holds over me beyond the other religions of the world, as being that religion whereunto was born and baptized; that which the supreme uthority has enjoined and my parents educated me n; that which everyone I meet withal approves of, and which I myself hav, by long-continued profession, made almost natural to me; I am resolved to be more jealous and suspicious of this religion than of the rest, and be sure not to entertain it any longer without being convinced, by solid and substantial arguments, of the truth and certainty of it.—Bishop Beveridge (1638-1708).

O WOMAN! in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade
By the light of quivering aspen made;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou! —Scott.

Odds and Ends.

THERE are few things in the world more rasping than a file of unpaid bills.

ISN'T it a little paradoxical to speak of a man as a crank when he is so set in his mind that you cannot turn him?

AS a proof that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin," observe how friendly strangers become at a dog fight.

"KIND words cost nothing." Yet we heard of a minister who wrote kind words to another man's wife, and it cost him a divorce suit.

"MR. ISAACS, can you tole me vere vas the first diamond!" "No, Mr. Yacobs. Vere vas it?" "Vy, Noah's son on der ark. He vas a Shem of der fust water."

FARMER Furrow thinks capital punishment ought to be abolished, because "so many murderers are swung straight into glory that heaven won't be a decent place for a respectable white man to stop in over night."

IT is feared that the Brooklyn bridge will be a failure because the footpath is in the middle, and the American citizen is thus deprived of the pleasure of leaning over the outer railing and spitting on the ferryboat.

IT is said that a young lady can never whistle in the presence of her lover. The reason is obvious. He doesn't giv her a chance. When she gets her lips in a proper position for whistling something else always occurs.

THEY were courting. "Don't sit so near me," she said. "I ain't near you," he said. "You are." "I ain't." "But you will be." "No I won't, neither." "Then you'd better go home, for I hain't got no use for you." No cards.

IN modern Egypt a young man is not permitted to see his wife's face before marriage. Whoever has invested in prize packages can imagin the feelings of the average young Egyptian as he gazes on his trinket for the first time.

"WHAT," asked the lawyer, "are you growling about? Didn't I win your case for you?" "Yes, you won the case. But you didn't insinuate that the man against me abuses his wife or steals hens. Do you think that was earning your money?"

LAWYER—"You say you made an examination of the premises. What did you find?" Witness—"Oh, nothing of consequence; a 'beggarly account of empty boxes,' as Shakspere says." Lawyer—"Never mind what Shakspere says. He will be summoned, and can testify for himself if he knows anything about the case.

THERE is a man in Illinois who is industriously engaged in hating himself to death. His wife invested two dollars in a lottery ticket, and her husband got mad and boxed her ears, and drove her away from home with no baggage except a change of clothes and the ticket. The ticket drew $5,000, and when he found it out he went to her to tell her how he loved her, and how he had always said she had a great head on her, but she wouldn't hav it, and told him to go and soak his head. He says you can't depend on women.

A GUARDIAN ANGEL OF THE GLOOMY GULCH.

"I'm the man from Spearfish," he said, as he entered the sanctum and placed his hat upon the gracefully polsed head of the statue of Venus on the managing editor's pitch pine escritoire. "I'm the guardian angel o' the gloomy gulch, and please let that fact attach itself to yer memory with a gladdenin' grip!"

"In business out at Spearfish?" asked the editor.

"In business? That's a purty conundrum to fire off at the business head o' the hull diggins! I'm the fountain head from w'ich the business o' the hills purls forth with a tinklin' purl! I'm the log from w'ich the chips o' business fly w'en the axe o' progress is swingin! Ketch on?"

"Interested in mines, we presume?"

"Naw! I'm a lawyer, a doctor, a justice o' the peace, notary public, post-master, state agent, proprietor o' the gineral store, and minister o' the gospel. I'm the blazin' sun around w'ich the satellites o' the camp revolve."

"You say you are a preacher? Do you hav charge of the spiritual welfare of the diggings?"

"Do I? Pardon me jest a moment till I work up a blush of modesty. I don't want ter brag on myself, partner, but I reckon ef ye'd go out thar, the boys would want ter make you believe that w'en I'm in proper trimmin' I can sling the livin' word ahead of any gospel sharp that ever tried to corrall a herd of sinners. My modesty'd get to itchin' if I should refer to my own powers o' latherin' the hosts o' Satan, but the truth won't feel insulted if I incidentally observe that when I begin to ladle out the sacred truth the ramparts o' sin tremble as if shaken by a mighty wind, an' the imps o' perdition hunt their holes till the cyclone's over. When I git a fair spread on a rattlin' text an' pass the first quarter pole an' hold myself down to my work, the rafters o' the tabernacle pop like castanets an' the ungodly followers o' sin h'ist their sails an' light out for the everlastin' hills. When I shed my worldly coat and rastle with the powers o' sin, the air is filled with smoke an' hair an' the awe-stricken masses set down and tremble. Pardner, I reckon I can preach a little when the spirit o' inspiration cottons to me on the squar."

"Do you hav good success in turning sinners into the straight and narrow way? Do you reap a rich harvest of souls and snatch them from the brink of that awful precipice of sin and eternal damnation upon which, alas! too many are now standing?" asked the city editor, wiping a tear from his eye and looking up from a glowing description of a prize dog fight on which he had won more than fifty drinks.

"Once more permit me to turn around while a blush mantles my modest cheek. Partner, mighty few on e'm gits away when the music o' my theological voice hits 'em in the ear. When I git after a band of sinners an' begin to howl my means o' salvation at 'em, I'm a goin' to round up the herd if I hav to use a six shooter as a logical an' convincin' argyment."

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

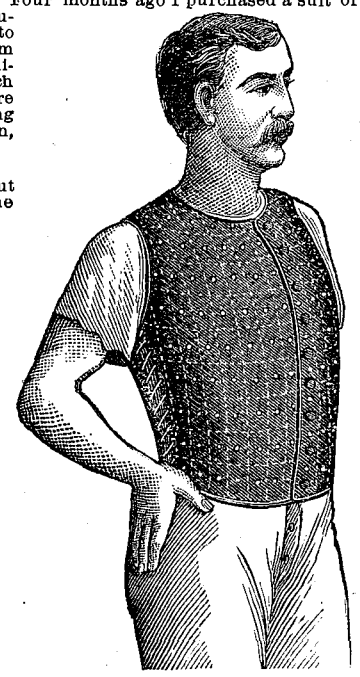
SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Vol. 10. No. 23. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, June 9, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

CHURCHES are increasing in number, but so are the heretics.—New York Sun.

IT is alleged by Texas Siftings that Blaine, of Maine, is a Freethinker.

THE failure of a prominent Methodist merchant in Berlin, Vt., has reduced to poverty many members of the church who had confided their savings to his care.

A GREAT poet is not without honor save in his own country. An Ayrshire paper is authority for the statement that there is not a single copy of Burns's poems in the free public library at Mauchline.

A WOMAN writes to the Boston Globe that, finding she could earn more in business than her husband, they reversed the usual order of things. She now goes to business, and he does all the home work, and does it excellently. The plan works very satisfactorily.

A WESTERN paper announcing the illness of the editor, piously adds: "All subscribers who hav paid cash in advance are requested to mention him in their prayers. The others need not, as the prayers of the wicked avail nothing." This is pretty rough on the clergymen who hav been getting free copies.—Texas Siftings.

REV. MR. TALMAGE says the principal occupation in heaven will be singing. For this assurance, many thanks. Nearly all the angels we hav seen in pictures were playing solos on fish horns, and we feared that this was their principal employment. Perhaps these pictures were not "taken on the spot."—Boston Post.

A NEW YORK clergyman went to Boston and visited a colored church. "How are you prospering?" he asked the sexton. "Tings ain't so good as dey was, boss," was the reply. "We got a new minister and he ain't so good as de old one." "What's the matter with him?" "Well, boss, you see he's kind of illiterate—comes from New York.

THE Rev. Mr. Houghton, of New Haven, preached a sermon on the Salvation Army, which is quartered in that city. It was an attack on the revivalists, their methods, and the results. He even went so near the truth as to characterize them as "half-crazed people who go up and down the land shouting to a sinful world to flee from the wrath to come."

THE disclosures concerning gambling, and especially poker playing, in the army are shocking for the editor of the Christian Advocate, who says: "With deep regret we see the name of an old acquaintance and former parishioner involved." It would be gratifying to the Christians generally to see an exposure of immorality anywhere in which some pious individual is not involved. The world is yet waiting to see such an instance.

THE infelicity in the Park Reformed church, Jersey City, every day assumes larger proportions. It grew out of the singing of a hymn, in which the Virgin is appealed to for protection "on the dreadful judgment day." The pastor declared it unorthodox. He would hav the word "virgin" changed for "savior." It would seem to a person at a distance that it could make little difference, on an occasion like the "last day," who did the protecting. Perhaps it would be safest to sing the hymn both ways. A congregation that will quarrel over a little matter like that must be spoiling for a fight.

A METHODIST church which some years ago began to build without sufficiently counting the cost, succeeded in doing the work only as far as digging the cellar, laying the foundations, and building the walls up to a level with the ground. Debts, mismanagement, and other hindrances brought about total failure, and the sale of the property under the hammer of the sheriff's auctioneer. The worst of all was that the property was purchased by an ice company that found the excavation and its surrounding walls of heavy masonry exactly what they wanted for an ice house. Thus the place which was to hav been filled with the fervent hallelujahs, amens, and brimstone of the enthusiastic followers of John Wesley is used for the storage of ice.

THE Quakers are talking about revising their book of "Doctrin, Practice, and Disciplin," which contains the principal enactments of yearly meetings concerning the matters mentioned in its title. These quiet people find that their rules are so strict that the young people are driven off into other denominations or into irreligion. The intense feeling of conservatism which prevails among the Friends will probably prevent any very radical changes at present. The question, however, is between relaxing the rigidity of the disciplin and letting the brotherhood of Quakerism dwindle into nothing.

IT is a Delaware clergyman who declares in the Observer that the negro church-members in his state are almost unanimously vicious. Stealing, lying, and licentiousness are their besetting sins, and the last is the more general. Most of them marry, but it is in most instances a mere form. The marriage vow is disregarded. He could not with the least degree of confidence point out a single virtuous couple. Such there may be, but he would not know where to find one. He asked one of the better sort of colored men about this, and he acknowledged that he knew of only a single exception, and that was himself and wife.

A CERTAIN minister of the kirk of Scotland, now deceased, had prepared with great care a series of discourses on the parable of the ten virgins, and made use of them rather oftener than some of his brethren thought he should. On the evening of a communion Sabbath, when assisting a brother clergyman in the same presbytery, he delivered one of his series, which his friend had heard more than once. When the services were over, and the two ministers were on their way to the manse, the one said to the other: "Man, John, I really think you should gie up thae virgins; ye're fairly making auld maids of them!"

THE people of Goshen, N. Y., are laboring under considerable excitement, the result of a personal collision between the rector of the Episcopal church and the superintendent of the Sunday-school. There had been bad blood between the combatants for some time, owing to a suspicion which the rector, Mr. Maury, entertained that the superintendent, Mr. Matthews, did not show toward him a proper degree of respect. On Sunday, the 20th ult., Mr. Maury made arrangements to take Mr. Matthews's class of young ladies away from him. Matthews objected; hence the collision. The superintendent jumped on the rector, choked him, pulled his whiskers, scratched his face, and, when Mrs. Maury came to the rescue of her husband, hustled her unkindly aside. Mr. Maury escaped and went home under police escort. Mr. Matthews was arrested and held for disturbing a religious meeting.

THERE is considerable feeling among the members of the colored Austin Blue Light Tabernacle. It is, as usual, about a woman, and the pastor, Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter, is mixed up in it, also as usual. The widow Tripet, who recently lost her husband, is black but comely. She is also very ignorant. A few evenings ago a sensation was created in the Tabernacle when Mrs. Tripet got up and complained of the perfidy of Parson Baxter. "What has our b'loved pasture done did to hurt yer feelins, Widdy Tripet?" asked Uncle Mose, who is a steward in the church. "He is a triflin', onreliable pasture. He may be as wise as de sarpint, but he am not as harmless as de dog mentioned in de scriptures, an' I pronounce him befo' dis heah distracted meetin' as a deceber. When my husband was alive dat ar b'loved pasture would come ter my house mos' ebery day, an' hug an' kiss me an' tell me to keep on walkin' in de narrer path, an' then he'd tell me dat if I wasn't married he would lead me to de altaw, an' now, bred'ren, my husband has done been dead mos' a month, an' de pasture hain't said de fust thing 'bout dat ceremony, an' he don't neber come to see me no mo'."—Texas Siftings.

STYLE of matter is to a preacher more important than the manner of delivery. So says Prof. Austin Phelps. He points out that good style, as he uses the term, involves perspicuity, energy, elegance, and naturalness. He declares that a large class of middle-men between the scholars and the vulgar do not know enough to refrain from slang in their own practice. The surest way to be understood is to speak your pure mother tongue. Not a thought exists which must go outside of the English tongue for a clear, precise, forcible utterance. Good sense must hav literal expression.

IT is Cardinal Manning who relates this incident as having happened to himself: "One night I was returning to my residence in Westminster when I met a poor man carrying a basket and smoking a pipe. I thought over this Aristotelian syllogism: He who smokes gets thirsty; he who is thirsty desires to drink; he who drinks too much gets drunk; he who gets drunk goes to hell. This man is in danger of mortal sin. Let us save him. I affectionately addressed him: 'Are you a Catholic?' 'I am, thanks be to God!' 'Where are you from?' 'From Cork, your reverence.' 'Are you a member of the total abstinence society?' 'No, your reverence.' 'Now,' said I, 'that is wrong. Look at me; I am a member.' 'Faith, maybe your reverence has need of it.' I shook hands with him and left him."

ROBERT J. BURDETTE, the Burlington Hawk-eye humorist, breaks out in this way through the Philadelphia Times: "Man, born of woman, is of few days and no teeth. And, indeed, it would be money in his pocket sometimes if he had less of either. As for his days, he wasteth one-third of them, and as for his teeth, he has convulsions when he cuts them, and as the last one comes through, lo, the dentist is twisting the first one out, and the last end of that man's jaw is worse than the first, being full of porcelain and a roof-plate built to hold blackberry seeds. Stone bruises line his pathway to manhood; his father boxes his ears at home, the big boys cuff him in the play-ground, and the teacher whips him in the school-room. He buyeth Northwestern at 110, when he hath sold short at 96, and his neighbor unloadeth upon him Iron Mountain at 63 5-8, and it straightway breaketh down to 52 1-4. He riseth early and sitteth up late that he may fill his barns and storehouses, and lo! his children's lawyers divide the spoil among themselvs and say, 'Ha, ha!' He growleth and is sore distressed because it raineth, and he beateth upon his breast and sayeth, 'My crop is lost!' because it raineth not. The late rains blight his wheat and the frost biteth his peaches. If it be so that the sun shineth, even among the nineties, he sayeth, 'Woe is me, for I perish,' and if the northwest wind sigheth down in forty-two below he crieth, 'Would I were dead!' If he wear sackcloth and blue jeans men say, 'He is a tramp,' and if he goeth forth shaven and clad in purple and fine linen all the people cry, 'Shoot the dude!' He carryeth insurance for twenty-five years, until he hath paid thrice over for all his goods, and then he letteth his policy lapse one day, and that same night fire destroyeth his store. He buildeth him a house in Jersey, and his first-born is devoured by musketos; he pitcheth his tents in New York, and tramps devour his substance. He moveth to Kansas, and a cyclone carryeth his house away over into Missouri, while a prairie fire and ten million acres of grasshoppers fight for his crop. He settleth himself in Kentucky, and is shot the next day by a gentleman, a colonel, and a statesman, 'because, sah, he resembles, sah, a man, sah, he did not like, sah.' Verily, there is no rest for the sole of his foot, and if he had it to do over again he would not be born at all, for 'the day of death is better than the day of one's birth.'"

THE Definition of Science.

SECOND PAPER IN REPLY TO MR. PUTNAM.

Mr. Putnam propounded in the Colloquium, and later in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as his definition of Science, the simple two words, Systematized Knowledge. In the Colloquium I at once accepted and acquiesced in that definition. So did Mr. Wakeman, and so did we all who spoke on the subject, if I correctly understood them, except Mr. F. F. Cook, who thought that the idea of verification should be brought into the definition, which means the method by which we become certain that we hav the knowledge; and Mr. W. M. Boucher, who also accepted our definition as far as it went, but insisted that more should be added—so, if I understood him aright, as to cover not only verification, but the application or uses of science. I will advert to the extra demands of Mr. Cook and Mr. Boucher a little later.

When this simple definition of science was so propounded in the Colloquium, I accepted it on the spur of the occasion, and, as of course, merely because it seemed natural and right to me. I did not then remember that it was, in its exact terms, the definition of science which I had myself given ten or more years ago in the "Basic Outline of Universology," which I now find, however, by reference to that work, to be the fact. I do not of course now know whether Mr. Putnam adopted his definition from me, and if so, whether he did so consciously or unconsciously; nor do I know whether I was the first to formulate that definition, or whether I adopted it in turn from some one else. Be this as it may, and about which it is not important to inquire, since there is so much unanimity now on the subject, the following extract from the "Basic Outline" will show the views which I put forth so far back as 1872, involving this definition of science, but also giving the basic distribution of Universology itself and so of all knowledge; a statement which is fundamentally important in its bearing upon the present discussion:

"The first crude Impressions which the world makes upon the mind furnish substantially the conception which we denominate NATURE. The Speculations which we institute and entertain concerning them, in the Forms of Thought, are, in the first instance, mere speculations; but, when verified and systematized, they become Knowledge, culminating in SCIENCE. The ulterior reactions of the Mind upon the exterior World, through 1, the Bodily Activities; 2, the Creations or Products of those Activities; and 3, the Modifications of the Exterior World accompanying them, correspond with what is called ART, in the most extended meaning of that term; a meaning for which Practical Philosophy is sometimes employed as the more comprehensiv and appropriate term.

"NATURE, SCIENCE, and ART are thus, representativly, a threefold Grand Distribution of the Universe" ("Basic Outline of Universology," pp. 7, 8, texts 10, 11).

Taken in this fundamental way, this distinction of universal things into 1. Data, facts, or Nature, and 2. Law, Logos, or system, is again applicable to the two fundamental departments within science itself. That is to say, within the domain of science or systematized knowledge there is a department which is more Nature-like or relates more to the objectiv or observed facts, and hence called Natural Science, or the Natural Sciences; and another department especially including the laws of being (logic and mathematics) contained in science, which department is then more specially related to Science as the other is to Nature—or repeats science especially within the domain of science.

This fact has led to a strongly-marked division of views in the Colloquium, not as to the first and general definition of science—or systematized knowledge—but as to one of a secondary order, namely, as to which of these two grand divisions of science—Natural Science (plant life, animal life, etc.), or Exact Science (mathematics, logic, etc.)—is the preëminent or governing department; which, in other words, is the more distinctivly Science, properly so-called.

The divergency here was especially between Mr. Wakeman and myself—Mr. Putnam siding with Mr. Wakeman—my view being that just stated above, namely, that Exact Science (the scientismus) outranks Natural Science (the naturismus), as being peculiarly of the Scientific, and as it is not of the Naturalistic order.

It was with reference to this point then, as I supposed and suppose, that Mr. Putnam in his article in THE TRUTH SEEKER was carried forward into statements about Sensation, Perception, and Reason, which I could not accede to, and upon which I reviewed him in my previous article. I hav more to say about this difference between Mr. Wakeman and myself, before I close; but in the first place, now, let us go back a little upon the previous question of the definition of science upon which Mr. Wakeman, Mr. Putnam, and myself agreed, and Mr. Cook and Mr. Boucher in part. And here I will now ask, While this is confessedly a definition of science, is it the definition? i.e., is it the one perfect and exclusiv definition upon which science itself must ultimately settle as the scientific account of its own nature and existence? Reviewed now, ten years after I first virtually formulated this definition for myself, I again, speaking still for myself, find it without a flaw, and every way adequate and sufficient. [I say virtually, because in my earlier definition I at the moment perceive that I may be construed as having included verification, which I now think, with Mr. Putnam, may be dispensed with.]

The reason why this simple definition, "Systematized Knowledge," is every way adequate is that each of these two terms embraces an occult and tremendous sweep of significance, so that when united and begripped they seem to contain everything requisit to the perfect definition of science. System means all scheme, plan, outlay, co-ordination, adjustment, and arrangement; the whole immense network of relationships as between things throughout the universe. Knowledge means all that is absolutely and certainly known, while the term is tremendously rigorous in excluding all the lower grades of partial convincement. [Dr. Atkinson has an admirable statement of the ascending scale of the various stages of mentation culminating in knowledge, which he has also stated in the Colloquium, and which I should be glad that he should intervene in this discussion and restate in THE TRUTH SEEKER.] System alone, it should be emphatically stated, does not and cannot prove the existence of the objectiv things to which it might apply if they existed; and this is what Mr. Putnam means when he says, "We may imagin all sorts of reasonable things; but reasonable things are not necessarily true things. True things are things that are proved to be true by the human mind in actual conjunction with the outer world." But system may be so perfect, if based upon exhaustiv analysis—and this is an all-important point which Mr. Putnam is probably not so well acquainted with Universology as to be aware of—that if the things exist they must exist in accordance with the so-discovered and formulated system. Still, with all this, it is nevertheless true that the knowledge of the facts must come through the senses, and that both knowledge and system are alike essential to the fulness of the meaning of the term Science. On this, then, we agree. The difference arises when we come to the question of the emphasis which Science itself puts upon the one or the other of these two factors.

System means etymologically "stand-together," the mode of the standing-together of the facts or the parts, and not the facts and parts as such; and it is the system-side of the complex mass of ideas which is, as I affirm, the preëminently scientific element within science itself—mathematics more characteristically scientific than botany or geology; system the more scientific as contrasted with mere knowledge—as against the current and Wakemanian notion of the subject, which is the converse or oppositness of this statement.

Returning to Mr. Cook and Mr. Boucher, one would add to the definition of science the idea of verification or test, and the other, application or uses, especially as an organon or instrument in the acquisition of more knowledge. I should be glad to hear from these gentlemen in THE TRUTH SEEKER in respect to their views, which I may not adequately represent; but as now advised, I should say that both of their ideas are incidental and not essential in the definition of science. Verification relates to the way in which we become certain that we hav knowledge, but our definition demands in any event that the knowledge be had; and the manner of its acquisition and ascertainment falls, therefore, into a category of secondary importance. So, also, the uses to which science is appropriately put are not a necessary and inherent portion of the science itself. If never put to any use whatever, if it still be in real verity both system and knowledge united and begripped, it is science all the same.

Other thinkers and writers than ourselvs of the Colloquium hav been in part over this same ground and hav arrived at their own conclusions on the subject. Huxley in his lectures on the "Educational Value of the Natural History Sciences, in Lay Sermons" has aproached the subject, not indeed as attempting any precise definition of science, but as giving the particulars of the process by which all scientific acquisition is made. These steps are, according to him, four:

"1. Observation of facts; including under this head that artificial observation which is called experiment.

"2. That process of tying up similar facts into bundles, ticketed for use, which is called Comparison and Classification, the result of the process, the ticketed bundles, being named general propositions.

"3. Deduction, which takes us from the general proposition to facts again—teaches us, if I may so say, to anticipate from the ticket what is inside the bundle. And finally,

"4. Verification, which is the process of ascertaining whether, in point of fact, our anticipation is a correct one."

Taking up now this series of items inversely, we hav already disposed of verification with Mr. Cook, and with deduction or ulterior uses with Mr. Boucher, and we are back again with our two factors of science; first, the observation of facts, and, second, the systematization, by comparison and classification; "the ticketed bundles" of facts which allies us with mathematics; and we are back again to the question which of these two is the peculiarly or dominantly scientific factor.

Among the great leaders of thought there has never, until quite recently, been any doubt thrown upon this matter. The very name mathemathics was originally synonymous with science. The mathematics has always stood confessedly as at the head of the scientific hierarchy; or, what is the same thing in the matter of science, as the basis or foundation. Comte, in his day, placed it there, and Spencer, in our day, does the same. All over Europe the great geometer and the great philologian rank as great scientists along with the great physicists. But within the last decade or two there has sprung up, especially in England—and their influence has reached this country—a group of Biologists, Tyndall and Huxley, and their congeners, who hav been steadily more and more narrowing the application of the term science, perhaps quite unconsciously, until they apply it, almost exclusivly, to that very prominent and activ branch of operations in the scientific world to which they are themselvs especially addicted.

In this controversy Mr. Wakeman, and, following him, Mr. Putnam, hav, I hope also unconsciously, surrendered, it seems to me, to that narrow, insular, local, and unauthorized construction of the range of science, from which blunder, if it be a blunder, some very curious results hav occurred, which I took the occasion to point out in the Colloquium; but unfortunately when Mr. Wakeman was absent, so that I am glad to bring them to his attention in this way. In the first place, the old and governing sciences of mankind—logic, mathematics (and now analogic)—being ruled out of the scientific circles, it becomes necessary to find some other name for them; and Mr. Wakeman, striking about for a means for so naming them, collectivly calls them all "Poetry"—meaning thereby that they are the ideal, abstract, and subjectiv order of human knowledge, rather than of the material, real, and objectiv order. In the Colloquium Mr. Wakeman took the "bull by the horns," and called Euclid a mere poet; or, in a word, all mathematicians and all abstract thinkers of all classes mere poets.

In the next place, however, co-ordination and classification belong exclusivly in this so-called poetical domain which, if I understand them right, Mr. Wakeman, Mr. Putnam, and that ilk, propose ruling out of science, under the two opprobrious terms, "poetry" and "metaphysics." I, on the other hand, affirm that it is precisely this ideal domain which, as coördination and classification of the more sensuous knowledge, is preëminently science or the scientific element within science, insomuch that rigorously speaking, there is still no other science than the mathematics and the implications of the mathematics; and, on the other hand, that the so-called natural sciences are not sciences, but mere departments of nature and of natural or common knowledge, except in the measure and proportion as they hav become imbued with the spirit of mathematics.

In the next place, it so happens that Mr. Wakeman's only claim to be recognized in the scientific world at all rests upon his exceedingly valuable labors as a classifier in and of the sciences. He has not, so far as I am aware, ever printed two pages of mere physical observation and experiment. Now by my method of reckoning scientific rank, by my scale of relativ values in the hierarchy of the sciences, Mr. Wakeman and the little handful of his associates in this work of scientific classification stand legitimately and unquestionably at the head of the scientific world. I probably somewhat surprised Mr. Wakeman himself by first announcing the labors of Mr. Wakeman, and Mr. Wakeman himself, in this exalted rank of estimation, in a series of papers which I was engaged in publishing in Boston some six or seven years ago. But now, by his own present method of reckoning scientific altitude, which I hope surely that he has not been in any measure prompted to adopt by any back-thought of shortening my individual hight, he has cut himself down so low that he has lost all claim to be regarded as a scientific man at all. In other words, he is a mere poet, and so by the severity of his anti-metaphysical hatchet he has, perhaps unthoughtedly, cut off the very limb which he himself stood upon.

But the question at issue, the question, Which it is of the two things compared, which is the really scientific element within science, will not be settled by personal considerations of any kind, but by the inherent nature of truth.

Two additional and very ruling words hav now been introduced into this discussion. Those are, Law and Truth. Let us look here incidentally for definitions. Spencer defines law to be "uniformity of relations amidst a variety of phenomena," and again, "Uniformity of relations among phenomena." The recognition of law in and by our minds may be either very partial, or proximately accurate, or quite perfect. A perfect recognition of law is coincident with, and repetitory of, and in a great sense identical with the law itself. It is the network of those laws and of the relations of which they are the mere extensions, in coördinated systems, that is the essential element of science. Still all of this lies within the realm which the Positivists suppose to be purely ideal and subjectiv, poetical and metaphysical, therefore, and according to their inverted way of viewing things, not scientific at all.

I extend my invitation given heretofore to Mr. Putnam to Mr. Wakeman as well, to giv us through THE TRUTH SEEKER a definition of "Metaphysics as Something to be ruled out of Science," by the logic of which he will be willing to abide.

Mr. F. F. Cook has given us in Colloquium as the definition of truth the phrase, if I mistake not, "Congruity with Perception." I am willing to let that stand for the present unquestioned; but I wish to call attention to the fact that even now this word truth, so glibly used by everybody, as if they knew what it is, has no less than four distinct varieties.

1. The truth of sensuous impression, or the knowledge which we get directly through the senses—Naturismal Truth.

2. Truth of abstract exactitude, intellectual or rational truth—Scientismal Truth.

3. Truth of Artistic Adaptation, for the fitness of definitiv results—Artismal Truth.

4. Truth of Integral or All-sided Proportionment—Integral Truth.

In the light of these discriminations what shall we make of these tremendous and venturesome assertions put forth so recklessly by Mr. Putnam: "Nowhere along the whole line does the human intellect, merely as intellect, supply a particle of truth." "Truth is in a well, and that well is the continuous contact of the mind of man with its environments." "Reasoning in itself never provides man with truth." "Pure reasoning has never given the world a bit of actual knowledge?"

All that these statements can mean with any approximation to soberness is that the exercise of mind; the fact of mentation, which furnishes us with Scientismal truth, as above defined, has no power to furnish us with that Naturismal kind of truth which requires the functioning of a different department of the mind. All of this is precisely equivalent, analogically, with the statement which should be made by an author, who had first settled it with himself that Feeling is Sensation, and that nothing else is, and who should thereupon affirm that vision or the eye had never, through the whole cycles of time, given to the human family one particle of Sensation or Sensuous Perception or real knowledge.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

The Tree of Ten Thousand Images.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "Holt's" article headed, "The Hive of Nations and of the Great Religious Ideas," which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 21st ult., has so much interested me that my mind has occasionally reverted to it ever since I first read it. My interest attaches chiefly to the tree which is said to bear the characters of the sacred language of Thibet on its leaves and the bark of its trunk and branches. But it occurs to me that possibly the tree, as to time, antecedes the sacred characters. It is said that in the 13th century, the lama of Isa-skya, teacher of Kublai Khan, emperor of China, contrived letters for the Mongolic language. Is this language identical with the sacred language of Thibet? If so, may it not be that the lama patterned his characters after the figures on the tree? You will forever oblige me if you can authoritativly inform me on this, and also whether all the letters of the Thibetan alphabet, and no other figures besides, are found on the tree. If you are unable to furnish the desired information, cannot some one of your readers, for instance, Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews, who, I understand, is a great linguist, or perhaps Mr. Holt, render the service, through your paper, to a humble and ill-posted inquirer? If the tree is posterior in time to the sacred characters, it presents, in my opinion, the most striking counterpart of the Christian miracles, especially, as it seems to me, if all and none but the figures of the sacred alphabet are to be found on the tree. The Christian and pagan "miracles," being thus perfectly counterparted, would, in my judgment, neutralize each other as to their evidential value. The implication may appear as of no moment to many of your readers, since I am not ignorant than in certain quarters miracles hav long ceased to be worth considering. Yet it is a broad fact that the most imposing portion of Christianity falls back upon miracles as its indefeasible support and as the most articulate vindication of its divine origin. If, however, it can be made out that paganism is amply justified in pointing to wonders completely matching the Christian miracles, it would show, I think, the inanity of "supernatural" evidence more palpably than any reasoning a priori. However stringent and irrefutable, to all appearance, such reasoning may be, you can hardly help a lurking suspicion that there may be an occult flaw in the argument, especially as the infallibility of human reason is so limited in its scope.

That tree, barring its putativ and obviously legendary origin, looms up before me, though as yet in uncertain outlines, as a stupendous marvel; and I deem it quite suggestiv that, on examining it, the Lazariel Huc and his companion "were filled with absolute consternation, and that the perspiration absolutely trickled down their faces under the influence of their sensation at the amazing spectacle." The age of the tree, as well as the alleged circumstance that it is the only one of its kind in existence and cannot be propagated, lends it an increased interest and mystery.

I am happy in improving this occasion by expressing my unfeigned gratification at the appreciable improvement of THE TRUTH SEEKER under your management. Not only do you handle questions of interest with thoroughness and vigor, but you giv also a practical illustration to the truism that variety adds spice to a paper. J. B.

REPLY BY "HOLT."

I can, I think, entirely satisfy your correspondent's curiosity on the point as to the letters, whether older or later than the tree. The letters used are the same as the Sanscrit. The same suspicion arose in my own mind as to the origin of the alphabet. I suspected at once that the letters were copied from the tree. The volume of Huc, "Tartary, and Thibet," I hav is illustrated. It givs a picture of the tree, of a Buddhist prayer with the original letters, also of a leaf from the tree. I hav also before me several volumes of Asiatic researches, with illustrations of ancient grants of land, and columns with inscriptions, all in the Sanscrit letters; some in the most ancient form. Now these letters on the leaf and on the illustrated prayer are of the Sanscrit alphabet. They are extremely complex and varied, like figures 2, 3, 4, 5, with 0 and dots tumbled together, upside down and in various other positions. Of course there can be no question as to the antiquity of the characters.

As to the size of the tree, its probable age, etc., Huc says: "The Tree of Ten Thousand Images seemed to us of great age. Its trunk, which three men could scarcely embrace with outstretched arms, is not more than eight feet high; the branches, instead of shooting up, spread out in the shape of a plume of feathers and are extremely bushy; few of them are dead. The leaves are always green and the wood, which is of a reddish tint, has an exquisit odor, something like cinnamon."

Shall we believe these things or not believe? Years ago I found that there are more wonders under heaven than my philosophy dreamed of. Here are these Christian priests, all stern with prejudice against this wonder and interested inexpressibly in the exposure of the affair as a humbug, yet they honestly confess the contrary. As pertinent to this, I suggest the case of Father Jacolliot, himself a Roman Catholic priest, missionary, student, traveler. During his residence in India he became intimate with a Buddhist priest, and one in whom he instinctivly recognized a great soul, noble, ingenuous, sincere. So astounded was Jacolliot by his experience with this man that his keen, logical mind convinced him that if "these signs shall follow them that believe," modern Christianity had no believers. He became convinced that certain singular phenomena pertain to no one religion but to certain conditions of humanity of all ages, races, and climates; that they hav been used by priestcraft to deceive the people into believing in special forms and creeds. Jacolliot publicly renounced his religion and published later his well-known "Bible in India."

I once knew a very intelligent woman who was a Mormon. It surprised me that one of such a clear mind could hold to that or any other sectarian creed. Finally I asked her:

"Mrs. ——, why are you a Mormon?"

"Why am I a Mormon? Because I was brought up to believe in the New Testament, and I found therein that 'these signs shall follow them that believe.' It always puzzled me, till by accident I was eye-witness to a remarkable cure of a disease by laying on of hands. It was done by Mormon priests who proceeded according to the direction given by James v, 14. 'Is any sick? Call the elders and let them pray over him, anointing the body with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall heal the sick.' Now I knew this was done one time. I knew the sick person before and after. No other sect pretended to hav this power. What was I to do?"

"Very true! Now if I could prove to you that this thing is done by others; that even Infidels hav done it by simply touching the body of the sick—that religion has nothing to do with it, what then?"

"If you could do that I certainly would hav no ground to stand on. Are you in earnest?"

"Yes. This healing the sick of some diseases by touching belongs to human nature, not to any religion. Man has a mysterious influence over man, and we do not yet know all the mystery of disease and cure."

And to this day that is the secret of the tremendous influence of the Mormon priesthood over thousands, who, amazed at such "miraculous proof," would die for their faith. HOLT.

"ANSWERS TO CHRISTIAN QUESTIONS." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

The Infidel Gentleman.

It is very common to hear the "Christian gentleman" spoken of in society, but rarely, if ever, is anything said of the Infidel gentleman. In fact, the Infidel is not considered by some as a gentleman at all, and, if mentioned, it is with a sneer, or in a tone of contempt as "that wicked Infidel," that obstinate old Freethinker," etc. And yet the real Infidel is the very noblest among all noble gentleman, for he is honest with himself and with all the world. Rejecting that which is contrary to reason and common sense, he dares to boldly express his sincere convictions. If the world censures, it must censure; he will be true at all hazards. A seeker after knowledge, a learner from all that can teach, a traveler with extended vision on his journey through the world, he is not afraid to confess his ignorance of the unknown, as he strives to "follow truth where'er she leads the way." Correct in his dealings, honorable in his conduct, true to his fellows, and true in every relation of life, disseminating kind words, a ready sympathy, and many good deeds, working for the elevation of the race, lifting burdens, checking poverty when it is possible to do so, he is the true friend, in whom one need not fear to trust. He is the genuin gentleman, and for the multiplication of his kind the world waits. The "Christian gentleman" has been in the foreground a long time, and he has made sad havoc, many times and often, in business, political and friendly relations. Under the plausible cloak of the "Christian gentleman," he has betrayed trusts, abstracted the substance of the widow and the orphan, and made much ruin and sorrow in communities. But the "Christian gentleman" is slowly moving into a state of retiracy, and the Infidel gentleman is coming to the front, modest, unassuming, truthful, just, and honorable. May he long be a pattern for all men to emulate. SUSAN H. WIXON.

"Beast Butler."

After this noted man had issued a more godly Fast Day proclamation than had been issued by any other governor for half a century; after he had joined the Young Men's Christian Association, and had in many other ways shown himself to be, all of a sudden, a Christian of the straitest sect, the people were prepared to hear of his doing something "spooney." They were prepared to lock up their spoons when he was in their neighborhood, and to take against him such other precautions as it has been found necessary to take against all great politicians and great monopolists who make an uncommon display of godliness. They were not prepared, however, to hear of his committing such outrages as he has committed upon his brother Christians, the keepers of the Tewksbury almshouse. They were not prepared to hear of his interfering with the means by which these, his brethren, were rapidly laying up for themselvs "treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves (other Christians) break through and steal." The people are shocked at his audacity.

It seems that in addition to serving the Lord with cheap prayers, these good Tewksbury Christians were doing all they could to serve the cause of science by furnishing cheap subjects for dissection in the medical colleges of the vicinity. It seems that in order to supply the demand for subjects in these colleges, these good people were in the habit of starving to death dozens at once of the little orphans that were placed in their tender care. It seems that when the corpse market was a little dull, and their supply was rather large, they were in the habit of pickling their prepared corpses until the demand became more brisk. It seems, further, that these model Christians, in addition to all these good works, were endeavoring to build up a new manufacturing industry by skinning little orphan children and tanning their skins. And "Beast Butler," just because he is governor of one little state—not half as large as some counties in the West—has "done gone and put a stop" to all these good and profitable works.

Why should he hav done this? How does he know how many good things the Lord may hav done which he (the Lord, not the beast) would never hav thought of doing had he not been induced to do them by the prayers which these good Tewksbury people were wont to offer up while preparing a batch of little orphans for the pickle tub? Why does he blame these good people for starving the children to death? Did he expect these children to be dissected alive? If not, was not starving them to death as economical a way of changing them into corpses as any other? As to the pickling of the corpses, would he hav had them spoil and hav had more fresh corpses made? How does he know but that, for every corpse made, pickled, and sold by these good people, they put a nickel—or at least a copper—into the Lord's contribution box? And how does he know but that they intended to cover Bibles with the tanned skins of the children that they flayed? and how does he know but that they meant to send these Bibles to the heathen? Does he not know that a heathen, especially a cannibal, would greatly prize a Bible covered with the skin of a Christian baby? These, the people think, are reasonable questions, and they hope that he will be pleased to answer them. JOHN R. KELSO.

Freethought in England.

The Annual Conference of the National Secular Society of England was held May 13th. It was very largely attended. The president, Mr. Bradlaugh, read the annual report, which showed that five trials for blasphemy hav occurred in England during the past year. In three of the cases—of Messrs. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp—imprisonment followed. In the other two—of Mr. Bradlaugh and a man in Tunbridge Wells—a conviction was not secured by the Christians. The report recites that an association for the repeal of the blasphemy laws has been inaugurated independently of this secular association, which is supported chiefly by Unitarian clergymen. Special efforts of a like nature hav also been made by a church of England organization, the Guild of St. Matthew. Several clergymen of the church of England hav petitioned for the abolition of all laws against blasphemy. The Positivist Society has also issued a protest against the recent enforcement of these laws by the imprisonment of Messrs. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp, and has petitioned for their immediate repeal. Special and grateful mention is also made of the exertions of Mr. James Sully, who has obtained to a memorial the names of Professor Huxley, Professor Tyndall, Herbert Spencer, Leslie Stephens, and other well-known men. The expenses of the trials hav all been paid by the Freethinkers and the families of the imprisoned men taken care of. Besides doing this, the society has nearly two hundred pounds on hand. The general society has a balance in the general fund of eighty pounds; in the benevolent fund of over one hundred and twenty-four pounds; in the special lecturing fund of some fifty pounds. Seventeen new branches hav been formed, and 1883 new members hav joined, the number curiously coinciding with the year.

One branch has been formed in Cork, Ireland. Only two branches hav gone out of existence the past year, the rest are activ and gaining ground. Mr. Bradlaugh was re-elected president, and a long list of vice-presidents appointed, among them Mrs. Besant and the Misses Bradlaugh, one of whom has been refused admission to the University College botany class, because "some prejudice existed against them," which is one of the smallest cases of Christian spite recorded. In making the closing speech of the meeting Mr. Bradlaugh said, among other true and eloquent things:

"Our worst danger is not from indictment for blasphemy, but from Rome; Rome which is mingling now in our political strife; Rome which dared to send message to Northampton to bid free Englishmen vote as the Vatican dictated; Rome, as to which Sir Massey Lopez in the House said he rejoiced in its aid. Rome is too bold; we will not hav it. Rome has cursed Italy; it shall not curse us again. Rome shall hav free church for its worshipers, free bench for its bishops, free right for its speech; but Rome shall not touch our liberty, Rome shall not master our political life, Rome shall not put back our Freedom's clock to the time of the Middle Ages; we will break first the hands that touch it. We see an ominous union of Newdegate and Manning; the old ultra-Protestant has forgotten the words, bitter and coarse, with which he assailed the scarlet lady of Babylon, words too coarse for repetition in our meeting here. Yet we see him walking into the lobby arm-in-arm with the protege of Cardinal Manning, and we must admire the forgetfulness of each. But most of all must we admire the forgetfulness of the Protestant; for Cardinal Manning only uses the ultra-Protestant as his tool against a foe more dangerous to Rome. The fight between us and Rome must come one day. It may be far off; it may be to-morrow—the fight between Rome and Rationalism, between the fullest assertion of the right of private judgment and the most complete submission to authority. I hav now only to dismiss you and to look into the coming year. Shall we hav more blasphemy prosecutions? I think not. At any rate as against myself, unless Sir Hardinge Giffard learns some fresh trick of law, I may hope to giv reasonable account thereof. But am I right to say that I think there will be no more? Baffled against one, may they not try to touch another whom they deem less skilful of defense. Shall more men wear prison dress? Shall more men liv on prison food? I cannot tell you how pained I felt when, on visiting Holloway jail, I heard a letter and a number given to summon one, and then a letter and a number given to summon another, and when two men came in, in dirty brown prison garb, bearing letter and number, and I recognized them as those I knew. They hav offended against good taste? But do you send men to jail for offending against good taste? Do you dress men in prisoner's garb for offending against good taste? Do you shut men up in small cells for 23 hours out of the 24 for offending against good taste? Do you make men pick oakum for offending against good taste? At any rate men are not so treated who offend grossly. To-day on the walls of your city I see huge bills headed "Blood and Fire," and if religion be a reality, what could be more offensiv than those bills? And if good taste is to be the rule, what of those religionists who libel our dead, who slander our living, who shut our men out of employment, who close colleges against our women, who mock us with our ignorance while they shut us out from knowledge? I hav said many a bitter word and many a harsh thing; perhaps some had been better not said. Yet were I to liv my life again, with the knowledge of how cruel, how merciless the church has been, how it has made speech impossible, how it has poisoned our lives, I might wonder that all my language had not been bitter instead of only some.

"It is better not to offend, if offense may be fairly avoided, and it is better because we hurt the good men, not the bad. Good men, such as Canon Shuttleworth and my friend Stewart Headlam; among Dissenters such as Charles Williams; among the United Presbyterians such as Mr. Marjoribanks; in the church of England such as the Vicar of Coalville; we regret to giv these men pain, and if we needed anything to make our tongues gentle and to soften our memory of yesterday's wrong, we might find it in one of England's greatest judges, Christian to the utmost, creed bound to the fullest, wrestling with his creed that he might do justice, and wringing himself with pain that he might not injure us I ask every one of our speakers, every one of our writers, while they are striking at the church which has cursed the land, at least to remember that there was one strong in creed, strong in prejudice, separated from us by an abyss of judgment and of feeling, who yet stretched his hand across the gulf, and strove to be gentle as well as just. I cannot part with you without reminding you how Freethought is spreading throughout the world, through India, through New Zealand, through Australia, through the United States, through Holland, through Germany, through Italy, where no Atheist is precluded by his non-belief from the enjoyment of civil rights; through France, where the vast gathering round the grave of the man she loved, where the sympathy, the hope, the love, the patriotism shown, were all without shadow of religion. But though the cause is winning the struggle is not over yet. We struggle against the fetter customs of yesterday, against the reputations made when men libeled and racked and burnt the heretic. Time is on our side. Yes, for our cause, but time marches with iron scythe and cuts down the living soldiers, and their blood waters the fields over which they march. Time is always on the side of Truth; but in time they hav racked our. warriors; in time they hav burnt our martyrs; in time men hav lain in dungeon, and the grave had given the fulness of time to the man yearning for freedom. Friends, I finish gratefully, hopefully; gratefully for all you hav done; hopefully for the coming year. I greet you as fellow-soldiers in the army that fights for liberty. All truth, all rights are not ours, but we hav the right to search for truth in trust for those who come afterward, and we will do our best to make the search rich for those for whom we gather."

The cheering was so full and prolonged that it seemed as though it would never end. And then the Conference of 1883 was at an end, and the faces of all set forward to the new year.

The National Reform Association.

From the Banner of Light.

The pharisaic Society with the above name has begun to issue its circulars again, with intent to sow the seeds of its so-called principles. We use the qualifying term "so-called," because nothing can claim rank among principles while it refuses to submit to that rigid and constant examination and criticism by which alone true principles are tested and finally gain a footing in the human mind. The circular in question states that during the present year the society has greatly enlarged its operations. Four district secretaries are devoting their whole time to the work, holding conventions, addressing churches, and public meeting, circulating petitions, and extending the membership of the organization. Within six months, it states, fourteen conventions and more than two hundred public meetings hav been held in behalf of the cause. The members of the association enrolled during the current year, and contributing to its funds, we are told, are more than two thousand; and its list of officers includes many prominent and influential men.

This is what the association intends to obtain, according to the program contained in its circular: "Among the features of the government which this association aims to conserve are our Sabbath laws, the use of the Bible in public schools, prayer in the national and state legislatures, and the Christian law of marriage in opposition to the lax divorce legislation now so common." It likewise lays it down that "some suitable change in the Constitution is deemed by this society to be indispensably necessary, since that instrument in its present form is extensivly regarded as an expression of the secular theory of government, and is constantly employed as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government." Thus it will be seen that the avowal is a distinct and unmistakable one, and that it is to be met in the same spirit and manner. We here see a return to the original purpose; the enemy of free government is again in the field; in professing to Christianize the government they propose to convert it into an engin of ecclesiastical bigotry; and in the name of religion they aim simply to rule.

What is the admission or rejection of the Bible as an otherwise meaningless reading-book in our public schools, in comparison with the engrafting on our professedly free form of government of a system of so-called principles to which it is wholly foreign, and to which it must inevitably in due time succumb? Let such as would be Christians be Christians; but never let them use the machinery and frame-work of our free government to compel others to become such. That is wholly out of the question. This government was established to secure to all persons living under it, and themselvs administering it, the largest possible freedom consistent with the freedom of others. Now an association is formed for the avowed purpose of robbing the great majority of their inherent and inalienable right to both civil and religious freedom, and of concentrating the control in their own hands. Their pretext is the pharisaical one that the people are going astray without governmental guidance and control in religious matters, and need to be placed under the restraint of self-elected saints.

It is an old plea, with all the whimpering of conscious goodness and piety going with it. We need not enter upon a discussion of the propriety or impropriety of reading the Bible in the public schools; it cannot be reasonably disputed that if it is done only by legal compulsion, it is done not only to no visible benefit, but to great positiv harm. A more ingenious way of forcing the Bible into public contempt could hardly be invented by its advocates and partisans. To argue the matter no further than this, human nature is so constituted, and we believe, of course, purposely constituted, that it rejects with demonstrations of violence all attempts to rule or regulate it at those moving points called motivs, which it is agreed on every theory of freedom shall be left wholly free. But the people who appreciate the freedom they now enjoy should be awake and alert to these insidiously persistent efforts to take from them the guardianship and possession of their own liberty. If they admit the enemy across the threshold it will cost a severe struggle to drive him out again.

This "God-in-the-Constitution" society means, if it can, to "conserve our Sabbath laws." Do the people really understand what that phrase means? At the very time when the leading and more intelligent clergymen of our greatest city, New York, are publicly pronouncing for the relaxation of "our Sabbath laws" to the extent of abolishing them altogether, this self-righteous, rule-the-roost, we-are-the-saints association thrusts itself to the front to assert that there must be "some suitable change in the Constitution," pronouncing it "indispensably necessary." It declares that, as it now stands, that instrument—call it a compact or anything else—is regarded as nothing more than "an expression of the secular theory of government," and that it "is constantly employed as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government." That is an open admission, in other words, that the Constitution was only secular in its origin; while it is likewise a no less open declaration of a purpose to "change" it so as to make it Christian.

Could the case be made up into statement more distinctly than the avowed enemies of the present Constitution hav done it themselvs? They declare for a radical "change" in our existing form of government, which guarantees all who liv under it perfect religious freedom. They would change it so that it would minister to a theory of their own, one which they think would be a far better one than that on which the Constitution was erected. They therefore openly take a position that is hostil to that taken by the wise statesmen who framed and launched the present Constitution. They should, then, be as willing to submit their theory to the criticism of reason and common sense as the framers of the Constitution were to submit their theory. But do they do it? Furthest from it. And the reason why they scout open discussion for their modern plan is that it is based on nothing but dogma, and dogma of the most rancorous character. Their spirit is that of the Middle Ages. They will permit no questioning. They want nothing but obedience. They none the less compose a mere party because they ostentatiously profess themselvs Christians.

Rochester Notes.

It is very gratifying to a large number of Freethinkers of all shades of thought in Rochester and the surrounding country that the next meeting of the New York Freethinkers' Association is to be held in the Corinthian Academy of Music in that city. It is a fitting place for the flower, as well as flour, city, and the famous Genessee valley has given birth and nurtured to vigorous manhood numerous reforms, tending to benefit and free the human race from priestcraft and religious shackles of all kinds.

We owe our thanks as a body to a few Liberals there who hav been influential in raising money sufficient to secure that pleasant, central, and commodious place for the five days' session of our convention, commencing Aug. 29th, thereby relieving the association and Mr. Green, our energetic secretary, from all expense and care in that direction.

Measures are also in progress to raise money enough to procure first-class music for the meeting, which we hope to make the largest, most instructiv, and enjoyable of any previous one. Music as well as good speakers is a very important item in any such gathering, and no pains should be spared to hav it progressiv, artistic, melodious, and adapted to the needs of people who do their own thinking. We had good music at Watkins last autumn, but we want more of it, both vocal and instrumental. Plenty of cheering music, but no prayers. No worship of any monster, seen or unseen. No gods to bless nor devils to curse. No heaven to gain, nor hell to shun, but truth, science, and justice should take their place. The churches must giv way to halls of science, literature, and art, and the tremendous efforts that are now being made by their supporters are sure proofs that they fear the result of the Liberal thoughts that are expressed by their opponents, and that in various forms find their way into nearly all the secular papers and magazines, though they may tacitly sail under the Christian flag. We should unite all our strength against the enemies of human rights and freedom. We cannot with any safety compromise in the smallest particular with religion or priestcraft. Let every Freethinker (and that name is good enough and broad enough to include Spiritualists and Materialists) be fearless and allow no lethargic sleep to come over them, but buckle on their armor of intelligence and study the natural laws with earnestness, and they will with greater ease be able to repel the bigoted and unrelenting assaults of the invading foe. Every honest, fearless, clear thinker is a helper to those that are struggling up the ladder of truth. In John Stuart Mill's autobiography, on page 239, appears the following passage, which illustrates the intellectual conflict now going on in this country:

"When the philosophic minds of the world can no longer believe its religion, or can only believe it with modifications amounting to an essential change of its character, a transitional period commences, of weak convictions, paralyzed intellects, and growing laxity of principle, which cannot terminate until a renovation has been effected in the basis of their belief, leading to the evolution of some faith, whether religious or merely human, which they can really believe; and when things are in this state, all thinking or writing which does not tend to promote such renovation is of very little value beyond the moment."

Such thoughts cannot be too highly prized, and all persons who aid in the circulation of books and papers embodying such sentiments are public benefactors.

Our last meeting was an excellent one, but if the Freethinkers will commence now to make arrangements to attend the next convention, and go in full force, with a firm resolve to make this one greatly superior, and all that the most sanguin anticipate, their efforts will be crowned with success, and the burly form of Christianity will receive a severer blow than ever before.

The attention of the people in all parts of the country is aroused more than ever before to the "divine" absurdities of the "meek and lowly ones" who take ignoble pride in shirking to pay taxes on $600,000,000 of property. There is no adequate reason why all this church property should not be taxed. Every principle of common sense and common justice demands it.

One word more to those who stand on the border between Freethought and Christianity. I am aware that the moral courage necessary to stand up for the right in an unpopular cause is a quality not over plenty. It is not pleasant to be ridiculed and misunderstood, but the bravest, tenderest, and noblest souls that ever graced the earth, like Galileo, Bruno, Fanny Wright, Mary Wolstonecraft, Paine, and hundreds of others whose names illuminate the pages of history hav had, not only to taste the bitter cup of ridicule to their sensitiv natures, but hav had to endure long agonies in loathsome dungeons. In these days it is not so hard, thanks to their noble example and works. Come to our convention and think for yourself. You will find intelligent, refined, and cultivated men and women there whom you will be proud to call your friends, notwithstanding the silly and slanderous epithets so constantly reiterated to the contrary by the churches. We as a nation hav been released from kingcraft, but priestcraft still holds us in bonds, and the people will never be come entirely free, or hav universal mental liberty, until they are entirely emancipated from priests as well as kings. JAY CHAAPEL.

Brighton, N. Y., May 10, 283.

League State Conventions.

From an article in Man.

Let us hav the conventions. They bring our Liberal speakers before the people, and make them personally acquainted. They furnish avenues to sell Liberal books, circulate tracts, take subscriptions to the Liberal papers. They are, in fact, Liberal fairs, social and intellectual bazars, Freethought market days, where the best Liberal works and wares are kept on sale. Liberalism has arrived at that stage in this country when it should avail itself of every avenue of communication for the circulation of Freethought. Yield the monopoly of stump, pulpit, or rostrum to nobody. When the theologians sap and mine, we should burrow lower, strike a profounder lead, sink deeper shafts. We should do everything —neglect nothing. Our "Lord's anointed" are losing faith in the ointment. It doesn't heal any more. They are clamoring for a "new theology." Their own journals are full of it. They are now on a leisurely, orderly retreat from the old untenable dogmas. Let us organize a line of aggressiv attacks and hurry them up.

Now for the practical details. In New York, Illinois, Kansas, and Iowa, where there are state Leagues, it will not be difficult to organize state conventions. We leave those farther west to Mr. Walker and Mr. Follet. In Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, and Michigan there are no state organizations, and nobody feels authorized to start the movement. What is everybody's business is nobody's, and nothing will be done. It seems proper, then, for the National League to initiate proceedings. To that end the secretary will take a trip through these states, meeting Liberals, conferring as to the best convening places, make appointments, and arrange for expenses. He will be at Philadelphia June 16th and 17th; Harrisburg, 18th; Altoona, 19th, and Pittsburgh, 20th and 21st. In Ohio he will reach Salem on the 22d, Alliance on the 24th, Cleveland the 25th, and Toledo the 26th. In Michigan he will be at Detroit on the 27th, Jackson the 28th, Dowagiac the 29th. Here he will take a good rest with our first-class Liberal friends, Amos and Abbie Knapp, and go on to Kalamazoo July 2d, and to Burr Oak the 3d. On his return he may visit Indianapolis and other places in Indiana.

He will arrive at these places as nearly as possible in the morning on the days named, stopping at one of the well-known hotels, so as to be easily found, and he hopes the Liberals in these places and from the region around will take some pains to call upon him for the purpose of advice, suggestion, consolation, and help in the proposed convention work. He will be glad to meet them. T. C. LELAND.

Remember the Widow.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKERS: You hav doubtless all read of the death of our aged friend and brother, Mr. Daniel Tuttle, of Poplar, Crawford county, Ohio. The old man died full of well-won honors, earned by a lifetime warfare against priestcraft, superstitions, monopoly, and all the giant evils that afflict humanity.

He gave us all, and only left behind a memory of good works well done and his dear old wife, who had been his faithful companion and helpmate all through the years of his youthful manhood, his full maturity, and his slow decline down the hill into the last silent resting-place. This widowed and lonely old woman must now be our care and our legacy from him. Kindly and generously you hav aided me in contributing funds for the support of the two for some years past. As soon as I heard of Mr. Tuttle's death I forwarded to his wife the following list of donations: Lottie Griffin, Kiowa, Kansas, $1.00; Bangor Liberals, 50 cents; Samos Parsons, San Jose, Cal., $1.00; Maggie M. Davidson, Maynard, Iowa, 25 cents; Alexander Risk, Winthrop, Iowa, 50 cents; John L. Dean, Tullurich, Col., $1.25; V. J. Borrette, P. M., White Rock, Nevada, 50 cents. Total, $5.00.

Dr. E. Moyer, of Springfield, Ohio, writes me thus wise:

"No doubt you hav seen the announcement of the death of our old brother, Bishop Tuttle. I hav just sent the old sister one dollar, and hope the Liberals will contribute to her support as long as she livs. I, for one, am going to remit about 25 or 50 cents per month while she livs if I should liv longer than she does, and I do wish you would make mention of this in some contributions to the Liberal papers."

Other friends hav urged me to continue the work of obtaining help for Mrs. Tuttle, and hence I ask Liberal papers to aid me by publishing in their respectiv journals this letter, and oblige,

Yours for liberal Liberals,

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., May 26, 283.

Notes.

"How shall we treat skeptics?" asks a religious contemporary. Speaking for ourselvs, we would say that we are opposed from principle to the custom of treating. To keep up the fraternal feeling, however, we will consent to a round of lemonade and mild cigars.

ALL religious instruction or even allusion to religion in the schools of France is so strictly forbidden by the new laws on the subject that the name of the deity is carefully expunged from the new text-books. It is high time this sort of reform was inaugurated in the schools of this country. We hav too much superstitious twaddle in our text-books.

MR. BEECHER preached an unusually radical sermon last Sunday. He said that science pointed out the will of God, and that the word of God was revealed to man by nature before Moses ever saw Sinai. Commenting on this sermon the New York World says: "Mr. Beecher, who has done so much to liberalize religion, preached a sermon yesterday which will please the followers of Thomas Paine and John Stuart Mill, so beautifully heterodox it is. Fortunately Mr. Beecher is beyond the range of the people who hunt for heretics."

HARVARD COLLEGE refuses to confer the degree of LL.D. on Governor Butler of Massachusetts. This is the first governor of that commonwealth whom the college has declined to thus distinguish. It was generally understood that Butler would not hav accepted the degree in case the authorities had concluded to tender it. There would hav been little honor in sharing the mark of LL.D. with R. B. Hayes, the backboneless substitute for a president which this country endured four years ago. It is a question, too, whether Harvard College would not, in thus decorating Governor Butler, be honoring herself more than the recipient.

REV. H. OVERY, Vicar of St. Veep, Lostwithiel, Liskeard, speaking at a meeting, alluded to the Affirmation bill. He said that when a man affirmed, if he was a true and honest man, his simple yea or nay was every whit of as much value in the sight of God and man as the taking of an oath and calling God specially to witness; and if a man were a bad man, the mere fact of his taking the oath would only prove that he was a worse man. It is a question getting to be popularly discussed, whether, after all, it is not possible for a man to tell the truth without resting his hand on a book full of absurd statements and stories of impossible occurrences. If witnesses in courts and elsewhere were not more truthful than the book they are sworn upon, we should hav no testimony worthy of credence.

Chambers's Journal says: "Quite recently a literary man of some celebrity, in a letter describing the early fall of snow in Switzerland, did not say the storm abated, but 'the flakes dwindled to flocculi!' and instead of vulgarly putting it that they melted a potful of snow to obtain water, he said that firewood was 'expended in rendering its own heat latent in the indispensable fluid.' Equally as good was that which relates to a certain eminent professor, who observed that very wonderful things were occasionally discovered nowadays. He had found out lately that 'Nystagmus, or oscillation of the eyeballs, is an epileptiform affection of the cerebellular oculomotorial centers,' and he added, 'Don't forget in future what sort a thing a "nystagmus" is.'" A writer in THE TRUTH SEEKER this week defines artismal truth as "truth of artistic adaptation for the fitness of definitiv results." We trust none of our readers will forget what artismal truth is.

ON his western tour Joe Cook, minister, stopped at Indianapolis, Ind., and lectured on the 31st ult. This is the opinion of the Indianapolis Daily Journal of him:

"Rev. Joseph Cook lectures to-night upon the 'Seven Wonders of the World.' The eighth wonder is how such a person has been able to keep himself before an intelligent public so long as a great man. He has on hand a stock of ponderous platitudes, clothed in words of learned length and thunderous sound, which he imagins are philosophy, and has really made a few other people think the same. His lectures on Spiritualism in the last Boston Monday course showed how shallow his pretensions were and how great was his credulity, while his recent 'prelude' in Chicago, in which he uttered by wholesale lies and slanders upon the newspaper press of the country, evidences a reckless disregard for common honesty which deserves to be indignantly rebuked."

IT is not a very pretty story which we print on another page—that of the royal family of Russia. Immorality, crime, and piety hav been the distinguishing features of that line of despots, and the czar Alexander III. will probably maintain the family reputation. The coronation of this individual last week was more a religious ceremonial than anything else. The placing of the crowns upon the heads of the czar and his nominal wife by an archbishop was preceded by reading of the Bible, and was followed with prayer and Te Deums. In reply to the question, "Are you a true believer?" the czar read the Lord's Prayer and the Athanasian Creed. Church and state in Russia are one and the same institution The church upholds the czar with all his crime and debauchery, and has done the same for centuries. In return the czar supports the church and its superstition. They are a precious pair, and it will be a happy day for Russia when she sees the last of both of them.

A MELANCHOLY exemplification of the unhappy results which too often follows close application to the reading of the Bible comes to us from Jefferson, Ashtabula county, Ohio. The local papers publish the account of an insane mother, the wife of Mr. R. McMillan, who threw her two children, a girl aged five years and a boy of two, into a well, between which acts she prayed long and fervently, and then attempted to destroy her own life by taking poison. Mr. M. F. Dean, of Lindenville writes us as follows: "Mrs. McMillan, joined the M. E. church about two years ago on probation, but was never admitted to full membership. She was a great reader of the Bible, particularly during the periods of melancholy to which she was subject, and for the last two months had been an almost constant Bible reader. She was taken before our probate judge for an examination and was pronounced insane, and committed to the county infirmary. Dr. Chapel testified at the examination that she was suffering from religious insanity."

MR. BRADLAUGH'S friends obtained 170,839 signatures to the petitions in favor of the Affirmation bill, while the Christians got 702,296 against it. Last session the balance was the right way, 275,000 asking for Mr. Bradlaugh's admission to Parliament to 66,000 bigots who prayed for his exclusion. The excuses of the Roman Catholics who voted against this Affirmation bill were models of lying. One of them said he voted against Mr. Bradlaugh because the latter had written the "Comic History of Christ," upon which Mr. Foote is imprisoned, although it had been publicly proved that Mr. Bradlaugh never wrote a line of the Freethinker. Another Irishman excused his vote against him by claiming he was in favor of coercion in Ireland, although this same member was in Parliament when three other members publicly thanked Mr. Bradlaugh for what he had done for Ireland. All these Roman Catholic members of the House of Commons, says Mr. Bradlaugh, must know that they are recklessly untruthful, but they are sure of absolution from their priests however much they may deceive the public.

THE Rev. Joe Cook lectured a while ago to such of the inhabitants of Tabor, Iowa, as he could induce to listen to him. To show the people of that town what sort of man they had paid their money to hear, the Non-Conformist, of Tabor, devotes about one-half the space in its issue of May 17th, following the lecture, to an exposure of the great falsifier's true character. Mr. James Vincent, the senior editor of the Non-Conformist, takes the matter in hand personally, and hauls Cook and his record before the public in manner calculated to make that individual and his admirers, if he has any, appear in a truly unfavorable light. Mr. Vincent did not lack material. With a file of THE TRUTH SEEKER at hand, and with the facts about Cook which hav been published by the daily press, he makes out a case against Cook and Cook's friend, Anthony Comstock, which shows those two characters to be about as contemptible a brace of rascals as ever got into public notice. Cook's deliberate misstatements concerning Mr. Bennett and the Theosophical Society in India are again exposed, and Comstock's career of crime is dealt with. The Non-Conformist has performed an important service to the people of Iowa. There should be a paper like it in every town which Cook infests on his lecturing tour, to explode his falsehoods as fast as uttered. He has religiously consecrated his life to preaching the gospel of defamation and the word of untruth. He is a blow-hard, a wind-bag, a gas-tank, with just brains enough to make himself infamous. He has gained notoriety by being disreputable, and has damned himself to everlasting fame by becoming the champion liar of the century. The Non-Conformist has the thanks of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and, we feel confident, of all its readers.

Why John Milton Barnes Rejects Christianity.

As I am already near that advanced landmark in human life, seventy-five years, though still enjoying comparativly good health, with occasional indications of an apoplectic nature plainly suggesting that my existence here may suddenly close at no far distant period; and having often been questioned as to my future, it seems to me proper that I leave behind me for the satisfaction of my Liberal friends some little explanation of why I differ so widely, not only from my parental instruction, but from so large a majority of those with whom I am surrounded and with whom I hav mostly associated from childhood.

While I do not, with my limited opportunities, expect to add as a Liberalist to that pyramid of logic and common sense that now rears its lofty summit before us, built and sustained by the best intellect of our day, still I find myself constrained to adopt the old church practice of relating my "experience" as evidence, not only of a sound conversion, but also the genuinness of my faith. You will bear in mind that I hav already seen and distinctly remember seven generations of our family in an unbroken chain, from great-grandparents to great-grandchildren.

My ancestors, down to myself, were either activ or passiv advocates of the Bible faith, if they could agree and understand what it was. My grandfather, who resided with us in my father's family and assisted in our farm work until I was fifteen years old, was from the state of Connecticut, educated a close communion Baptist, and thoroughly imbued with the old Calvinistic creed, making the "holy Sabbath day" a specialty. He was not only a prominent deacon in that church, but officiated occasionally in our somewhat secluded community in sermonizing. But his severity in punishing for Sabbath breaking knew no bounds. A walk in the orchard or fields on that dreaded day was sufficient and the flogging followed.

Good old man! I hav now no charges against him; it was his creed. He had read in the Proverbs, xxiii, 13 and 14: "Withhold not correction from the child, for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die, Thou shalt beat him with the rod and shall deliver his soul from hell." We cannot expect any one to be better than their idea of the God they worship.

But my earliest religious instruction was given by an affectionate, pious, Methodist mother, who was early and thoroughly converted to the Wesleyan creed, with a devil or one of his imps skulking behind every stump, tree, or hiding-place, to intercept the thoughtless and inexperienced, and hurry them down that thoroughfare, so vividly described by that matchless brimstone poet, Watts:

"Broad is the road that leads to death,
And thousands walk together there,
But wisdom shows a narrow path,
With here and there a traveler."

But what gave me most anxiety and dread at that tender age (from six to eight years) was that the awful judgment day, when these stern realities were to be faced, was in all probability near at hand; when I must exchange this beautiful world that I had just commenced to love so well for the one where the chances of happiness were so decidedly against me. Or, to quote my mother's favorit poet:

"And must I be to judgment brought,
And answer in that day
For every vain and idle thought
Or wicked word I say?"

But inasmuch as she could not clearly define to my juvenil mind what "those vain and idle thoughts" were, I was at times about left in darkness and despair.

I shall ever remember how, one mild October or November day, while meditating on this unpleasant theme—when all nature seemed to be bidding adieu to summer, with its flowers, fruits, and out-of-door enjoyments, for the stern reign of old winter, with its storms and snowdrifts—I wandered alone from our mountain home to the open fields, where I had often stood and gazed upon the wild and beautiful landscape before me, stretching from the Catskill Mountains on the west, to the Berkshire hills on the east, including the valley of the Hudson, as far north as Troy. The prospect at this time was somewhat obscured by the smoky, hazy atmosphere of "Indian summer," the smoke suggesting that this awful judgment day might be near if not already at hand. In this frame of mind, with these evidences before me, all at once the smoky atmosphere seemed to thicken in the distance; my juvenil nerves yielded to the pressure, and I fell to the earth, not, like Saul, blind, but overcome with the exciting thought that the earth or "elements were then melting with fervent heat," and in a brief moment I should be ushered into the presence of this awful, cruel God. In a few seconds, however, the delusion passed, and the smoky atmosphere and extensiv landscape were still before me, with the busy thousands all unconscious of the Wesleyan orthodox ordeal I had just passed. On my returning homeward new thoughts burst involuntarily upon me, forcing the conclusion, "This cannot all be true." And I hav long since come to the conclusion that my good old mother, with the best of motivs, had over-dosed me, with the result that since that day I hav decidedly discarded the old faith of "original sin, a brimstone hell, a personal devil, and a vicarious attonement," and substituted a full and free exercise of reason and common sense. But my dear old mother lived and died with this bitter sentiment uppermost in her mind, completely undermining all her earthly enjoyments; and with a cherrless, melancholy countenance she seemed to be ever meditating upon the picture described by Dr. Watts:

"My thoughts on awful subjects roll
Damnation and the dead."

I hav often been questioned why I discarded the popular faith—"if it is not true it can do no harm." My answer is: It has done harm; it has sapped the fountain of all my mother's happiness, and left her while here cheerless and desponding; and who that is possessed of the commonest feelings of humanity can indorse that hideous theory that consigns so large a portion of the human family to endless punishment and still be cheerful and content? "But," says one, "I know there is a reality in my conversion, for I hav the witness within." My answer is: Your witnesses do not agree, and these internal impressions, like my own on the approaching judgment day, just related, may be altogether imaginary and deceptiv, and especially so when you claim to act under supernatural control of "inspiration," for it seems this supernatural agency works in all directions; for instance, the Methodist, when in full communion and fellowship with this divine agency, becomes excited, noisy, and at times even boisterous beyond control (formerly more so than at present), often apologizing by saying, "If these should be still the very stones would cry out;" while the Quaker receives his divine mission, or "the moving of the spirit," quietly and often in silence. But even he, it seems, is at least sometimes mistaken, an instance of which occurred not far from this place, at the Old Friends meeting-house. A farmer was in the habit of delivering the heavenly message in the absence of more noted speakers to a quiet and attentiv audience, who hav assembled here twice a week for nearly or quite a century without skip or interruption. Our speaker, at the time alluded to, arose from the speaker's elevated seat, apparently filled with the spirit of his divine mission, and commenced by quoting from Revelation, i, 9: "I John who also am your brother and companion in tribulation," etc., "was in the isle that is called Patmos." After a moment's pause in profound silence, he continued: "My friends, thee will remember that this Patmos ile was an article somewhat extensivly used in that early day; they used it not only for lubricating purposes, but those like the great revelator, John, who was duly commissioned from on high, used it in anointing rulers and divine teachers, as in the case of Samuel of old, so beautifully expressed in the catechism that we read in our youth, and that left so many profound impressions:

"Samuel anoints Whom God appoints."

This explanation seemed to satisfy a majority of his hearers, as he continued long after this date to address the same audience, unfolding the mysteries of godliness to their satisfaction.

As before stated, my relations and surroundings hav been orthodox (with an occasional exception), most of whom hav appeared quite anxious for my conversion. My good old mother once asked me, "Milton, do you believe the Bible is the word of God?" My reply was, "Mother, if I do not, will it avail me anything to say, I do?" "Oh, I think not," said she, "for I hav told you to always tell the truth; but then, you must remember, there is no other way under heaven whereby we can be saved except by faith on the Lord Jesus Christ." "Why, mother, did you not know that there hav been millions upon millions of the human family born into this world that hav lived comparativly good lives and died without ever hearing of him or his name." "Well, I think they will be saved through their ignorance." "It seems, then, there are two ways to be saved; and if there are two or more, where is your text of 'no other way or name under heaven' gone to?" "Why, John Milton" (named after the author of "Paradise Lost"), "are you a confirmed Infidel?"

I hav a widowed daughter-in-law who of late has been very activ in church, Bible-class, and Sabbath-school, and who had been instructed, or felt called upon to instruct me in the mysteries of her faith. She commenced with, "Father, do you believe there is a God?" "I believe there is an infinit power above, below, and all around us that is not only incomprehensible but past finding out." "Why are you opposed to saying God?" "Because there hav been, and still are, so many different ideas of a God that I consider the term indefinit, if not meaningless. What is your idea of God?" "I believe in a living God as described in the holy Bible." "If he is a living, material being, please giv me some more definit description of him so I can comprehend your idea as to his avoirdupois, hight, and general appearance." "Oh, I believe he is a spirit, too." "I think your spirit description is fully as indefinit and meaningless as is my 'infinit power.' But lastly, to your Bible description, we read in Genesis xxxii, 24–32, how Jacob wrestled with God, first calling him man; wrestling all night and not prevailing. He then touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh (if you can locate it), and put it out of joint. He (God) refused to giv his name, but nevertheless blessed him, which seemed to unravel the mystery, as Jacob then says, 'Now hav I seen God face to face.'"

Here a neighboring clergyman finished the scriptural mystery by saying, "I once understood this wrestling as literal, when I should hav known that God could throw seventeen Jacobs; but I hav since learned that this wrestling is merely figurativ."

Said I, "If this is so, my dear Christian friend, what about the out-of-joint thigh, the shrunken sinew, and the children of Israel not eating of the shrunken sinew until the day of the writing?" As no further explanation was given, I am still compelled to entertain my first impression, fully believing that if I fail to guess right, there can be no serious eternal consequences to follow.

But if I can possibly be wrong in my conclusions, my orthodox friends must be blameless, for they hav been indefatigable in their efforts to convert me. A sister-in-law called on us not long since to return a visit we had made them, when I had expressed some ideas taken from the old Testament hostil to her feelings, and which had burdened her mind so much that she had apparently prepared herself for a new deal from the New Testament, where she felt herself invulnerable.

She commenced with: "Uncle, I do wish you could hav heard a sermon from our presiding elder that I listened to before I left home. I am sure you would change your mind." "Well, what was it?" "It was on the merits and matchless teachings of Christ, as recorded in the New Testament, who spake as never man spake."

"Well, sister, I am well aware that many of the sayings attributed to him are full of merit, and eminently worthy of observance, among which is his instruction to the young man who came to him and said (Matthew xix, 16): 'Good master, what good thing shall I do that I may hav eternal life?'—a fair question with an appropriate answer: 'Keep the commandments.' 'Which?' 'Thou shalt do no murder, nor commit adultery, nor steal, nor bear false witness, honor thy father and mother, and love thy neighbor as thyself.' Good enough if there was no contradiction."

"Why, mercy on you! what do you mean by contradiction?"

"To answer you frankly, I will refer you to what that infamous criminal Christian Guiteau read on the gallows as he was about to go from labor to reward, or, as he expressed it, to see his Lord (very appropriate, too, in his case). Matthew x, 28-42, including the thirty-fourth verse: 'Think not that I am come to send peace on earth but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father and the daughter against her mother,' etc. 'And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.' And to make the case still more strong and contradictory, please read Luke xiv, 26: 'If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother, wife and children, and brethren and sisters; yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.' Now will you please for once to release yourself from the terror of that old text, 'He that believeth not shall be damned,' and tell me honestly where is this pure, matchless speaking as never man spake, if the evangelists are equally entitled to credit and belief? For you will remember that not one word in the four gospels was written by Christ himself, but was put upon record from memory or hearsay from thirty to sixty years after the sayings and doings had transpired."

"Well, I don't believe that Christ ever said what Luke has written with reference to hate."

"One word more, if you please. If your last admission is correct, what is to become of your inspired, infallible word? Let us refer to D. D. Benson, the popular commentator, who says that 'the word hate in the scriptures means love less,' but inasmuch as we cannot understand how many degrees of love can be described under the head of hate, the terms being at complete opposits, I must acknowledge your superior theory." And thus, after numerous similar interviews, I am still left in the wide, open, beautiful field of Freethought, fully satisfied with my conclusions, wishing only for more frequent interviews with those of my faith.

Where Many Are in Error.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I beg the use of a small space in your columns in answer to John K. Kirt's article, published May 26th, upon "More Material Immortality." While I hav no argument to offer against the doctrin of Materialism he seeks to prove, we do not arrive at a conclusion by the same process of reasoning; and therefore beg to criticise one particular point in his argument. He says, "These properties of mind undoubtedly exist in nature and surround us in an ethereal state."

This I would admit to be true if he would substitute the word brain for mind; since it must be admitted that while brain and mind are closely related, they are not the same. The properties of which the brain is composed, I admit to be material, while the mind is but the effect of a peculiar combination of the different properties of the brain.

Hence, when the natural power of these brain properties is destroyed, mind ceases to exist. At death the other organs that compose our being cease to perform their functions, but are not destroyed; and here, at this very point, is where so many are in error. Call mind brain, in the sense I hav described it, and you can no longer call it mysterious. The solution of this mixed problem is to me easily solved. Brain the cause, mind the effect.

A Bible Gaspipe Exploded.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just seen a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER dated the 31st of March, containing a challenge of L. T. Nichols to Col. Ingersoll "or any representativ Infidel," to debate with him on the Bible. With your permission I hav a few words to say about this man Nichols, who livs within a day's ride of Salem, and who has been cutting quite a splurge here for the past six or seven years.

Last November Nichols came out with a flaming handbill announcing a course of lectures against Infidelity. A friend living in McMinnville wrote me about it, inclosing one of the handbills, saying that Nichols had boasted in his lectures that he had challenged both Col. Ingersoll and Mr. Bennett, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, yet neither had dared to meet him. If that boast was true, as regards either Col. Ingersoll or Mr. Bennett, strange that Nichols was not able to prove it in some way. Yet he was not, and probably that accounts for this challenge, four months later.

The following is his handbill copied verbatim:

LECTURES.
—AT THE—
MOHAWK HALL.
commencing
TUESDAY NIGHT, NOV 21, 1882.

continuing every night through the week.

THE GREAT INFIDEL OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Mr. Bennett, of N. Y. One of the great Infidel Guns, has published a work of over 800. pages. Endeavoring to prove the Bible untrue. He says the Bible contains over 500. GLARING contradictions, absurdities, and impossibilities. Some of the very BEST, and most striking are published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. A leading Infidel Periodical. We will during the Lectures answer every objection that is published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and acknowledged to be their BEST. Therefore come out and see the BIG Ifidel GUN SILENCED and FOR-EVER SPIKED.

Lectures will be given upon Bible SANCTIFICATION and ENTIRE HOLINESS. Therefore COME OUT ye holiness band, with Bible in hand, and let us by IT fall or stand. Other Topics will be discoursed upon; which will be announced at the Lectures.

A cordial invitation is extended to all Bible readers, Truth lovers, and real Truth Seekers.

Questions allowed at the end of each Lecture. Lectures to commence at 7, P. M. SEATS FREE. NO COLLECTIONS.
COME ONE. COME ALL.
And let us friendly reason together.
L T Nichols. Lecturer.

I had previously sent two challenges to Nichols for a debate on the Bible, but although he was busy challenging the third-rate clergy of other sects, he would not meet me. The fact is, he is an Adventist, and Elder Miles Grant, the king-pin of the Adventists, had met me in San Jose, Cal., ten years ago, in a seven-nights' debate, and warned all the small fry like Nichols to avoid me as they would an imp of hell, for if the devil had a high priest on earth, "that man must be Prof. Chaney." The reason Grant was so wrathy against me was that as he claimed three minutes for prayer as an introduction to the debate each evening, I claimed the same, and the last night I prayed very solemnly to the devil. Grant had accused me of being an emissary of the devil, and so I prayed to Old Clovenfoot.

But to return. On learning that Nichols was boasting so loudly that no Infidel dare meet him, I sent him a third challenge through the local paper. The editor would not publish it, but gave the substance in an editorial. Nichols never noticed it in any way, but kept on blowing. The fact is, he is afraid to meet any man of ability in debate on the Bible, and takes fine care to challenge only third-rate clergymen, or such as he is sure will decline, and then makes a blowpipe of himself in boasting about it. He knows that Col. Ingersoll can hav a thousand dollars a night for lecturing, and also that the colonel is tied in Washington by his professional engagements. Hence his challenge.

L. T. Nichols is a man of great moral courage, in his way; but his way is out of the common course. I hav heard him preach. He is tall, rather fine looking, a good linguist, well educated, and quite fluent of speech. But behind these gossamer accomplishments he lacks intellect, judgment, and common sense, as he has shown by this challenge to Ingersoll. People who know him laugh at his egotism and pomposity, for he is quite harmless. Still, he is very courageous, in his way. He will stand up by the hour and battle with an opponent (who is at a safe distance). He is just as bitter against the orthodox as the Infidels, and he does not hesitate to enter the lists against Henry Ward Beecher (so long as the continent of America separates them). Indeed, from the prowess he has manifested at sundry times, I hav not a doubt that this man Nichols would fearlessly meet in public debate on the Bible any sick woman or crippled boy—not over fifteen years old—that you could scare up in New York. Or, if he declined, it would not be through fear—oh, no; I guess not; but because the person was of "bad character," which is the excuse he makes, I hear, for not meeting me, although I hav offered to get the judges of the Supreme Court of Oregon, the governor, the secretary of state, the state treasurer, and the congressional delegation of the state to indorse me as worthy. W. H. CHANEY,

Salem, Oregon, May 15. Prof. of Astronomy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see by your last issue that John R. Kelso, of Modesto, Cal., has accepted the challenge of L. T. Nichols, of McMinnville, Oregon. Now this challenge of Nichols may be simon-pure, but for my own part, I think it is all braggadocio. I really hope he will accept Mr. Kelso's challenge, for in that case, I think, it will bring out many persons to hear the debate that otherwise would never hear a Liberal lecture. We will assure Mr. Kelso that if he comes up here he will hav plenty of backing, for, as Mr. J. K. Sears, of McCoy, says, there are plenty of Liberals in Oregon. We spoke to Dr. York when here about Nichols, and he said he had urgent engagements ahead, and from what he could hear Nichols was not indorsed except by a few Christians. He thought it was hardly worth the ammunition, but said that if Nichols acted as though he was spoiling for a contest of this kind, he would throw up his other engagements and accommodate the gentleman, he hoped, to his satisfaction.

Dr. York's lectures are published in the Yamhill county papers for nearly a week before they came off, and if Mr. Nichols had been as anxious for this contest as he is trying to make people believe he is, why didn't he come or send a friend to make the arrangements, as he was not over ten miles distant? Any way we hope he will accept John R. Kelso's proposal. R. R. LAUGHLIN.

North Yamhill, Oregon, May 17, 1883.

The Reign of Law.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I want to say a few words to Francis M. Buck by way of explanation and inquiry. He starts out in his criticism of my article on the devil by saying that he thinks he fully comprehends that meaning, etc. Now, from what he complains of, it is very clear to my mind that he does not understand what I was driving at. My essential idea was to completely ignore anything like a devil as taught by theology; and secondly, to show that whatever there may be in the manifestation of natural law, although in apparent opposition to man at times, was essentially good, and that there could be no thing analogous to a devil unless it came about by the operations of natural law. Now, this gentleman seems to think there may be a devil or evil that does not come of natural law, and he givs instances as follows: He says, "If a man overeats, or eats improper food, he has abused, transgressed, and violated a law, which was wrong, and he suffers. The law was necessary; it was proper to obey the law; but the abuse was what was wrong." Now, I ask him to observe right here that the wrongdoer was just as much under law by what he did before as after the act; and that is the case in every human action. The man overeats by an excess of appetite, and he may not know that the food was improper; so that in either case the man acted fully under law, and there is no devil in the case.

Again he says, "It is right for a man to be economical, but when a man is prodigal to wasting everything, or miserly to cheating his fellow-man, it is abuse of a simple, economical principle that pervades all matter, which is wrong. When a man uses his reason and inventiv power to plunder and rob, it is an abuse of those faculties, and again is an evil." Here again my friend only givs one side of the argument. He forgets that the man who does this is simply submitting to the inherent passions or feelings of his nature, and finally yields to the better impulses of his reason and judgment by these selfish and unjust feelings. But, mark you, he is just as fully acting in accordance with and by natural law in one case as in the other, In fact, whatever a man does he does by law. Paul said that the different members of his body were continually warring against each other. This is a correct statement and is the whole truth in the matter. There are in nature antagonistic forces, and yet they are essentially the same force. I will illustrate: A man has the power to use his physical force to act at the same time in opposit directions. If he wishes to tear asunder as by tearing a cord, he will pull on each end of the string at the same time and in opposit directions. Thus the same force acts oppositly, and this principle is seen in all nature; but it is also seen in nature that the opposing forces, when acting, are not always equal, and hence this fact accounts for what we know as motion. If all force were equally applied from every direction there would be only absolute inertia. And this principle applies in the intellectual, moral, and physical world alike, and this is the essential thing that I wanted to teach by that semi-humorous sketch of the devil. I make the assertion, then, that it is absolutely impossible for any being or thing to act outside of law, or the controling conditions of nature.

The whole system of nature is not in a state of equilibrium. While this principle is seen to be a possibility in some of its departments, as in a perfect balance, yet the law of action and reaction is proof positiv that motion is the result of an inequality of acting forces; and although a favorit idea with some philosophers is that nature tends toward equilibrium, I am fully convinced that she does nothing of the sort; for if she did there might come a time when all motion would cease.

By this view of things it will be seen that there is no room for a devil of any kind, and only a key to the comprehension of natural forces acting both outside and inside of man's organism. If you comprehend this view, then you hav indeed no reason to do anything but to reflect upon the events of life, to arrive at their true definition; and it will be found that the principal cause of all of man's trouble is the lack of true wisdom. In fact, ignorance is the root of all evil.

I said that the devil of nature was the cause of evolution, and when the clergy call it a "devil doctrin" they are about half right. But the idea that is usually attached to such a being is a pure fiction of the ignoramus who is unable to comprehend the evolutions of nature and the forces by which she acts. Men talk as if nature were acting only outside of man. What a mistake!

That which results in what custom calls good is but the action of natural forces, in mind as well as outside of it, for in fact the action must first determin upon the mind before it is brought to light. And that which custom calls evil must be the result of the natural surroundings acting upon the mind, as all evil results are first determined by the mind or its feelings before it is brought to light or manifested in outward action. If, then, all actions are the results of natural forces (and there can be no others), it follows that the terms good and evil are always applicable and proper, according as they affect us favorably or unfavorably. J. R. PERRY.

Swearing Against the Unbeliever.

From the Non-Conformist.

To giv an idea of what might be expected under a system of church and state, where the law could be invoked to giv its aid to persecutions, we hav only to look at the lengths to which men go now without the law.

However incredible it may appear, it is a fact that the instances we are about to relate are common and constant all over this country, wherever there are churches. Indeed in no other way can the wish to put a God into the Constitution, and to back him up with pains and penalties, be accounted for than by coming to the conclusion that the "change of heart" which is so much insisted on by orthodoxy, is a change from liberality to intolerance, from a condition of life in which trust and friendliness exist, to a state where the subject no longer regards his neighbor as having rights that he is bound to respect, but as having no rights but what are subject to invasion in an way, at any time that is thought fit.

Two men, one a pillar in the church and the other an Infidel, were unable to settle a controversy outside of court. On the witness stand the Christian under oath gave such astounding testimony that it bewildered a brother in the church so much that when he left the stand he called him to one side and said, "How could you swear to such statements?" "I've got the Bible for it," he said, and to prove it, before breakfast the next morning he went with his Bible to show to his doubting brother that he had chapter and verse for authority to swear against an unbeliever in his God.

We asked a lawyer once why it was that invariably when any members of a certain church which graded its piety above par were on a jury panel, they were rejected. He said, "I hear that they feel hard about it, but we can't help that; the fact is, we can't believe them; they hav a very strange way of dealing with truth that looks to us lawyers like dishonesty." Yet these are the persons who are clamoring for a change in the Constitution, so none but themselvs can be allowed to testify in court.

"We Know In Part."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER Sir: Mr. J. H. Griffith, of Pike Grove, Wis., writes under this caption to the Welsh weekly Y Drych, May 10, 1883, published at Utica, N. Y. The article is too long to giv a full translation. I therefore sum up the principle point in it, and beg to ask a remark from you for the benefit of your readers:

"Much is said and written nowadays about the inconsistencies between the Bible and science, but the first thing that ought to be done is to get science consistent with itself. One of the most intricate things in the Bible is its system of numbers—e. g., the numbering of the children of Israel on their departure from Egypt. We are given to understand in 1 Samuel, vi, 19, that the Lord smote 50,070 men of Bethshemesh for peeping into the ark, and yet it appears that Bethshemesh was only a small village. In Judges xii, 6, it is stated that there fell 42,000 of the Ephraimites, while but a brief time previously the whole tribe numbered only 32,000. All this has been due to the carelessness of the translators; and in Dr. Angus's Handbook, etc., page 39, we hav the explanation. Only 1,170 of the men of Bethshemesh were smitten; and of the Ephraimites, only 2,040 fell. Are we to suppose that the Bible alone is burdened with arithmetical difficuties? No, not by any means. Books written in this enlightened age are far more subject to them, and are impossible to harmonize—in which, too, the fault cannot be attributed to the work of translators. Here we hav Hiddie's "Elements of Astronomy," 1868; Newcomb's "Popular Astronomy," 1878. The two authors are at variance in their numbers throughout as far as I could observe. They differ amazingly about the dimensions of the sun and planets and the distance of the planets from the sun. For instance, Hiddie says the sun is 852,900 miles in diameter; Newcomb, 860,000, and J. T. Jones, 880,000. They all differ several miles about the diameter of the earth, and to a great extent about that of Jupiter and Neptune. They differ, in fact, in the case of each of the planets."

The foregoing is the burden of Mr. Griffith's argument. The question is, How far is the comparison allowable, if at all, between the biblical and scientific enumeration? Is there any common ground between them? Y Drych is one of the ablest critical periodicals in America, but it is altogether committed to the support of Protestant Christianity (Baptist).

OLD MEMORY.

The above alleged point is often made by cornered professors of Christianity, but there is nothing to it. The difference between science and theology is as wide as the poles. There can be no comparison of an astronomical treatis and the Bible, for the very palpable reason that one is the best endeavors of man to fathom nature, while the other is the worst endeavor of God to mystify man. The errors of astronomy are the inevitable result of different calculations by different methods. In measuring bodies over ninety millions of miles away some allowance must be made for faulty calculation. Men are fallible. The trouble in measuring exactly lies in the fact that the exact distance of the sun from the earth has not been determined, but its approximate distance has been ascertained to be between ninety-one and ninety-two millions of miles. Figuring on the various distances given, astronomers hav variously estimated its diameter, and the distance of the planets from it and from the earth. The accuracy of the calculations depends upon the accuracy of the instruments used in the measurement of angles.

Science is modest and does not claim more than she can prove.

But with the Bible and theology how different is the case! For the Bible there is no excuse for error. If God made an error, or erred in selecting untrustworthy translators, then he is fallible, and who would worship a fallible deity? If we must substitute Dr. Angus's "Handbook" for the Bible, because that is infallible, and the Bible is not, it is time the world knew it. The world has been taught by thousands of priests, who hav used as convincing arguments the dungeon, stake, and rack, that the Bible is the infallible word of an infallible God, plenarily inspired and amply sustained in all respects. But if there is one verse wrong, if God has allowed some translator to make one error, that vitiates all its claims to infallibility. No one knows but that next door to that one error there may be another, and so through the book. Infallibility cannot be corrected by fallibility. Or, if it is, it ceases to be infallibility.

Dr. Angus's correction is only one of many thousands that need to be made to put the Bible in harmony with facts. The account of the creation needs correction; the story of the flood would be more in accordance with facts with a little tinkering; the tower of Babel story would hav been happier had it had a basis of truth; the story of the children crossing the Red Sea, and the overwhelming of Pharaoh's hosts might be advantageously reconstructed; so could the stories of the plagues, as could those of Jesus's birth, miraculous preservation, and cruel death; in fact, the whole Bible can be corrected and made to read entirely different without diverging further from truth and common sense. There is ample chance to doubt this Christian guide aside from the story of those slain because they peeped into the ark. But if it is not to be taken as it is, if the Christians are satisfied to let us amend it in keeping with common sense and historical accuracy, then the Infidels are acknowledged to be in the right, and the Bible is gone. Let the water trickle through under the foundation in never so small a hole—even one verse—and the flood of criticism will sweep the whole away. In criticisms like Dr. Angus's is yielded all that Infidelity claims. They logically subvert the Bible as the word of God, and prove its incorrectness as a chronicler of fact. Modern Infidelity looks with contempt upon these lame efforts to reduce the Bible to truth. Either the Bible is the word of God, or it is not. If it is, it cannot be wrong. If it is wrong, it cannot be the word of God. All the exegetical work of all the commentators in the world cannot alter this.

Proving Jones a liar don't prove that Mr. Brown performed impossibilities, and when Mr. Jones's reputation is cleared the maliciousness of the attempt and the weakness of the cause is very much more apparent. Abusing the plaintiff's attorney is a trick well calculated to divert the attention of the jury, but it will not always clear a guilty culprit.

The Rev. Dr. Angus does not condescend to say how he arrives at the conclusion that the figures are exaggerated, but simply says it was an error in translation. Perhaps the story of David and Bathsheba was an error of translation too. So might hav been the recital of the practice of the beastly Lot and his daughters, or of Absalom and Tamar. The number of Solomon's concubines was also, perhaps, exaggerated by the erring translator. And surely the number of maidens handed over by Moses to his bestial soldiers must hav been exaggerated. Perhaps the Song of Solomon was in the original no more amorous than one of Dr. Watts's hymns, but that damned translator managed to put considerable "linked sweetness long drawn out" into it by means of a few "errors." Perhaps the diet of Ezekiel would hav been milk and honey had he not had a vicious translator.

The self-contradictions, absurdities, improbabilities, impossibilities, and obscenities of the Bible hav been a huge stumbling-block in the way of all reasoning believers, but we are happy to chronicle their easy removal by this new commentator. Why was not the plan thought of before? It would hav saved the Christians a great deal of trouble and a few thousand heretics. Just say, "It was the translator; damn the translator," and all would hav been smooth sailing and easy of comprehension. Noah's ark was crowded by the translator, increasing the number of animals and reducing the dimensions of the box, but it must hav been an error, for certain it is that that many creatures were never put in a barn of that size. These errors are very convenient loopholes. The great wonder is that the church has not discovered and crawled through them long ago.

WE hav just received from the printer some of Col. Ingersoll's "Interviews on Talmage," bound in cloth, uniform with the editions of the "Gods" and "Ghosts." The price is the same—$1.25. The paper bound ones, it will be remembered, sell for $1, while the heavy board covers, with beveled edges and gilt top sell for $2. It is understood that when the Star Route trial closes, if it ever does, Col. Ingersoll will take a trip to Europe, and when he returns make an extensiv lecturing tour among his friends in this country.

The Discussion About Science.

A good many are expressing their opinion upon the advisability or desirableness of publishing such heavy articles as Mr. Andrews's, Mrs. Macdonald's, and others. On this subject we would say: THE TRUTH SEEKER is a free paper for our friends, free for the scientist, the speculativ philosopher, the Positivist, the Spiritualist, and the Materialist alike. These questions are all of vital interest to humanity, and it is only by discussion, by presenting them pro and con, that the truth can be arrived at. They are incidental questions however, and are subordinate to the high aims of the paper, which are to win for the Infidel the same rights as the Christians enjoy and to hav these as our conceded and equal rights, not as a concession to policy on the part of statesmen. THE TRUTH SEEKER wants, and will never cease to work for, the total separation of church and state. This includes the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes.

It is the mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER to defend personal and mental liberty whenever assailed. It is a reform journal. But while there are a hundred reforms that need to be effected, they each hav their special advocates, and it is THE TRUTH SEEKER's special work to reform all laws relating to religious observances. In this we shall hav the help of the League when it grows strong enough to be a power. The first thing to be done is to teach the people that Christianity is a gigantic fraud, that its heaven and hell are ficticious places invented to help the priests in their efforts to get a living without work; that the church's threats are harmless and its promises vain; that Christianity has no more divinity than hundreds of other religions.

To do this effectually we should hav the activ cooperation of thousands where now there are hundreds. Friends, come to the front and help in this work by circulating papers and documents. Go at it practically by defeating the efforts of such cliques as the "National Reform Association." Distribute tracts to the people who attend their meetings, show them the dangers of uniting church and state. Tell them the history of the church, for two-thirds of the people of this country do not know the bloody career of Catholic and Prostestant Christianity. They hav been taught that religion (which to every-day people is synonymous with Christianity) is something that is always good, with no admixture of error or evil. Show them that the priests and ministers are idle drones, with no knowledge of the future, that their teachings are false and their prayers futil, and in every way possible defeat the machinations of the ecclesiastical bigots who would make our liberties narrower instead of broader. This we conceive to be the duty of all Freethinkers. It is even more important than building up new philosophies or solving the mystery of death. For of what earthly interest is it for a Freethinker to know there is a future place of bliss if this life must be dragged out in a Christian dungeon? It made but little difference to Mr. Bennett in Albany Penitentiary, whether there were angels or not, or whether a man ought to drink a glass of beer, or whether Universology could define science satisfactorily to Mr. Putnam. The stones in his cell were just as cold, and the iron door that shut out light and liberty was just as thick and hard; the outrageous injustice of his sentence was no less apparent. The editor of the London Freethinker, languishing in an English Christian jail, condemned to solitary confinement twenty-three hours out of the twenty-four, would probably mortgage a few moments of speculation on what is science for liberty to breath untrammeled the out-door air of this world.

So, friends, while we discuss the questions which undoubtedly hav a great deal to do with human happiness, let us never forget that the great and paramount question is to win our liberty to enjoy the blessings of existence without the interference of bishop or pope or minister or church.

A LIBERAL League of about twenty-five members has been formed at Erie, Pa., and manned as follows: J. R. Ferguson, Pres.; D. P. Robbins, M. D., Sec.; M. Hartleb, Treas.; C. L. Hawes, A. T. Marsh, and H. V. Claus, Directors. The officers and members are composed of substantial, respectable citizens, and when the new League gets on its working harness it is expected that we shall hear from it. There has been a Spiritual society in Erie for some time, and one or two persons who claim to be Liberals object to inviting the Spiritualists to join hands in the cause, and contrariwise, but the majority of both factions are inclined to work harmoniously for the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

The Monument Fund.

Since our last acknowledgment the following sums hav been contributed toward the monument to D. M. Bennett:

A Senseless Cry.

The Christian press is at present much exercised over the perceptible decline of rigid orthodoxy, and feels constantly called upon to exclaim, How can the people be moral without religion! We hav a great pity for such people, for we fear their moral backbone is not very stiff. Judged by their public utterances, every one of them would steal all he could lay his hands on if the commandment was not in the decalog, and would continuously commit adultery if it had not been expressly forbidden by Christ. Judging from the number of defaulting bank cashiers and clerks who are superintendents and teachers in Sunday-schools, and the number of adulterous ministers who grace—or disgrace—Mr. M. E. Billings's "Crimes of Preachers," these two sins go along in the world just about the same as though Christ had never said, "Thou shalt not steal," while confiscating a jackass for himself, or "Thou shalt not commit adultery," while forgiving the woman taken in the act. Possibly the ministers think he will write further in the sand when they are hauled up for judgment. Or else they disbelieve in the judgment day, and never having conceived of doing right for right's sake, recklessly disregard both enforced and natural morality.

A story comes from England of a Brahman who had completed his education in England, and before returning to India was invited to a reception. Being called on for a speech he alluded to the great missionary efforts being made to Christianize India, and how unlikely they were to succeed. Said he: "Since I hav been in England, I hav studied the effects of your Christian teachings on your people, and I hav been surprised to see how little regard exists for each other's interests; and as to crime, there is more of it, and in newer and more revolting forms than I hav seen it in my own country;" and, he added sarcastically, "I hav sometimes thought whether I could perform any service which would be of so great benefit to England as to organize a missionary society on my return to India, and send our priests to teach a better and purer way of living to the English people."

A commission of Japanese who had been sent to England to see if Christianity was a better religion than already possessed by the Japs, after a prolonged investigation of eighteen months, recently reported that so far from being a restrictiv force on crime, Christianity by its vicarious atonement appeared to foster crime. Consequently they reported that the Japanese better hold on to Buddhism and Shintoism, for there was far less crime and misery in Japan than in England.

These facts correspond with the observations made by Mr. Bennett in his trip around the world, and are undoubtedly true. If the church were really more desirous to increase morality than to uphold a cruel and debasing theology she would send fewer missionaries abroad and restrain her own lecherous preachers at home.

Good and evil are relativ terms, and morality does not depend upon the ipse dixit of any so-called savior. All the Christian moral precepts are the same as the pagans uttered hundreds of years before the manger-cradled Christ wandered through Palestine. Indeed, the Ten Commandments were taken bodily from Buddhism, and it can truthfully be said that the Buddhists pay more attention to them than the Christians. Moses broke most of them before he copied them, and Christ's practices were not always up to his professions. So we would remark to the captious critics of the religious press that as Christianity has not made the world better, but worse, they can dismiss the consideration of the question of how morality can flourish without religion, and turn their attention to preventing and punishing some of the crime occurring in their own churches and among their own clergy.

In Memory.

We journey onward with the march of days,
  We join the millions in their mighty tread,
Yet memory, pausing ere we farther go,
  Dwells for a season with our heroes dead.

A single winter, with its snowy shroud,
  Hath draped the earth since 'neath its sod we placed
A martyred form, to mingle with the dust—
  A single spring its flowery pathway traced.

Not unremembered is that gallant one,
  Who led us in our weary war for right,
Who blazed the way that those who followed him
  Might wander not in seeking for the light.

'Tis meet that those, unworthy though they are,
  Whose shoulders bear the mantle of his years,
Should consecrate the spot where valor lies,
  Make holy ground the holier for their tears.

'Tis ours to raise above the grave of him
  A mark to grace the resting-place of worth;
To tell of how he nobly lived and died,
  The great among the great ones of the earth.

A thankful task this tribute to his dust;
  Love's work requites us by its own accord;
We feel to bless the stone that should above
  His quiet grave keep lonely watch and ward.

Sleep on, then, silent sleeper, with the dead;
  Thy labor here hath brought thee well-won rest.
Sweet be thy dream amid calm Greenwood's graves,
  Eternal be thy memory, and blest.

While o'er thy slumbering clay a shaft we raise
  To bear the story of a hero gone;
Mid storm and sun, 'neath changeless stars and clouds,
  First in our heart of hearts, sleep on, sleep on!

The Bridge Catastrophe.

A frightful accident took place on Decoration Day on the new bridge between New York and Brooklyn, caused by a woman's scream, a rush, and a panic, in which twelve persons lost their lives and a large number were injured. Many are loud in their denunciation of the managers of the bridge for their lack of foresight in not providing against the possibility of such an accident. The management declare, however, that it could not hav been foreseen, and that the same disaster was liable to happen in any crowded thoroughfare. According to the belief professed by a majority of those who are trying to place the responsibility where it belongs, there is a being who has known from the beginning of eternity that everything that has happened would happen. He, according to this belief, knew of the loss of life and the suffering which were to follow almost immediately the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge. He had it in his power to enlighten the managers of the bridge and the passengers on the subject, and to avert the catastrophe. Yet he did not do it. He let the slaughter go on. No one as yet, that we hav seen, has placed the responsibility here, where, if we admit the existence of the Christian's God, it most obviously belongs. One of this being's accredited ministers was present at the opening of the bridge and prayed long and loud that the enterprise might be blessed with success. Was this sacrifice of human lives a mocking answer to that prayer? Did the alleged Ruler of the Universe aim to rebuke in this manner the taking of his name in vain by the implication in the prayer that his attention needed to be called to the bridge in order that he might make it a blessing to the people of the two cities? Was the rebuke which consisted in the massacre of a dozen presumably innocent persons one which is calculated to increase the love and admiration of God among the children of men? Would it not appear more like the act of an infinit fiend?

The God who caused or allowed this death and suffering is the being whom the Christians of this country would hav recognized in our national Constitution as the overruling power. We are called upon to pay him tribute under pains and penalties. The religious people of the world bow down and do him homage day after day. Can anything more monstrous or inconsistent be conceived of? We believe not.

The people of every age are known and judged in history by their deities. It is to be hoped, for the honor of the nineteenth century, that the intelligence of the people of to-day will not in the future be estimated by the folly they display in worshiping the God of the Brooklyn Bridge disaster.

Obituary.

DIED.—Of apoplexy, on May 19th, George W. Allen, of Rochester, N. Y., aged 61 years.

Mr. Allen was the loved and loving husband of Mrs. Letsie A. Allen, only sister of D. M. Bennett, founder and editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. He died after a few hours only of suffering. The great shock of her brother's untimely death almost prostrated Mrs. Allen; that of her husband, we fear, will make life seem to her hardly worth living. No one can sympathize with her loneliness and grief more feelingly than the sister with whom she so recently shared an almost overwhelming sorrow.

MRS. HANNAH BECKER.—At the residence of her son, H. L. Becker, in Adrian, Mich., May 10th, Mrs. Hannah Becker, aged 80 years.

Mrs. Becker was born in Connecticut at the beginning of our century, and had more than usual opportunity of witnessing the nation's vicissitudes. She lived a good and useful life, an unbeliever in church creeds and torturing dogmas. She leaves six stalwart sons, all Liberals.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham has just closed a series of five lectures at Erie, Pa.

E. C. WALKER started May 28th on a two months' tour through Western Kansas. He speaks at Miltonvale June 17th, and will be pleased to answer calls to lecture. Address him at Valley Falls, Kan.

W. S. BELL lectured at Leadvillo, Col., on the evening of May 27th. Mr. R. H. Paddon writes from that place: "The lecture given by Prof. Bell was just the thing needed. People are thirsting for Freethought lectures, and his style of expressing it seems to suit the public taste exactly."

MRS. AMELIA H. COLBY desires to say to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and particularly those of New York state, that she returned from her western trip and commenced her summer's work the last Sunday of May by lecturing to a largo, enthusiastic, and appreciativ audience in the Town Hall, Clarendon village, N. J. As her Sundays are not all engaged, those wishing her services will write her at 123 West Eagle street, Buffalo, N. Y., which will be her address till September next.

DR. J. L. YORK has recently delivered a course of five lectures at North Yamhill, Or. A correspondent describes the impression made in the following language: "The doctor delivered one lecture on 'Equal Rights' to the great satisfaction of a crowded house. We find the doctor is particularly happy and at home on that subject. His other lectures were 'Love and Marriage,' 'Evolution,' and 'Science and Religion.' The Laughlin Hall was crowded overy evening but the first, notwithstanding the Christians were holding meetings in the church to very thin audiences. We can't help thinking that the doctor has improved since we heard him last, for his most radical utterance was applauded to the echo. He went from here to Astoria to meet engagements, and from there to Seattle, W. T., where he expects to spend several weeks."

ON Sunday, May 20th, a meeting was called in Investigator Hall for the purpose of considering the advisability of forming a Liberal Club in Boston. Those present decided that the time was opportune for such a movement, and appointed a committee to draw up a plan of organization, and report on the following Sunday. In accordance with the terms of its appointment this committee on Sunday, the 27th, presented the conclusions at which it had arrived. A temporary set of by-laws was adopted which are to be in operation until September; then they are to become inoperativ by the adoption of a plan of permanent organization which is to be decided upon. These by-laws provide that the name of the society shall be "The Boston Liberal Club;" that its purposes shall be the holding of meetings and delivery of lectures in accordance with the principles of Liberalism; and that the general direction of the affairs of the club shall be in the hands of an executiv committee of five members, who shall present a complete plan of permanent organization on the first Sunday in September. The executiv committee consists of Messrs. Cobb, Verity, Hill, Halo, and Ernest Mendum. The officers of the club are John Storer Cobb, president; John S. Verity, vice-president; George N. Hill, secretary and treasurer.

A GRATIFYING fall off in attendance at Catholic churches, in consequence of the pope's letter on tho Irish question, has been observed to follow that document. The sums of money contributed as Peter's pence hav also dimished to the extent of about twenty-five per cent. The pope may be infallible as a guesser about the unknowable, but his views on politics are as likely to be rejected by Catholics as those of any other man. Mr. Pecci has got himself into hot water about as effectually as his worst enemies could desire. It will be interesting to watch his struggles to get out of it.

SOME of the clergymen whom the New York Tribune induced to giv their opinion on the popular drift away from Sunday observance are exercised over the fact that their utterances were published in the Sunday edition of that paper. They may find some consolation in the fact that the work of putting their words into type was probably performed before twelve o'clock Saturday night, and they should be thankful to get their views into print on any day. Sunday papers are recognized by the clergy to be the greatest enemy of the pulpit, because most people prefer staying at home and reading a good paper to going to church and listening to a poor sermon.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY: Comprising all that Relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire;" and a "Vindication" of some Passages in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Chapters. By Edward Gibbon, Esq. New York: Peter Eckler. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Price, $2.

When the historian Gibbon undertook the task of writing a history of the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," he knew it to be a part of his duty as a chronicler of events which had exercised and must continue to exercise a vast influence upon the civilization of the world to treat without fear or favor the share which the Christian superstition had taken in the fall of that grandest of empires. He may hav foreseen what must be the result of his impartiality. He may hav foreseen that his exposure of the crime and brutality of the earlier advocates of Christianity would be met with a howl of angry protest from his religious contemporaries. But, whether he anticipated this or not, it came. His motivs were assailed, his honesty questioned and even denied, and the plainest facts of history, as he had set them forth, if they chanced to conflict with the statements of Christian historians, were ascribed by his enemies to his unfriendliness toward the religion of Christ. The fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of the "Decline and Fall," in which is given an account of the origin of Christianity, were especially attacked, and with the bitterness and unfairness which hav ever distinguished the Christian from the impartial critic. Up to the present day theologians hav not learned the art of toleration in discussion, and at the time when Gibbon lived they had even less respect than now for the amenities of debate.

Gibbon replied to his critics with weapons, as M. Guizot has said, stronger than those of his adversaries. He was opposed to theological discussion, and took up the pen only to discharge a debt of honor which he owed to himself and to the public, requesting that the reader would forget his vindication as soon as convinced of the writer's honesty and innocence.

All attempts to impeach the veracity of Gibbon, both during his lifetime and since his death, hav failed. In fact, the imprudence of his critics served only to present him with fresh opportunities to strengthen his position, and contributed in the end to the discomfiture of his assailants.

After the great historian was dead came the opportunity for the religious pirates to get in most effectivly their contemptible work. On all except religious matters Gibbon was conceded to be sound. His contributions to historical literature were of inestimable value, and anyone who had not read Gibbon had not read history. But his exposure of the pagan origin of Christianity must not be allowed to be read by the rising generation. He must be "edited." It would appear that the religious editors of Gibbon's works had little confidence that his critics had refuted his charges; otherwise the most natural thing for them to do would hav been to publish in the same volume with his "History of Christianity" an exposure of his errors, if such errors existed and if such exposure had been made. This would at least hav been the more honest method of procedure. Instead, however, of adopting this course, excisions of the objectionable matter were made, and with the history of the church left out, the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" was published to the world as the work of Gibbon. Various expurgated editions of the "Decline and Fall" are in circulation, "edited" by men who, with more zeal than honor, believed that it was better that the truth be suppressed than that it should be made known to the prejudice of superstition. Bohn's edition is edited by an "English churchman." The current editions published in this country, copied from the English, were subjected to a process of mutilation called editing by the Rev. H. H. Milman, prebendary of St. Peter's and rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster. The "Student's edition," published by the Harpers, in New York, is said to be the worst mangled. The literary vandal in this case is Wm. Smith, LL.D., who excuses his suppression of facts with the plea that he did not wish to expose the minds of students to the Infidelity of Gibbon. As a plain statement of historical facts is here alluded to as Infidelity, this plea carries with it the inference that unwelcome truth, when told about believers in Christianity, assumes the character of heresy. The suppression of facts, therefore, which is equivalent to the promulgation of falsehood, and no less execrable when done for purposes of deceit, becomes the duty of all religious writers. This conclusion may be denied by the ecclesiastical editors of Gibbon, but it is the only one that can be logically arrived at.

The publication of the present work by Mr. Eckler supplies an urgent need. The reader of editions of Gibbon like that of the Methodist Harper Brothers, would form no idea, from the hint given in the editor's preface, of the extent to which the great historian's writings hav suffered from the hand of the suppressor. Some notion of this may be gained from a statement of the fact that the "History of the Church" and the "Vindication" make a volume of some 800 pages, six by three and one-half inches in size, in type as compact as that in which this article is printed. But merit does not attach alone to the publication of the "History of Christianity." The publisher has added a preface full of wise reflections upon Gibbon and his critics, and keeps up a running commentary in the way of annotations throughout the book, which are of great assistance to the reader. Mr. Eckler is himself a Freethinker, and it is appropriate that one of his views should rescue Gibbon's tabooed writings from the obscurity into which the church has endeavored to thrust them. This "History of the Church" is a most important part of the "Decline and Fall." The fact of its excision by the church is sufficient proof that it tells against that institution. This book should go wherever the emasculated editions hav found circulation. It should go farther, because it is more valuable. A religion cannot go higher than its source any more than water can flow up-hill. So when the true origin of Christianity becomes a familiar matter in history, the superstructure of theology built upon its pagan basis must crumble away. No man attempted a greater service to the people of the eighteenth century than Gibbon; none ever did greater injustice to an author's writings than the church has done to that historian's works in the nineteenth; and Gibbon never had a truer friend than the publisher who has now placed the best work of his pen before the public. The great author's own Vindication falls short of Mr. Eckler's in effectually answering his detractors. Gibbon's "History of Christianity" is now an established fact; the vandals of superstition hav received a return blow from which they will find it impossible to recover. The best encouragement we can offer to the enterprise of Mr. Peter Eckler is to bespeak a wide circulation for his book, and this we do most cordially, as a pleasant duty to himself and to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SOCIETIES FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF VICE. Are they Beneficial or Injurious? Their Methods and Tendencies Considered. By a former President of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association. Published by Colby and Rich, and for sale at this office. Price, 10 cents.

In these days when Comstock is being buffeted from pillar to post as he deserves to be—and then kicked off the stage altogether—this little pamphlet is timely. It is a very thorough condemnation of vice societies, not on account of their object, but because of the methods of procedure which they hav adopted, and which are calculated to do a large amount of evil, with which the incidental good they effect is very slight in comparison. Quotations are made from many prominent writers which hav heretofore appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the pamphlet, "Anthony Comstock, His Career of Cruelty and Crime," is also drawn upon. By publication in smaller pamphlet form these sentiments will reach many who otherwise would not become familiar with them. Our author is extremely vigorous in his denunciation of the outrages that hav been performed under the Comstock laws, and calls loudly for "calm, resolute, united, persistent, untiring action." We know the author to be a man of sterling honesty, great earnestness, and extended learning, and so feel like recommending his little book to thoughtful public attention.

LABOR AND CAPITAL, by Edward Kellogg. 8th edition. Published by John W. Lovell Co., New York. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Paper 20 cents.

This work is thus described by the publishers:

"'Labor and Capital' is a remarkable book. It shows how and why capitalists get so large a part of the yearly productions of labor, and why the producers get so small a part. The first edition of this work was published in 1848, under the title of 'Labor and Other Capital; or, the rights of each secured and the wrongs of both eradicated.' At that time the publication of such a work by a rich and prosperous merchant of New York created considerable excitement and discussion among political economists. The author was a man of deep perception, and, in the state of the country, he foresaw with clearness all that had transpired in our financial history during the past thirty years. If the system elaborated by Mr. Kellogg had been fully, instead of partially, adopted by Congress, the various steps which hav been taken in the application of his theory would all hav been anticipated. Mr. Kellogg believed that the government of the United States should issue all money or currency that should be allowed to go into circulation. The present United States Treasury note is a partial exemplification of this plan. The whole work has such an important bearing upon the financial and political state of the country to-day that the publishers are justified in issuing it in a cheap form, thus placing it within the reach of all who are interested in the industrial problem."

"Labor and Capital" has been too long before the public to require an extended introduction to the people of to-day. Kellogg was a writer on political economy of recognized ability, and his writings are standard among works on that subject. Though written forty-five years ago, as the reforms advocated hav not been fully adopted, this work is as interesting and timely as ever. The Lovell Company hav published it in convenient form for general perusal and at a price which makes it accessible to all.

A Truth Seeker Around the World.

ALTOGETHER TOO MUCH PRAISE FOR US, BUT NONE TOO MUCH FOR THE WORK AND ITS AUTHOR.

From the Universe.

The fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" concludes the great and imperishable literary labors of the late D. M. Bennett. The volume before us is a graphic picture of the author's observations and travels "From Hong Kong to New York." The description of Japan and the Japanese is deeply interesting and faithful to life. The Japs, as we familiarly term our oriental neighbors, may well feel grateful toward the memory of Mr. Bennett, whose kind heart and teeming brain lavishly, and we think justly, unite to paint a beautiful picture of the people and their country. The great writer's experiences and observations during his "Twenty Days in Japan" will go down to history as a marvel of literary labor. The history of that romantic country, from the most ancient times to our own days; its people, religion, customs, and habits; its political revolutions and social institutions; its feudalism and its marvelous progress, are all traced with a masterly hand. The author bids a loving farewell to Japan and then takes up his journey across the deep blue of the Pacific, his heart bounding with hope as he thinks of the "Golden Gate" through which entrance he has to pass before he again touches the free soil of his beloved America. The hospitable and enthusiastic reception given him in San Francisco, his travels within our borders, his journey and reception as he proceeded across the continent, his meeting and greeting old friends in New York, and the banquet given in his honor, the picturesque reception and banquet also given in his honor at Watkins Glen by the chiefs of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, and other sights and scenes, are all described in that easy and natural style so characteristic of the man. If noble friendships and many honors be laurels in which a famous writer and traveler may pride himself, surely Mr. Bennett had reason to be proud. His lamented and untimely death, while yet engaged in the fourth volume of his greatest work, ended his earthly labors. He met fate with the smile of peace and the fortitude of a philosopher. The incomplete volume, fortunately, found a literary worker who thoroughly understood the spirit and aims of the deceased author. The gentleman is Mr. Eugene M. Macdonald, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. His labors are skilfully performed, and he has added "The Obsequies" and a "Life of D. M. Bennett," both very interesting features of the work. The "Index" is the most perfect we hav ever seen, and at a glance the reader can refer to any page in the four large volumes constituting "A Truth Seeker Around the World." We must notice the illustrations in the fourth volume. There are many, and descriptiv of Japanese and American characters and scenery. "The Medicine Man," an engraving of a Japanese physician and his pretty and ailing young patient, is a striking and perfect piece of artistic skill. Space reminds us that we must, for the present, bid good-bye to the truth seeker voyager, and in conclusion it is just to note that the entire editing of the splendid volumes was in the hands of Mr. Macdonald. It was a great labor, and considering that he also ably conducted the editorial duties and management of THE TRUTH SEEKER newspaper, we can but admire him for his fine literary judgment and great executiv ability. The four volumes indicated, as a work, is destined to hav a great circulation. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

C. C. Luther.

ANOTHER BRAVE VETERAN LIBERAL AT REST.

C. C. Luther was born in the state of New York, on the 22d day of August, 1824. When ten years of age he removed with his parents to the state of Indiana, where he remained till he was eighteen years of age. Then, for several years, he was a boatman on the Mississippi River. At the breaking out of the war with Mexico he enlisted from Missouri under Colonel Domphan, and took a part in all the battles and the other thrilling adventures of the famous "Domphan's Expedition." On all occasions he proved himself a brave and faithful soldier, winning the praise of his officers and the love or his comrades. When twenty-six years of age he went to Oregon, where he remained till 1869, when he removed to California, and settled upon the farm upon which he died, five miles north of Modesto. His death occurred at half-past eight A.M. on the sixteenth day of the present month. He was buried on the seventeenth in the Citizens' Cemetery at Modesto.

Such were Mr. Luther's industry and love of learning that, although he never enjoyed the advantages of even a common-school education, he finally came to rank high as a man of general information. As a writer, he was lucid and logical, and through various periodicals contributed many valuable articles to the literature of the day. He also held a fair rank as a public speaker.

Up to the breaking out of the great Rebellion he was in politics a Democrat, after that an independent Republican, scratching his ticket whenever he thought unworthy men had been placed upon it.

In religion he was always a Liberal. He never did believe in the existence of the gods of creeds or of anything else supernatural. He held that, even if there be any such things as gods, they seem to be of no use to men, and certainly require no aid from men; that it is folly to waste our time and money upon them, and that we ought rather to labor for the good of our fellow-men, who do need us. While, therefore, he did not worship the gods, he was noted for his charity to the worthy poor and for his liberal support of every good cause. He worshiped at the shrine of truth—of reason, science, common-sense, and justice, and he unwaveringly held to his principles to the very last—dying as he had lived, a thorough Infidel, a true Liberal.

He died of pleurisy, complicated with several other diseases. His illness, which lasted over nine days, was attended till near its close with intense suffering; and although he had every attention that could be given him by a skilled physician, a loving wife, and sympathizing friends, he thought from the first that he should not recover. He spoke of death as "a going away."

For several years he had been investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, and had become almost a believer in the doctrin that we shall hav a conscious existence after the dissolution of the body. He and I had often conversed upon this subject, and had expressed a common wish that we might know of a certainty whether such an existence does indeed or does not await us. We had agreed that, in the event that either of us should be present at the death-bed of the other, the dying, when reaching the boundary line of eternity, should, if still conscious, call back or signal what he saw beyond. And this our friend Luther did, declaring by words and by signs that he saw a lovely land of light just beyond—"a home over there," and his own loved ones awaiting his coming.

Whether the lovely scenes that charmed his last moments were realities or not I do not pretend to know. Who dare say they were not? Who dare place limits to the capabilities of nature? I hope that it may at last prove true to all of us that they were realities. To him they certainly were so. Should they prove to be realities, then we, too, shall see them in time of our dissolution, as he saw them in time of his. As his loved ones came to him, so will our loved ones come to us in their robes of snow, on their wings of light. Who can blame us for such a hope?

If, on the other hand, these lovely scenes were only the beautiful visions of a delightful dream that ushered in the long sweet sleep of our dear friend, then we are still comforted. Then we still know that he was very happy while passing away. Then we still know that we too may pass away amid dreams of delight.

Mr. Luther was a good husband, a good father, a good friend, a good citizen—a good man in all the relations of life. He upheld no vices, he despised no virtues. Of enemies he had none. Of opposers, for opinion's sake, he had many. But these all esteemed him as a man, and, at his funeral, which was largely attended, Christians and Liberals alike wept the irreparable loss of one of the best of men. An appropriate funeral address was delivered at his late residence by J. H. Maddux. I spoke a few words at the grave.

SILAS F. HART.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Another stanch Liberal has departed this life. Silas F. Hart, of Athens, Calhoun county, Mich., died at the home of his parents, May 8th, after an illness of eight weeks.

His mental qualities were far above the ordinary, and though young in years, he dispensed more real substantial and practicable knowledge than hav scores of men at more advanced ages.

Mr. Hart was much respected by his employers, who of him hav said: "He was one of our strongest men."

W. J. Buttin, in whose employ Mr. Hart served, says in a letter to his friends:

"I assure you that I feel in his death a painful personal loss. I cannot bring my mind to believe that he is dead. He was so full of energy and strong stirring life, that it seems impossible. I assure his friends that we appreciated Mr. Hart highly and warmly. In my whole life I hav met but few men whom I liked so well, and none who were so full of generous, noble impulses. He was true-hearted, steadfast, and reliable. He made friends who believed in him and who loved him, and we mourn his loss, his early, untimely death, with bitter tears. My soul is moved in sorrow for those poor friends and loving acquaintances who, in life, were nearest and dearest to him. We hoped and hoped the great blow would be spared, but now that it has come, God only knows the hearts it breaks."

Another friend writes:

"It is not often, in fact never hav I met a man who, upon so short an acquaintance, had inspired so much personal admiration on my part for his manly and noble qualities, with his faults (which he did not hide as a coward), and he, like all men, had faults, yet I believed him to be strictly true to his friends, even to the extreme end."

He was a man who was never afraid to advocate his ideas, and by his frankness and lack of hypocrisy the bitter and revengeful tongue of the church and all opposed to human advancement ever stood ready to belie him, still he never flinched, and while on his dying bed often he would say, "If I do not get well I hav done what I hav done and said what I hav said in earnest, hoping some good may come from my having lived, and hav accomplished in the last year as much as some men do in a long life-time."

To giv your readers an idea of his mental as well as religious qualities, I giv you the following extract written by him to his mother during the Garfield excitement:

"The pious frauds of this place (Lansing, Mich.,) got on their knees before the altar of superstition and offered their prayers to the (supposed) fiend incarnate and infinit ignoramus of the universe in behalf of Garfield.

"And to-day I find the pious knaves that would disgrace the name of man or womanhood say that this consummation of villainy is to take our minds from earthly things and bring us in closer communion with divine grace. In my opinion, the belief in a God, in heaven and hell, is the offspring of an insanity born of ignorance and fear, and emanates from the same source as the divine authority of master over slave, husband over wife, and parent over child. It is the product of the same fear that makes some persons obey (not respect) a law that does away with all of their mental, moral, and physical rights—a fear that shuts every avenue to mental or physical development, and does away with every pleasurable sensation that we should enjoy; totally ignoring the fact that pleasure is the only good, and misery the only evil; setting everyone to raising hell in this world in order to escape it in an imaginary one; making us surrender our own rights out of a so-called respect for the rights of others, and in absolute disregard for our own welfare, when in fact we should first respect ourselvs (a respect that is higher than law), and realize that we are only responsible to ourselvs and the ones we may by direct contact benefit or injure."

Though but twenty-nine years of age, much important work was intrusted to Mr. Hart by his employers, the accomplishment of which was of great moment, yet he filled the trust to entire satisfaction—a record seldom found.

The funeral services consisted in the reading of a portion of Form 2 for funeral occasions from the "Truth Seeker Collection."

MRS. L. D. MCCLINTOCK.

Bath, Mich., May 28, 1883.

The Crowned Criminals.

The chief of the House of Romanoff, who was formally crowned czar on the 27th ult., is decended from a line of divinely favored people, celebrated chiefly for murder, filicide, insanity, immorality, and general debauchery. Its whole career is stained with blood and marked with crime. The founder of the house was Michael Feodorovitch, a fierce barbarian, who ascended the throne in 1613. He was succeeded by his son Alexis, a harmless sort of idiot, who was succeeded by his eldest son Feodor, who died in 1682. After him came his brother Ivan, in the natural succession, but he being a hopeless imbecil he was set aside and his half-brother, Peter, was placed upon the throne after a brief term of Sophia, a sister, in the regency. This was "Pierre le Grand," the real creator of the Russian empire. Peter was a man of great strength of character and will. He was afflicted with epilepsy and was given to drunkenness, but he had a creativ genius such as no member of the family ever possessed. He acquired the art of ship-building in Holland, made a navy for Russia, built the city of St. Petersburg, taught his people to shave and wear civilized clothing, abolished the patriarchate and made himself the head of the church as well as the czar. In the early part of his career a young Genoese adventurer named Lefort strolled into the empire. He was a man of education and he had seen the world. He attached himself to Peter and in time became the power behind the throne. One day he found a pie-boy singing in the streets, and being charmed with his voice he sent him to the palace to amuse the czar. This boy, whose name was Menzikoff, became a page and finally a prince and a prime minister. Together with Lefort he ruled the great Peter, save at such times as he happened to be in his insane and drunken humors. Lefort used to arrange entertainments for Peter. Sometimes, after a great military victory, the czar would banquet and debauch for a month or two, and at such time he occasionally amused himself by cutting off the heads of the Strelitzes who happened to be in his vicinity. During one of the early campaigns against Charles of Sweden, he captured the town of Marrenburg in Livonia. A young girl who had been married the night before to a Swedish soldier fell into Russian hands. One of the generals made her his mistress, and in course of time she came to occupy a similar relation to the czar.

This woman eventually became the czarina, for Peter, moved by a signal service rendered by her in a campaign against the Turks, married her and placed her by his side on his throne. Before ending his life of debauchery the Czar Peter caused his son Alexis to be put to death on the silly charge of treason.

Catherine I.—the mistress czarina—did not long survive Peter. She was succeeded by Peter II., the son of the murdered Alexis. He died of small-pox at the immature age of seventeen. A grand row ensued touching the succession, but it finally fell upon Anne Ivanovod, daughter of Peter's imbecil brother Ivan. Her first work was to banish to Siberia a lot of nobles who had conspired for the elevation of the houses of Dolgorouki and Galitsin. Her reign was distinguished for its flashy splendor, dissipation, and debauchery. The court was distinguished for corruption. When she died she turned over the empire to a lusty nobody named Beren, who had been her favorit, and he had a brief career as Regent. A season of intrigue, bloody plots, and much confusion followed, which ended in the ascendancy of Anne Leopoldovna, an indolent half-witted creature. She was shortly driven off the throne by the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, daughter of Peter the Great. Anne and her son were imprisoned and her principal followers were sent to Siberia. The new czarina, for the pupose of keeping the crown in the family of Peter, adopted the son of her sister Anne and proclaimed him heir apparent under the name of Peter Feodorovitch. She provided him a wife in the person of the Princess Sophia of Anhalt-Zerbzt, who afterward became the notorious Catherine II.

The Czarina Elizabeth waged war against Frederick the Great of Prussia, introduced French customs and theatricals in Russia, and added materially to the corruption of the country. She never married, but she had a number favorits, among them a singer named Rosoum, who captivated her with his sweet voice. She finally made him Count Razoumofsky, contrary to the strict rules of morality and court customs. Elizabeth died in time to save the empire from complete demoralization.

She was succeeded by her nephew, the grandson of Peter the Great, who became Czar under the title of Peter III. He was a disgraceful blackguard and his brief reign was a shameless one. His mistress was a coarse-bred, ignorant creature named Voronrof, who had neither wit nor beauty. He was drunk the greater part of his life, and his treatment of his wife Sophia was disgraceful in the extreme. In 1762 the disgraced wife appealed to the army and went to war with her heartless husband. Deserted by his army, he abdicated, went into retirement near St. Petersburg, and died soon after under circumstances which plainly indicated that he was murdered.

The victorious wife took possession of the throne in the name of Catherine II., and she became known in time as the "Russian Semiramis." She reigned thirty-four years and added both to the territory and military glory of Russia. She commanded her armies herself and was by all odds the most intellectual person that ever sat on the Russian throne. Her morals were of the very worst quality. She picked her favorits from the army, as a rule, and her private life was questionable in the extreme. Her sensual career and her adventures with men whom she picked up in obscurity and raised to position and power, only to knock them down and return them to obscurity, are absolutely unfit for publication. But Catherine II. was as brilliant as she was wicked. She wrote books, filled up her court with intellectual and literary Frenchmen, and at one time had Voltaire chained to her chariot wheels. She did much to advance the empire in art and science, but her general influence was demoralizing.

At Catherine's death her weak-brained son become czar under the title of Paul I. He was forty-two years old when he came to power and was only a few removes from insanity. His acts hav been excused upon the ground of "eccentricity," but as a matter of fact he was a madman, and history has spoken of him as "the Russian Hamlet." He died in 1801 while attempting a foolish invasion of India. His son, Alexander I., succeeded him. It was during his reign that the Napoleonic wars were carried on. He fought the French ogre with great firmness and contributed largely to his overthrow. It was during the latter part of his reign that the secret societies, having for their purpose the revolutionizing of Russia, began to be formed. Alexander opposed bitterly every step toward a change in the Russian system and died a magnificent representativ of the stolidity, brutality, and absolutism of Russia.

Alexander I. was followed by the Czar Nicholas. Under his reign the war of the Crimea was carried on. He manumitted the serfs and introduced a few reforms, but he steadily resisted all appeals for a constitutional form of government. At his death Alexander II. came to the throne. He was a man of rather weak intellect and uncertain morals also. He lived on bad terms with the empress. His mistress, the Princess Dolgorouki, was powerful in the direction of public affairs and her relations to the czar at one time caused a great scandal. His brother, one of the grand dukes, was disgraced by his conduct during the late Turco-Russian war. He was publicly convicted of stealing the money intended for the payment of the army. The assassination of Alexander II., by the Nihilists in St. Petersburg two years ago, is still fresh in the minds of newspaper readers. His successor, the present gentleman who was crowned at Moscow recently, has shown no particular strength or weakness. He has followed the illustrious example of his father and it is said that his relations with the empress are only nominal. He maintains a separate household, and the name of the woman who shares with him the honor of directing Russian affairs will no doubt be given to the world in due season.

This, then, is the illustrious family which the armed nobles and the ignorant moujiks lifted into new glory at Moscow last week. Their wild acclaim, mingling with music and salvos of artillery, was a protest against the rights of man, and a declaration that the people who claim to rule by divine right hav the divine right also to ignore all principles of honor and decency and all traits of morality.

Letters from Friends.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER must be sustained. Inclosed please find $5, which please apply to payment of fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World;" and balance to past dues and future subscription to the indispensable paper.

W. H. SHELDON.

ONEKAMO, May 21, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: It is with pleasure I inclose $1.50 to apply on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. But it is with sorrow that I send $1 for the Monument Fund; not but what I am willing to contribute, but am sorry the occasion requires it. If the friends of Mr. Bennett will build a Bennett Hall you can depend on me for a "V" or an "X."

J. S. WEEKS.

LOGANSPORT, May 3, 1883.

MR EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3.50—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and $1 for the Monument Fund.

I am getting old, and liv nine miles from a post-office. Am 76 years old. Don't you think it about time for me to quit taking THE TRUTH SEEKER and join the church? I am a little tardy this time, but when I get so I can't pay for the paper I will stop it. The cause is growing grander and greater every day. Liberalism is getting to be a spontaneous production of these regions since we are getting the land ditched out, and the country improves.

JOSEPH B. CORNELL.

LONG CREEK, May 5, 1883.

DEAR MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $5 to pay subscription for your excellent paper, which I never saw until about four years ago, and since then I hav been a constant reader. I wish to tender my heartfelt sympathy as well as that of my husband, for your great bereavement in the loss of your excellent, though persecuted, husband, and I truly mourn his loss, for he was doing a great work.

My husband has been driven almost to desperation by the bigots of Prairie City and vicinity, who robbed him of almost all the property he had and then endeavored to rob him of his character by trying to impeach his testimony; but they could not find a man that could swear he had dealt fraudulently with him or any other man, so it was the worst with them. That was last fall. This spring they are trying again; but a man like him, strictly honest, certainly will not fail to come out right in the end. He is a hard-working, kind-hearted man, but he does not believe in orthodoxy. He became disgusted with it while in the Willamette Valley, where we lived for sixteen years.

MRS. H. M. SWEEK.

SANTA BARBARA, May 22, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2 50 to pay my subscription for the year 283. I am glad to see the paper prospering. I think the new date, "283," a splendid thing. I am sorry that there is some difference of opinion about it. It looks bad to see the date 107 occasionally. It looks like the brewing of general contention. Christianity was bursted by division into contending sects. Division and contention will burst anything; it will even separate man and wife. Liberals should decide as soon as possible which date they want—107 or 283—and then let all be mannerly enough to use the one most favorably received, and drop the other, and not be contrary or contentious about it. If Christians see that Infidels start a new date and then quarrel and fail, they will hav something to crow about for forty years.

W. H. H. GRA-AM.

BANGOR, ME., May 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Notwithstanding that the number of your subscribers is quite small in our little city, still the Liberal people are by no means so few as they might be. True we hav no organization and no leader, but we hav an Infidel preacher in whom the orthodox people seem to see an incarnation of his sulphurous majesty with the hoofs and horns. Truly scientific are his discourses and extremely materialistic are his doctrins in the estimation of nearly all who hear him. Last Sunday as I was about to leave the house, I made the discovery that I had been sitting with two pronounced Atheists! No time is wasted in studying the Bible, but the lessons are made more instructiv in other ways, and the works of prominent Freethinkers, Spencer's among others, are found in the Sunday-school classes. I make no attempt to account for the Infidelity of the Rev. Mr. Stewart, except that he is a man of exceptional ability and courage, and fears not to speak for truth and to ridicule all ancient threadbare theologies. He is supported by the most wealthy and cultured people in the city, and so far as I can learn is indorsed by the church society, which is one thing truly wonderful.

GEO. S. PERKINS.

ALEXANDRIA, ONT., May 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: How is it that so many apparently able writers pick up arms against Brother Winter and his "Mortal Philosophy," and none of them offer any proofs or any arguments against the old veteran's philosophy of mortality, nor in support of their immortal fancy?

I am inclined to believe those people so attached to their desires as to mistake them for facts. If any one ever had a proof, or read a sound argument in favor of the immortality of a soul, in the way understood by Christians, Spiritualists, and others, let him pass it to me and I will pay him all it is worth. I do not claim to know positivly that there is no such a thing as immortality of the soul, but I do claim that the first proof of it is yet to come, and I furthermore believe that it will take very good proof to convince a sound mind, not biased by desires or fancies, that death will not end his individual existence. If a phenomenon, brought in existence by a combination of elements, is to continue to exist after disorganization, why not as well continue to see my shadow after removing my body from the point whence it caused it.

I hav no objection to any one enjoying his own fancies, if it comforts him at nobody's else expense, but it does not seem fair to bitterly denounce a man in offensiv terms, as some hav done to Mr. Winter, for the expression of his honest opinion and never attempt to show wherein he is mistaken.

Yours for truth and justice, CHAS. LAPERCHE.

CAWKER CITY, KANSAS, May 10, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: We are suffering here in the West for want of outspoken opponents more than anything else. The clergy hav agreed together not to discuss with the Infidels, so that we are left severely alone, and that is the worst of all diseases. I hav been thinking that it might be well to imitate Paul a little—to be crafty and catch them with guile; and the guile I propose is to find some Liberals that are not known to fame to go into places and challenge or accept of challenges to discuss questions with the Infidels. There are such Liberals who could quite forcibly present the Christian side, and there are in a great many places some Liberals quite able to "dust their jackets" nicely and gain much for the Liberal cause. The money received for tickets of admission would by far exceed that for lectures by acknowledged Liberals.

What I wish to learn of you is if you can establish a Bureau of Guilites and get them into working order for next fall's campaign. This will lead to considerable correspondence, but it can be so arranged as to be made to pay for it.

This is something of my plan: Let a gentleman come here looking for a farm, or a number of them for a colony, and let it be generally known through the country; and let him, as by accident, come across a Liberal and commence a dispute with him, to terminate in a challenge; and, just as sure as the sun rises, that hall will be full for three nights, and the Guilite will be feasted to his heart's content. Of course, the questions should be privately arranged in advance by correspondence.

G. W. CHAPMAN, M.D.

NEW YORK, May 31, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The ideas of Mr. F. J. Emary, as expressed in your issue of May 19th, may be all well enough, but they sound to me like the complaints of the infant class in a mixed school—"that the time was being taken up in teaching mathematics, logic, etc." The class may not quite like it, not to hav all the time to themselvs, but then the elder or more advanced scholars hav their rights as well. So it is with THE TRUTH SEEKER. Not all of its readers are "illiterate" or "near in locality to the Indian" (and I quite suspect that even Mr. Emary is not so illiterate as he claims), and they hav a right to share in its columns. So while you "aim to adapt its language to our limited capacity," as Mr. Emary asks, we hope you will not quite close its columns to the discussion of questions of higher philosophy and the more advanced speculations. The mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER is not "merely the cultivation of good taste and good expression of language," but the discussion of every subject pertaining to the progress and well-being of humanity.

In regard to Mr. Bennett—instead of his belonging neither to the Materialists nor Spiritualists, it seems to me it would be nearer the truth to say he belonged to both, as any one following closely his writings and sayings must see. When, during the first years of his residence in New York, he made his "maiden" speech, as he called it, he stated that he had received evidence sufficient to his mind to convince him that intelligence did exist outside the body. Some of his anti-Spiritualistic friends endeavored to dissuade him from publishing this part of his speech. But in this, as throughout his whole life, honesty to his convictions, truth to himself, triumphed. And occasionally in THE TRUTH SEEKER since you will find the same statement. And among his firmest, warmest friends, his stanchest supporters were openly avowed Spiritualists and Materialists both. It is an easy matter to claim that "common sense" all belongs to what we believe, and sophistry to the belief of others, but it hardly indicates so broad and comprehensiv a mind as our good Bennett was blessed with.

A. C. HUSSEY.

FAIRFIELD, May 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR:

Sure he's a devil of a god
St. Paul would hav us love and laud;
St. Paul, that juiceless, sour dyspeptic,
And arabilious epileptic,
Inventor of predestination,
And chief apostle of damnation;
Better remain a senseless clod
Than owe life to the Pauline God.
Surely St. Paul his calling missed
When he quit murder to preach Christ.
(Romans ix, 10–24.)

Now where is the analogy
Between the potter and his clay?
And the creator, when he takes
Some senseless dust, and of it makes
A sentient thing; then for his glory
Damns it to hell or purgatory?
Is there no difference between
Insensate pots and sensate men?
The potter with his pots may do
Precisely as he wishes to.
As form ensues they cannot feel,
For them no suffering here, no hell.
What difference makes it to the pot
Whether for honor made or not?
Whether a prince's board to grace,
Or 'neath his couch to hav its place?
It puts hard strain on common sense,
The doctrin that omnipotence
E'er made of dust a sentient thing
Foredoomed to endless suffering.

"How things explain," the Christian cries,
"As you affirm the Bible lies?
This mystery of good and bad
Resolve, if there's no Pauline God?"
Better forego all explanation
Than call on demons and damnation.
Make God the architect of evil
Purveyor almighty to the devil.
Best own some things beyond our ken,
Content to liv as honest men.
Liv bravely, not as cringing slaves
To idol frowns and priestly knaves.
(Yours truly, John.)

I'm acquainted with no book that stands so greatly in need of castration as the so-called "word of God."

But superstition sanctifies
The unsav'riest impurities,
E'en claims for filth, it seems to me,
A biblical monopoly.
What elsewhere's horribly obscene,
Here's supersecularly clean.

Christianity places its God clearly in partnership with its devil. This is the inevitable, the ineradicable logic of its theology. The former furnishes the victims, while the latter tortures them. Which is the more hateful?

Are we bound to accept absurdities as truths simply because we can't explain everything in nature? Because not omniscient it does not necessarily follow that we should be lunatics or hypocrits.

Morality is all. What is religion by itself?—a hoop-skirt without the woman; or, rather, what has been left in the bath after ablution. God is either unwilling to prevent evil, or he is unable. If unwilling, he is not good. If unable, he is not omnipotent. Either horn of this ancient dilemma tosses orthodox theology sky high.

JEFFERSON CITY, MONTANA, May 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, besides having been a Liberal a good while longer. While I indorse many things THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes, I sometimes run across things that go "ag'in' the grain"—not in a religious point of view, for therein I am myself outspoken; but it is when I find that sometimes our valued TRUTH SEEKER is apparently "taken in" by some shallow-brained fellow who does not know for the life of him what he is an Infidel for, only perhaps in the vain belief that it is "respectable" in this far West (for as a rule we are Liberal); and a good specimen, in my opinion, is the party who caused a stampede from Bozeman and other points in this territory to the Coeur d'Alene range, and had the coolness to get a letter inserted in your columns of the 12th inst. (I inclose the article in question). The stampede has proved a dismal failure and entailed many hardships on the poor fellows who allowed themselvs to be carried away by the excitement. I also inclose an excerpt from the Independent, not at all enviable of Prichard, the philanthropist and would-be benefactor of the Infidels:

"Parties are returning from the reported discovered gold mines in the Cœur d'Alene mountains, and claim the whole thing a fraud, and that the man Prichard, who made the report upon which the Bozeman people made the long journey, is probably hanging to a tree or some other elevated object."

THE TRUTH SEEKER, in endeavoring to disseminate the truth, should be very cautious about publishing such articles as these. They do not come under the head of Infidelism, but rather gullibleism of the public, and may react on the good principles advocated by the Liberals by casting an odium on them not dissimilar to the religious mining swindles perpetrated only so recently. I trust the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who hav been infected with the stampede fever by the article in question may conclude not to emigrate to "Evolution City" before a good railroad can take them there, and then get off at some common-sense place before reaching that utopian locality. Hoping you will giv this room in your valuable journal, I am,

For truth, E. C. EYL.

[We did not in any way indorse or comment on the professed discovery of Mr. Burk's friend, supposing every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER had discretion enough to investigate further before pulling up stakes and starting for Idaho. We printed it at the request of Mr. Burk, thinking that if it was true it was well to let it be known, and if not true no harm could be done.—ED. T. S.]

WELLAND, ONT., May 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am but little in the practice of writing for the press, my school education not having well fitted me for that work. I am in the seventy-eighth year of my age, and belong to the class of men with hard hands, and having an idea that I am better at thinking than doing hard work upon the farm, I am going to try to commit a few thoughts to writing, though I think my ability to do so is not of the first order—my dictionary of words being of the abridged kind. But as your readers are of various classes, and some of your writers are highly educated, perhaps my production may be understood by the less educated part of your readers. But as I am not the least bigoted in regard to my abilities as an author, I leave it with yourself to giv it to the press or the basket.

I hav of late years used my own intellect or "thinker" to investigate into the truth or otherwise of those Christian religious views in which I was brought up, and to which I had given my consent for the greatest part of my life, and the more I hav investigated them the better I am convinced of their untruthfulness.

The laws of nature appear to be but little understood. The human family hav all commenced life as new-born babes. We hav had everything to learn, and how could we learn anything except from our surroundings? We did not know the difference between a piece of dirt and a sugar plum until we had learnt it by experience; and that which we hav had no experience in, in some way or other, we do not know. But we take for granted that all we hav been taught by our dear parents, both by their examples and precepts, was just the right thing for us to know, knowing that they loved us and would not direct us wrong if they knew it; and so far it was true. But they like ourselvs had been instructed by their dear parents, and so on for many generations back, when ignorance and superstition were the order of the day, and when the laws of nature by which the world and the things therein are governed were but very imperfectly understood.

It would seem that when our youthful minds become filled with ideas which we hav been taught to regard as sacred truth, it is no easy matter to root them out and replace them with views of an opposit character. It is only, as it were, by accident that we are sometimes led to doubt the correctness of our early training, and are led to think and investigate for ourselvs into its truthfulness or falsity. And our early prejudices, which hav to be met, act as a barrier in our way; hence there are but few whose thinking capacities are strong enough to overcome the barrier formed by these early prejudices.

The less we know of Nature's laws the less likely we shall be to emerge out of our darkened condition. It is only as we get a little light as revealed by science and truth that we are enabled to see our own ignorance, by seeing that there is so much to be known of which we are ignorant.

There are comparativly but few people who can see any beauty in the sciences of geology, chemistry, or astronomy, although these sciences are calculated to enlighten the human mind to an extent that but few hav any conception of. The human mind in the generality of people appears to be asleep. And what are the means to be employed to awaken us from that state of sleepy ignorance it is hard to tell. There are but few of us that would be willing to acknowledge our ignorance, and for the best of all reasons—because we do not know it. The man or woman whose mind has become so enlightened as to be aware of its own ignorance has attained to a degree of knowledge which is far from common. There are a few minds which hav become emancipated from this darkened condition, and in lectures and writings hav shown a more enlightened view of things. But our prejudices in favor of our own (ignorant) one-sided views make us unwilling to hear evidence upon the other side, lest we should be convinced of our error and hav to giv up those cherished views that hav been so firmly fixed in our minds as a sort of inheritance.

We can easily see that a judge in a court of justice would not be likely to giv a very correct decision by hearing only one side of the evidence in a case; yet such is our decision unless we can get our own consent and hear the other side also. This applies to all the creeds of the different peoples of the world. If we would arrive at the truth as it is in nature, we must get upon a platform above all creeds, and take the evidence upon which creeds are founded on the one side, and the evidence of the laws of nature as revealed by science and common sense on the other side, and giv a verdict according to the evidence.

JOHN RAY.

CENTRAL CITY, May 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Spiritualism is an ism about which I know comparativly nothing, and seeing in THE TRUTH SEEKER considerable written both for and against it of late, and, being a seeker after truth, I wish through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER to address myself to Mr. A. Allen Noe, who appears to be the Spiritualistic champion, and learn, if possible, something which will enable me to grasp the idea with some assurance of a solid basis or undoubted foundation.

MR. A. ALLEN NOE.

I hav been waiting a long time for the right man to turn up, one who is thoroughly posted in all that pertains to Spiritualism—one who knows without a peradventure whereof he speaks, and can so fully elucidate the subject that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." ant to go to the very bottom and get the "all in all" there is to it, so as to "be sure I'm right before I go ahead" in my investigations of this, to me, mysterious, shadowy subject. And judging from the language used in your communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th, wherein you take our old tried-and-never-found-wanting-in-Materialism friend, T. Winter, so severely to task, I feel assured that I hav, in you, at last "struck" the fountainhead of Spiritualism. In order to set my mind at rest upon this, to me, uncertain problem, I know you will consider it a pleasure to reply and impart to me the knowledge I seek.

Away up here, almost among the clouds, where we can gather snow every day in the year, we hear nothing about spirits except, perhaps, spirits of the storm

That ride over mountains,
And sweep through the valleys,
But traced to their fountains,
They prove nature's allies.

We are, therefore, apt to hold to that which can be traced to its fountain and proven a part and parcel of the vast domain of nature, free to all, at all times. Everything in nature should belong alike to all of her children, and when I see in what is claimed by the advocates of Spiritualism as belonging to nature, the slightest indication that it favors a few, to the exclusion of the many, I am constrained to believe therein is contained not a gift of nature, free to all, but instead tricks or delusions of some kind, by which the few manage, through the credulity of the many, to play upon their fears, hopes, or aspirations, whereby they are enabled to liv a life of ease at the expense of their deluded followers. We are well aware that such is theology, and if called upon to select its most fitting companion, I should be compelled to select Spiritualism as working side by side and shoulder to shoulder with theology. Do they not both deal alike in things undemonstrable, requiring much faith and credulity, and always through proxies, agents, or mediums?—in whose brains I believe is originated all there is to either.

Does not theology teach that the many shall stand aloof from a close investigation or examination of its methods and teachings, which are kept within a few mediums, or go-betweens, through whom the gods are supposed to deliver all messages and commands intended for the many. Please show me in what essential is your Spiritualism different, if you substitute "spirits" for gods. To put my inquiries into definit shape I will propound a few questions.

1st. Do not the majority—say three-fourths, seven-eights, or, probably, ninety-nine one-hundredths—of the Spiritualists, depend upon certain others, termed "mediums," for whatever information is claimed to come to them from the spirit world?

2d. Does the spirit, without the intercession or intervention of any person or thing, communicate directly to the ultimate object?

3rd. Do spirits communicate at any time or place? or,

4th. Is it a fact that in order to communicate with the departed spirits, there are certain conditions only under which such operations or performances can possibly take place, and that all such proceedings avoid the light and free open inspection during the transaction of or preparation for such spiritual manifestations?

5th. Is it possible for a nothing, without organism, no brain or anything else going toward making up the necessary organs of intelligence, to communicate with the human family, whose only source of information, as far as I know, is that of speech and intelligence?

When spiritual manifestations can be as successfully performed in open daylight, in the broad glare of noon-day sun, upon the street corners or upon the mountain top, without any preparation, and by anybody and everybody who wishes to speak to a departed friend, I believe that then I could, without any hesitation, conclude that there was no jugglery or deception about it. Or should I, by death, lose a child that I had loved and caressed from its infancy —who had confided to me its simple joys, its sorrows, its hopes, and its loves in its loving and winning ways, causing our natures to blend and mingle in unison and pleasure, becoming so interwoven that we were almost one in spirit and thought—and should its poor, lonely spirit go wandering about in that strange spirit-land you speak of, seeking the absent companionship—almost a part of itself—with that tender yearning for the absent which none can realize until the parting comes; if then our spirits, almost heart-broken with grief, could commune one with the other, giv and receive messages of love as in times past, then, indeed, would your spirit life be a boon worth the seeking; but they tell us this cannot be, that the loving words must come from the lips of a stranger and not from those so dear to us—dispelling all the bright dreams of hope that the heart had pictured of the re-union. A message may come, kind and loving in words, but do we know that the spirit of our loved one is there? Without faith—the theologian's watchword—we cannot believe that that loving spirit is so near and yet insensible to the yearnings of our heart to meet as we did in the flesh. It must, therefore, be all a trick, a piece of deception to obtain money, and at the same time keep up the delusion that others may join the ranks and thereby help to swell the "pay roll" of the mediums—the masters of the situation.

Go among the eastern jugglers and you will see performances just as marvelous and incomprehensible to us as are the presentations of Spiritualists. The only difference that I can perceive is that one class claims to deceive the looker on, while the other maintains that its teachings are true and open to demonstration, but if they were ever demonstrated I must hav been out "prospecting" and missed it.

Admitting that I know but little about Spiritualism, I am compelled to admit, also, that outside of it are thousands of things which we are unable to grasp and which are just as mysterious and incomprehensible to the mind of the ignorant as are those belonging to Spiritualism. Are we therefore, like the earlier races of mankind, still expected to place a god or spirit behind every leaf that moves, or assign a supernatural agency to things which our minds are not able to comprehend. You quote names of those who believed in Spiritualism, as though that should cause it to be more readly considered and believed. Because Prof. This or Judge That says this or that doctrin or belief is right, does not prove it to be so. Many just as bright minds and profound thinkers as they hav been proven wrong by later investigations. The authority of the brightest minds of the age will not make what is false truth, nor a truth false, should they repeat it a thousand times ten thousand.

You ask Mr. Winter "if the life of the child could be produced from nothing." Yankee-like, I will answer this question by asking another. Hav you not, from a tiny spark, often seen a fire a thousand times as large spring up. I might ask, Where did the addition of fire come from, or where does it go when extinguished? I admit, I am not posted upon such matters, but from a common sense view they appear to me parallel cases. I might go further with the comparison and say fire may from some cause be extinguished before the article which givs it life or vitality is consumed, the same as a person is liable to die before old age is reached. Or fire may cease to liv for want of material to support it, so life will quietly pass away and cease to exist when the functions of the body cease to sustain it. As I before remarked, I am after information, and anything you can advance in support and proof of your belief will be accepted in the same spirit in which it is given. It does seem to me that anything represented as belonging to nature in order to hav the stamp of truth upon it should be equally free and enjoyed by all of her children, scattered ever so widely over the face of the earth.

D. D. LAKE.

Since writing the above THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 5th, is received, in which Thos. Winter hits Spiritism some hard knocks and in fewer words advances much more solid and convincing arguments than I can; but then, we are not all born good and forcible writers. If I am unable to put my ideas in such good shape as he, I can at least agree with him and his method of saying what he thinks and calling things by their proper names. D. D. L.

"A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD" is the title of a neat pamphlet which fully exposes a fabricated account of a scene at the deathbed of Thomas Paine. For persistency in lying about Paine's death, Catholics and Protestants vie with each other. It was the doctrin that "the end justifies the means" which caused these holy lies to be told, and from the fact that most Christians will not read both sides they are still reiterated. Published by THE TRUTH SEEKER, N. Y.—The Agnostic.

WE hav been presented with a specimen of the Kerner Stylographic Pen, advertised in another column. It is a neat little article, about five and one-half inches in length and three-eighths of an inch in diameter. The stock holds something like a teaspoonful of ink. Once filled by means of the accompanying syringe for that purpose, one may write with it until tired without recourse to the bottle, and the pen will still be in a condition to continue the exercise. A cap over the end protects the point and makes the pen as convenient as a pencil to carry in the pocket. If every pen writes as well as the one in our possession, selected at random from among a dozen, the Kerner Pen is the best of the kind we hav seen.

The New Church Doctrin.

There's come a sing'lar doctrin, Sue,
Into our church to-day;
These cur'us words are what the new
Young preacher had to say:
That literal everlastin' fire
Was mostly in our eye;
That sinners dead, if they desire,
Can get another try;
He doubted if a warmer clime
Than this world could be proved;
The little snip—I fear some time
He'll get his doubts removed.

I've watched my duty, straight an' true,
An' tried to do it well;
Part of the time kept he aven in view,
An' part steered clear o' hell.
An' now half of this work is naught,
If I must list to him,
An' this 'ere devil I hav fought
Was only just a whim;
Vain are the dangers I hav braved,
The sacrifice they cost;
For what fun is it to be saved,
If no one else is lost?

Just think!—Suppose, when once I view
The heaven I've toiled to win,
A lot of unsaved sinners, too,
Comes walkin' grandly in!
An' acts to home, same as if they
Had read their titles clear,
An' looks at me, as if to say,
"We're glad to see you here!"
As if to say, "While you hav b'en
So fast to toe the mark,
We waited till it rained, an' then
Got tic kets for the ark!"

Yet there would be some in that crowd
I'd rather like to see:
My boy Jack—it must be allowed,
There was no worse than he!
I've always felt somewhat to blame,
In several different ways,
That he lay down on thorns o' shame
To end his boyhood days;
An' I'd be willin' to endure,
If that the Lord thought best,
A minute's quite hot temperature,
To clasp him to my breast.

Old Captain Barnes was evil's son—
With heterodoxy crammed;
I used to think he'd be the one
If any one was damned;
Still, when I saw a lot o' poor,
That he had clothed and fed,
Cry desolately round his door
As soon as he was dead,
There came a thought I couldn't control.
That in some neutral land,
I'd like to meet that scorched-up soul,
An' shake it by the hand.

Poor Jennie Willis, with a cry
Of hopeless, sad distress,
Sank sudden down, one night to die,
All in her ball-room dress;
She had a precious little while
To pack up an' away;
She even left her sweet good smile—
'Twas on the face next day;
Her soul went off unclothed by even
One stitch of saving grace;
How could she hope to go to heaven,
An' start from such a place?

But once, when I lay sick an' weak,
She came, and begged to stay;
She kissed my faded, wrinkled cheek—
She soothed my pain away;
She brought me sweet bouquets of flowers
As fresh as her young heart—
Through many long and tedious hours
She played a Christian part;
An' ere I lying will stand aroun'
The singin' saints among,
I'll try to take some water down,
To cool poor Jennie's tongue.

But tears can never quench my creed,
Nor smooth God's righteous frown,
Though all the preachers learn to read
Their Bibles upside down.
I hold mine right side up with care
To shield my eyes from sin,
An' coax the Lord with daily prayer
To call poor wanderers in;
But if the sinners won't draw nigh,
An' take salvation's plan,
I'll hav to stand an' see 'em try
To dodge hell if they can.

Praise for "John's Way."

I hav been reading Elmina's "John's Way" to several persons. All of them are difficult to please. A very critical lady says: "The work is excellent."

But I want to record in your pages the opinion of an author who has a national reputation. He is a religious man. He moves among orthodox persons and societies. I am referring to William Hargraves, M.D., who is the author of "Our Wasted Resources," a prize volume on alcohol and science, and other works. This gentleman I persuaded to read "John's Way," and to giv me his estimate for publication. He has done so. In the following words Dr. Hargraves says: "'John's Way' is a good work. It is very able. Besides, it is so useful that I think it would do all parents good if they read and studied it. The mode of education that is described in the work is not only interesting but highly instructiv."

I induced a manufacturer in Philadelphia to read the work; also his wife. Both of them praised "John's Way."

I hope that these opinions will cause your readers to make the little story known to their friends. They need not be afraid to recommend it to earnest religious persons. Spreading such a work will tend to counteract the degrading dime novels. The book market is deluged with trash; we are surrounded by a flabby literature. The intellectual and moral condition is appalling to the conscious thinker. Agreeable stories like "John's Way" and "The Darwins" are elevating and instructiv.

Obediently yours, LIBERTY'S DISCIPLE.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

DR. FELLOWS

SHAPE OF HOPE

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove, Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Semiual Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

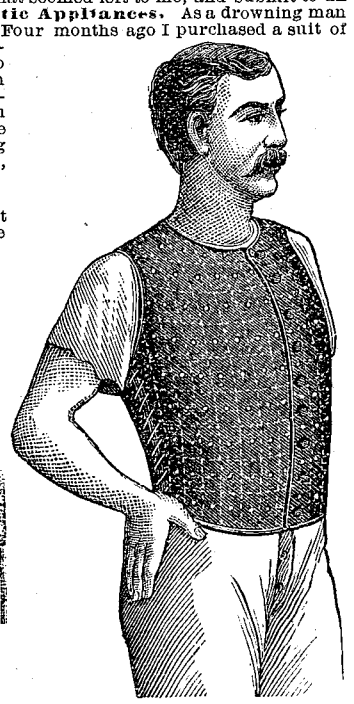
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire or food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

THE

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medcin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for a knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and hav been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. cannot find words to express my gratitude."

CHAS. E. TRASK, 304 Ingham st., Jackson, Mich., says: "Garments arrived, with letter of instructions. Hav worn them. They are benefiting me more in the past week than all the medicin I hav ever taken."

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

NO CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Gems of Thought.

BUT is there no evil in existence? Is everything good and lovely? Is there no wrong? There surely is wrong; there are evils; but they are not personages nor beings, any more than death, sin, life, truth, hope, charity, love, and many other similar qualities, which in poetry and figurativ language hav often been personified. None of these are personalities, none hav a local, circumscribed existence. They are principles, and hav a universal existence.——D. M. Bennett.

SEIZE upon truth, where'er 'tis found,
Among your friends, among your foes,
On Christian or on heathen ground,
The flower's divine where'er it grows;
Neglect the prickles, and assume the rose.
—Isaac Watts.

INSTEAD of a pure question of truth, Christianity has been made a question of sentiment, and the wishes of the heart hav mingled with the exercises of the understanding. Since, however, the inquiry is not about its character, but its truth, the philosopher will be careful to separate the exercises of the understanding from the tendencies of the fancy or the heart. He should be prepared to follow the light of evidence, though it may lead him to conclusions the most painful and melancholy. He should train his mind to all the hardihood of abstract and unfeeling interrigence.—Dr. Thomas Chalmers.

TRUTH ought to be the object of every man; for without truth there can be no real happiness to a thoughtful mind, nor any assurance of happiness hereafter. It is the duty of man to obtain all the knowledge he can, and then to make the best use of it.—Paine's Age of Reason.

[I wonder if Archbishop Lynch or the learned collector of the customs at Toronto could extract any "blasphemy" or "indecency" out of this deliverance of Paine. They are so clever and pious that they could "extract sunbeams out of cucumbers."—C. W. C.]
